I. DEFINITION—1. New Trial.—A new trial is a rehearing of the legal rights of the parties upon disputed facts before another jury, granted by the court on motion of the party dissatisfied with the result of the previous trial, upon a proper case being presented for the purpose.¹ The new trial may be based upon the same, dif-

1. 2 Bouv. L. Dict. 220; 4 Chitty's Gen. Prac. 30.

Other Definitions.—A new trial is a re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court, after a trial and decision by a jury, court, or referees. Civ. Code Cal., ch. 16, § 192; Civ. Code Dak., p. 84, art. 9, § 285; Civ. Code Wyo., § 2652; Code Iowa, ch. 9, § 2837; Compiled Laws Neb. 1885, § 314, p. 670; Rev. Stat. Ohio 1886, ch. 5, § 5305.

A new trial is a rehearing of the cause before another jury, but with as little prejudice to either party as if it had never been heard before. 3 Stephens Com. 626; 3 Bl. Com. 391; Gott v. Judge of Detroit Superior Court, 42 Mich. 625.

Origin of New Trials.—The granting of new trials seems to date back to early times, and the first case in which a new trial was granted on the evidence was the case of Wood v. Gunstan

ferent, or additional evidence.¹ It may be heard by the same or a different judge, but there must be an entirely different jury, and the fact that a juror had served on a former trial is a good ground for challenge.² New trials are favored by the courts when there is any question as to the correctness of the verdict.³

2. Venire de Novo.—A venire facias de novo, that is, a new writ of venire facias, will be awarded at common law, when, by reason of some irregularity or defect in the proceedings on the first venire, or the trial, the proper effect of that writ has been frustrated, or the verdict become void in law; as, for example, where the jury has been improperly chosen, or given an uncertain or ambiguous or defective verdict. The consequence and object of a new venire are, of course, to obtain a new trial; and accordingly this proceeding is, in substance, the same with a motion for a new trial. Where, however, the unsuccessful party objects to the verdict, in respect of some irregularity or error in the practical course of proceeding, rather than on the merits, the form of the application is a motion for a venire de novo, and not for a new trial.⁴ The motion for a venire de novo must not be confounded with the motion for a new trial. The essential difference is that a venire de novo is never granted except for causes appearing on the record, while a new trial is obtained for extrinsic reasons not appearing on the record. The venire de novo is an ancient process of the common law. The propriety of granting it is determined upon principles of law, allowing no discretion to the court. It affords the proper remedy where it appears from the record that the jury was improperly selected or returned, or a (1665), Styles Rep. 462, 466. See also Bayley v. Boorne, 1 Strange 392; Hilliard on New Trials (2nd ed.) 4; 2 Tidd's Prac. 904. However, Sellon says: It is not true that no new trials were granted before 1665, as has been said in Styles 466. The reason why this cannot be traced farther back is, "that the old report books do not give any accounts of determinations made by the court upon motions." 1 Sellon's Prac. 494 (1st Amer. ed.).

In the case of Witham v. Lewis, 1 Wils. 55 (1744), LORD CHIEF JUSTICE WILLES, in defining the difference between venire facias de novo and the motion for a new trial, says: "They agree in this, that a venire facias de novo must be awarded in both, and that the court may or may not grant either of them; but they differ, first, in this, that a venire facias de novo is the ancient proceeding of the common law—a new trial is only a new invention. The first is as ancient as the law, when attainments were in use; but motions for new trials were introduced in this manner: the judgment in attainment was very severe and the punishment excessively hard, and therefore to avoid that severity it was thought better to proceed in a milder way, and so motions for new trials were introduced." See also 3 Bl. Com. 404; 3 Bouv. Inst. 502, note b; 1 Sellon's Prac. 494 (1st Am. ed.).

challenge was improperly disallowed.¹ Or where, upon its face, the verdict is so imperfect that the merits of the cause are not disclosed, and, therefore, no judgment can be rendered upon the verdict; or where it appears that the jury should have found other facts differently.² In practice, a venire de novo originates more frequently from a special verdict than from a general verdict, yet, if there are two or more issues of fact, and the verdict does not respond to all, the case is one for a venire de novo, though the verdict is general.³

II. GENERAL PRINCIPLES GOVERNING THE RIGHT TO A NEW TRIAL; GROUNDS FOR A NEW TRIAL, ERRORS OF COURT.—A motion for a new trial is addressed to the court which tried the cause; and is an appeal to the equitable discretion of the court to prevent a palpable and material wrong. The motion, therefore, is never to be granted if the court conceives that the substantial legal justice of the case has been reached, notwithstanding irregularities may have occurred; nor is it to be granted where the failure of justice has not been palpable; nor where the wrong done, however palpable it may be, is trivial in extent. The court does not exercise a power of appeal from the jury, but interposes its equitable authority to prevent the jury from inflicting by their verdict a gross, material, and palpable wrong.⁴ The principal grounds on

2. As, for example, if, in trover, the jury found that the goods belonged to the plaintiff, and were demanded by him of the defendant, who refused to deliver them, a venire de novo should issue, for the reason that the jury have found only the evidence of a fact which they themselves should have determined—namely, a conversion to the defendant's use, for a demand and refusal are only evidence of a conversion, and the fact of the conversion should have been found. Witham v. Earl of Derby, 1 Wils. 56.

Upon a rule to show cause why a new trial should not be granted, if the judges are divided in opinion as to granting a new trial, the rule must be discharged. Lanning v. London, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 332; Goddard v. Coffin, Dav. 381; Lehre v. Murry, 2 Brev. (S. Car.) 19; Colony v. Hathaway, 1 Tyler (Vt.) 281.

A court is not bound to grant a new trial, although both parties desire it. Aiken v. Bruen, 21 Ind. 137; Phelan v. Ruiz, 15 Cal. 90; Nichols v. Sixth Ave. R. Co., 10 Bosw. (N. Y.) 260.

In a civil suit, brought to recover a penalty, the court has full power to grant a new trial, although the verdict was in favor of the defendant. United States v. Halberstadt, Gilpin (U. S.) 262.

It is within the discretion of the trial judge to grant or refuse a new trial in an action tried before a jury, where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence. Tide Land Reclamation Co. v. Cunningham, 71 Cal. 221.

A new trial will not be granted to enable the party to avail himself of a legal defence, where it is inequitable, and substantial justice has been done. M'Connell v. Strong, 11 Vt. 280.

Where the defendant must finally prevail, a new trial will be granted, though the judgment below was for the plaintiff, and he appealed. Mordecai v. Parker, 3 Dev. L. (N. Car.) 425.

which new trials have been granted are that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, or unsupported by the weight of evidence, that since the trial new evidence has been discovered, which was not attainable at the first trial; that the damages given by the jury are excessive or clearly inadequate; that at the trial there was surprise or mistake; that there was misbehavior on the part of the jury, or that the jury was grossly mistaken as to its duty;¹ that the successful party was guilty of some fraud or misconduct; or that the court, in the conduct of the trial, erred in admitting or rejecting evidence,²

The particular evidence received or excluded must be shown, that the supreme court may determine whether or not error has been committed. McClain v. Jessup, 76 Ind. 120; Whittier v. Collins, 15 R. I. 90.

The court below ruled out certain evidence offered by the defendant, and he moved for a new trial. The plaintiff claimed that he had made such admissions on the trial that the exclusion of the evidence had done him no harm. Held, that it must appear clearly in such a case that no harm has been done by the ruling, and that the admission must have covered all that was important in the evidence rejected. Richmond v. Stahle, 48 Conn. 22.

If the evidence excluded would not have changed the result of the trial had it been admitted, no error is committed. Cogan v. Frisby, 36 Miss. 178; Bird v. State, 14 Ga. 43; *Bohr v. If the evidence excluded be only cumulative upon a question already fully proven, there is no ground for a new trial. Park Bank v. Tilton, 15 Abb. (N. Y.) Pr. 384; Drake v. Surget, 36 Miss. 458; Litchfield v. Londonderry, 39 N. H. 247. Compare Dasset v. Miller, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 72.

If the verdict is not contrary to the law and evidence, the exclusion of irrelevant testimony is not error unless the jury has been misled by it. Arch-

The rejection of a deposition which is unimportant and has little or no bearing upon the issues involved, is not of itself alone a good ground for the granting a new trial. Hill v. Meyers, 43 Pa. St. 170; Kimberlin v. Faris, 5 Dana (Ky.) 533.

If no objection is made to the asking of leading questions or the proving by parol of the contents of writings, without showing them to be lost or inaccessible, the admission of such evidence and allowance of such questions will not furnish a ground for a new trial. Cotton States L. Ins. Co. v. Edwards, 74 Ga. 220. See also Starne v. Farr, 17 Ill. App. 491.

Where the court is in doubt as to the remedy, the admission of illegal evidence in favor of the prevailing party, a new trial should by all means be granted. Neal v. Simmons, 8 S. E. Rep. 432.

A new trial was allowed where an unauthenticated telegram was admitted in evidence. Adams v. Mille Lacs Lumber Co., 32 Minn. 216.

If the decision of the court in excluding evidence is correct when given, no testimony subsequently introduced will render it erroneous. Depuy v. Williams, 26 Cal. 309.

Where the party offering material testimony fails to disclose to the court the object for which it is offered, and it is rejected for irrelevancy, he will not afterwards be granted a new trial by showing that such evidence could have been used for a purpose material to the issue. Barksdale v. Toomer, 2 Bailey (S. Car.) 180.

It must be shown that the excluded testimony would elucidate some issue made, and was legally admissible for that purpose. Patterson v. Ramspeck, (Ga.) 10 S. E. Rep. 390.

When the record does not contain all the evidence, and it appears that improper evidence was admitted, a new trial will be awarded. Fowler v. Woodward, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 606.

The admission, in rebuttal, of evidence which impeached no one, and was without any significance, is an immaterial error. Krueger v. City of Merrill, 66 Wis. 28.

The admission of illegal evidence, if objected to, though under an offer of connecting it with other proof that would render it competent, and, though charged out of the case by the court, is a cause for setting aside a verdict, unless the court is able to say affirmatively that it worked no injury to the adverse party. State v. Meader, 54 Vt. 126; State v. Meader, 54 Vt. 651; Mussey v. Mussey, 68 Me. 346.

A judgment rendered after trial without the intervention of a jury will not be reversed because improper evidence was heard by the judge. Lindsay v. Jaffray, 55 Tex. 626.

The best evidence of which a case in its nature is susceptible must be produced. When incompetent testimony is permitted to go to a jury, which may have influenced their verdict, the verdict will be set aside. Crane v. Andrews, 6 Col. 353; Rooney v. Milwaukee Chair Co., 65 Wis. 397; Yankton Co. v. Rossteuscher, 1 Dak. Ter. 125.

But if hearsay evidence is admitted and the same facts are proven during the trial by competent testimony, a new trial will not be granted. Wardlaw v. Rayford, 27 S. Car. 178.

But if the hearsay evidence may have contributed to the result, a new trial will be allowed. White v. Rayburn, 11 Oreg. 450.

If incompetent and immaterial evidence is admitted under promise of counsel to follow it up with other evidence, which he failed to do, a new trial should be granted. Hudson v. Feige, 7 West. Rep. 343.

Where, in an action against sureties, the execution of a bond of a bank cashier and the reliance of the bank upon such security were in issue, the reception, after objection for inadmissibility, of immaterial or irrelevant evidence which is not calculated to mislead the jury, does not afford sufficient ground to set aside the verdict. People's Nat. Bank v. McKethan, 84 N. Car. 582; May v. Gentry, 4 Bev. & Bat. 117.

In an action for the conversion of personal property, attached upon a writ in favor of the defendant and against one D, the plaintiff offered evidence tending to show that the property was sold and delivered to him by D before the attachment. The defendant contended that the sale, if made, was fraudulent as against D's creditors. The plaintiff testified that, after the sale to him, he kept the property in a place hired by, and paid rent therefor, both before and after the attachment; and he was allowed to put in evidence the receipt taken by him for such payment. Held, that the admission in evidence of the receipt, although the evidence was immaterial, was not sufficient ground for a new trial. McAvoy v. Wright, 137 Mass. 207; McAvoy v. Drew, 137 Mass. 207.

If the illegal evidence is only cumulative, and there has been positive evidence upon the point, the admission of such evidence is not generally ground for a new trial. McLendon v. Frost, 57 Ga. 448; Lindsay v. Jaffray, 55 Tex. 626; Ritter v. Schenk, 101 Ill. 387.

If the immaterial evidence has a tendency to prejudice the minds of the jurors, a new trial will be granted. Ellis v. Short, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 142. See also Buddington v. Shearer, 22 Pick. Or if it have a tendency to mislead the jury, a new trial should be granted. Simpson v. Armstrong, 20 Neb. 512.

If the chances are equal that irrelevant testimony may have had an injurious tendency on a jury, a new trial will be granted. Farmers Bank v. Whinfield, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 419.

If the credibility of a witness may have been affected by the admission of irrelevant and immaterial testimony, such error should be considered good ground for a new trial. Batten v. Healey, 36 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 346.

When the irrelevant and immaterial evidence is admitted solely to remove a ground of prejudice caused by irrelevant testimony of the objecting party, its admission is proper. Wilson v. Hamden F. Ins. Co., 4 R. I. 159. See also Bank v. Woodward, 5 N. H. 301.

In order that the verdict shall be set aside for the admission of irrelevant or immaterial evidence it must appear that the party complaining has been prejudiced. *Landon v. Certain evidence was produced upon the trial against the defendant charged with murder in the first degree, tending to impeach the wife of the defendant, who had testified in his behalf; thereupon the defendant asked the court to withdraw from the jury the evidence, upon the ground that no sufficient foundation had been laid therefor and because it was irrelevant and incompetent. The court overruled the motion, and the defendant excepted. Soon thereafter the court reconsidered its action, and of its own motion ruled out and took from the jury the evidence objected to. Held, that material error was committed thereby. State v. Fooks, 29 Kan. 425.

It has been held that the admission of illegal evidence is not cured by charging it out of the case. Hall v. Jones, 55 Vt. 297.

If the verdict is supported by unobjectionable evidence it will not be disturbed on the ground that illegal testimony was admitted. Sharp v. Johnson, 22 Ark. 79; *Zeigler v. An error in admitting the evidence of an incompetent witness on the hearing of a chancery case, is no ground of reversal when the record contains other evidence which is competent and sufficient to sustain the decree. In chancery cases, it will be presumed that the court disregarded incompetent evidence, on the hearing, especially where there is competent evidence on which to base its decree. *Ritter v. That one of the instructions to the jury is too broad when all the instructions taken together construe the law correctly, is not a ground for new trial. Childress v. Ford, 18 Miss. 25; Hodges v. Bales, 102 Ind. 494.

Instructions to the jury to disregard mischievous and improper testimony will not cure the error of allowing it to remain in the case until the close of the trial. For such error a new trial should be granted. Taylor v. Adams, 58 Mich. 187; Cumins v. Leighton, 9 Ill. App. 186.

Nor if the misdirection be in a matter that is immaterial to the issue. Maynor v. Lewis, 2 Ga. Dec. 205; Milton v. Blackshear, 8 Fla. 161; Holden v. Bloxum, 35 Miss. 381; *Eyser v. Where the instruction is in an irrelevant matter it must appear that the jury was not misled or the verdict will be set aside. Wright v. Clark, 34 Miss. 176; Baldwin v. Peek, 22 Tex. 708. Compare Done v. People, 5 Park Cr. (N. Y.) 364; Wheeler v. Arnold, 30 Mich. 303.

Where a case was tried and the charge erroneously given on the ground that a demand was necessary, and a demand was proven, a new trial for such error will not be granted. Mackabin v. Clarkson, 5 Minn. 247.

An erroneous charge as to the measure of damages will not affect the verdict, when, under the evidence, no damages can be recovered. Barnhart v. Sternberger, 68 Ga. 341. Or when the verdict is warranted by the evidence. Blewett v. Wyandotte etc. R. Co., 72 Mo. 583. See also Conillard v. Duncan, 6 Allen (Mass.) 440.

Where the court failed to instruct the jury that the plaintiff was entitled to some damages, and although she was entitled to nominal damages a verdict for the defendant will not be set aside. Elwell v. Bradham, 2 Spears (S. Car.) 168.

So, too, if justice has been done by the verdict, and the court can see that a new trial ought to produce the same result. Attington v. Cherry, 10 Ga. 429; Sheldon v. School District, 24 Conn. 88; Boyd v. State, 17 Ga. 194; Duckett v. Grider, 11 B. Mon. (Ky.) 188; Noyes v. Shepherd, 30 Me. 173; Brantley v. Carter, 26 Miss. 282; Hanna v. Hill, 3 Utah 157; Board of Supervisors v. People, 17 Ill. App. 49; Hewitt v. Jones, 72 Ill. 218.

Or, if an erroneous charge has been disregarded by the jury and a right verdict given, a new trial will not be granted. Tilman v. Stringer, 26 Ga. 171; Myrick v. Hicks, 15 Ga. 155; Vanuxen v. Rose, 7 Ind. 222; Cameron v. Watson, 40 Miss. 191; Matter of Pratte, 12 Mo. 194; Twigg v. Potts, 1 C. M. & R. 89; Blewett v. Wyandotte etc. R. Co., 72 Mo. 583.

A new trial will not be granted for erroneous charges as to the measure of damages when the jury evidently did not act upon them. Baltimore & C. R. Co. v. Pumphrey, 59 Md. 390.

An erroneous instruction as to the measure of damages is cured by a remittitur by the plaintiff of all the damages awarded him. Stone v. Burrett, 34 Mo. App. 15.

But, if upon consideration of the charge as a whole it appear that the jury were misled thereby, a new trial will be granted; otherwise not. Springdale etc. Assoc. v. Smith, 24 Ill. 480; Younge v. Pacific etc. S. S. Co., 1 Call (Va.) 353; Carrington v. Pacific etc. Co., 1 Cal. 475; Clark v. McElsoy, 11 Cal. 154; Smith v. Carr, 16 Conn. 450; Brown v. Graham, 24 Ill. 628; Adams v. Nantucket, 11 Allen (Mass.) 203; Holdane v. Butterworth, 5 Bosw. (N. Y.) 1; Chandler v. Fulton, 10 Tex. 2; Hubby v. Stokes, 22 Tex. 217; Sherman v. Champlain Transp. Co., 31 Vt. 162; Zimmerman v. Knox, 34 Kan. 245.

However, it has been held that even if the jury may have been influenced by an erroneous instruction a new trial should be granted. Buglies v. Davis, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 206; Lane v. Crombie, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 177; Boyden v. Moore, 5 Mass. 365; Dudley v. Sumner, 5 Mass. 438; Hoyte v. Dimon, 5 Day (Conn.) 479; West v. Anderson, 9 Conn. 107; Doe v. Paine, 4 Hawks (N. Car.) 64; Christman v. Gregory, 4 B. Mon. (Ky.) 474; Weber v. Kingsland, 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 415; Brazier v. Clapp, 5 Mass.

Want of precision in charging the jury where there is no reason to believe that they were misled is no ground for a new trial. Dunbar v. Briggs, 13 Neb. 332; State v. Miller, 35 Kan. 328; Cinrad v. Kinzes, 105 Ind. 281; Farnham v. Thompson, 32 Minn. 22; Malone v. Searight, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 91; West v. Wheatley, 59 Ga. 559.

But when a material instruction is not only inaccurate but meaningless a new trial may be granted. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Pike, 12 Ill. App. 506; King v. Ward, 74 Me. 349.

An instruction to a jury stated that the weight of evidence does necessarily consist in the number of witnesses, the word "not" being inadvertently omitted. Held to be ground for a new trial. Illinois Central v. Zang, 10 Ill. App. 594.

A charge to the jury should be construed as a whole. Thus, where a portion of it is complained of, which, standing alone, would bear a construction that might mislead the jury, the objection will not be sustained when, considered with the rest of the charge, the jury would not be likely to put such a construction upon it, or to be misled by it. Daniels v. Clegg, 28 Mich. 32; Welch v. Ware, 32 Mich. 77; Gneuler

v. C. Lowing, 35 Mich. 63; Russel v. Phelps, 42 Mich. 377; Grand Rapids etc. Co. v. Cameron, 45 Mich. 451; Castle v. Bullard, 23 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 172; Childress v. Ford, 10 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 25; Walker v. Collier, 37 Ill. 362; Murphy v. People, 37 Ill. 447; Hamilton v. State Bank, 22 Iowa 306; State v. Miller, 35 Kan. 328.

If the charges have a tendency to mislead the jury, a new trial will be granted. Benhard v. Cary, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 83; Potts v. House, 6 Ga. 324; Hastings v. Baugerhouse, 18 Me. 436; Moffit v. Cressler, 8 Iowa 122; Taylor v. Morrison, 26 Ala. 728; People v. Reynolds, 2 Mich. 422; Smith v. Evans, 13 Neb. 314; Fairfield v. Rogers, 32 Minn. 269.

A charge of the court to the jury which in effect wholly ignores the testimony of the defendant, is erroneous, and affords grounds for a new trial. Brown v. McCormick, 23 Mo. App. 181.

Where the instructions cannot be reconciled, and it is impossible to tell which set the jury followed, a new trial will be granted. Frederick v. Allgaier, 88 Mo. 598; Aguire v. Alexander, 58 Cal. 21; McCreery v. Everding, 44 Cal. 24; Wendell v. Moulton, 26 N. H. 41; Hemdon v. Henderson, 41 Miss. 584.

The giving of contradictory instructions for the plaintiff and defendant is a good ground for reversal. Staples v. Canton, 69 Mo. 592; Knowlton v. Fritz, 65 Ill. App. 217; Peden v. Chicago etc. R. Co., 73 Iowa 328. See also Aguire v. Alexander, 58 Cal. 21.

A new trial must be granted where a general verdict has been rendered upon a charge embracing an unsound theory, and where it is uncertain whether the error did or did not affect the result. Warner v. Beebe, 47 Mich. 435.

If the judge suggests an erroneous method of computing damages a new trial will be granted. He should not tell the jury by what method they are to compute damages. Sabine etc. R. Co. v. Brounsard, 69 Tex. 617. Or if he tells the jury that they may assess exemplary damages which in law are not allowable. Wentworth v. Blackman, 71 Iowa 255.

An instruction that the jury must determine the credibility of the witnesses "and that certain matters enumerating them are proper matters for the jury to consider in coming to a conclusion as to whom they will believe and whom they will not believe," does not invade the province of the jury and is not erroneous. Stanley v. Montgomery, 102 Ind. 102.

If the verdict is based upon an erroneous instruction, a new trial will be granted. Evans v. St. Paul Harvester Works, 63 Iowa 204.

A charge to the jury should not treat uncontradicted facts as open questions. Brewer v. Edson, 47 Mich. 91; Township of Medina v. Perkins, 48 Mich. 67; Seligman v. Ten Eyke, 49 Mich. 104.

An instruction which assumes the existence of disputed facts material to the issue, is erroneous. Duffield v. Delancey, 36 Ill. 258; Farmer v. Childs, 66 Ill. 544; Jamison v. Graham, 57 Ill. 94; Doyle v. Stevens, 4 Mich. 87, note 2. See also, Elliott v. Reynolds, 38 Kan. 274.

Where the court has instructed the jury under a misapprehension as to a material fact, a new trial should be allowed. Johnson v. Harth, 1 Bailey (S. Car.) 482; Jones v. McNeil, 1 Bailey (S. Car.) 235; Murden v. S. C. Ins. Co., 1 Mill. Const. (S. Car.) 200; Com. v. Taylor, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 184; State v. Richards, 72 Iowa 17.

If the court had misapprehended the meaning of the witness, and instructed the jury accordingly, a new trial should be allowed, although in the view of the court the difference is immaterial. Edwards v. Edwards, 4 Phila. (Pa.) 11. Compare Union Bank v. Sollar, 2 Strobb. (S. Car.) 390.

If the court has charged that there is no evidence where there is some, a new trial will be granted, though the instruction was disregarded. Fleming v. Marine Ins. Co., 4 Whart. (Pa.) 59; Gardner v. Pickett, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 186. See also Feige v. East Saginaw Bank, 58 Mich. 164.

A question submitted by the court to the jury, on which there is no evidence, will entitle the injured party to a new trial. Burnett v. Fulton, 1 Jones L. (N. Car.) 343; Fisher v. People, 20 Mich. 135; Purvis v. Coleman, 1 Bosw. (N. Y.) 321; Fisher v. Thiokell, 21 Mich. 1; Jones v. Eason, 2 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 331; Jacksonville Street R. Co. v. Chappell, 21 Fla. 175; Willis v. Oregon R. etc. Co., 11 Oreg. 257; Smith v. Evans, 13 Neb. 314; Bethune v. McCrary, 8 Ga. 114; Snow v. Wiggin, 19 Ill. App. 542; Lange v. Perley, 47 Mich. 352; Johnson v. McKee, 27 Mich. 470; Dodge v. Brown, 22 Mich. 446; Druse v. Wheeler, 26 Mich. 189; Gibson v. Webster, 44 Ill. 483; Tognine v. Hansen, 18 Nev.

61; Dunbier v. Day, 12 Neb. 596, and cases cited.

But if the jury could not have been misled by the instruction, a new trial will not be granted. Southern Oil Works v. Bickford, 14 Lea (Tenn.) 651.

And where the evidence of a material fact is only strong enough to raise a conjecture, it was error to submit it to the jury. Mathis v. Mathis, 3 Jones L. (N. Car.) 132.

But when there is any evidence, however slight, it is sufficient to sustain an instruction upon the hypothetical case it tends to prove. Chicago v. Scholton, 75 Ill. 468.

And if there is a total want of evidence upon any essential point, the jury should be so charged distinctly. Scripps v. Reilly, 38 Mich. 10.

A question rightly decided by the court, which should have been submitted to the jury, is not ground for a new trial. Greene v. Dingley, 24 Me. 131; Copeland v. Copeland, 28 Me. 525.

If the court instruct the jury that the plaintiff was bound to prove a fact which he was not bound to prove, and a verdict was found against the plaintiff, he will be entitled to a new trial. Hedley v. Harrison, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 481; French v. Sale, 63 Miss. 386; Stevens v. Brown, 14 Ill. App. 119.

An error of law in the charge of the court will be disregarded when the questions of fact on which the case depended were properly submitted to the jury. Stoddard v. Long Island R. Co., 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 180.

An erroneous charge of the court on a special matter will be disregarded when the jury properly found for the defendant on a plea in bar. Hayden v. Palmer, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 385.

For the court to assume that a material point has been proven upon which there is a conflict of testimony may be ground for a new trial. Paine v. Kohn, 14 Neb. 580; Willson v. Waltersville School District, 46 Conn. 400; Linscott v. Trask, 35 Me. 150; French v. Sale, 63 Miss. 386.

An instruction that assumes there is no evidence on a point on which there is some evidence, will entitle the injured party to a new trial. Feige v. East Saginaw Bank, 58 Mich. 164. Or that all the evidence tends to prove one contract when the testimony of the witnesses tends to prove three contracts. Chadwick v. Butter, 28 Mich. 349.

An instruction founded on nothing in the evidence is erroneous. Snow v.

It may be said generally that the grounds on which new trials may be granted are as various as are the circumstances of the various cases, and that a categorical enumeration of these grounds is impossible.¹ The principles applied by the courts in dealing with applications for new trials upon certain of the grounds afore-Wiggin, 19 Ill. App. 542; Tognine v. Hansen, 18 Nev. 61; Willis v. Oregon etc. Co. 11 Oreg. 450; Nelson v. Dutton, 51 Mich. 416; Jones v. Mathieson, 2 Dak. 523; Harrison v. Baker, 15 Neb. 43; Barker v. Justice, 41 Miss. 291; Mognaham v. Conver, 30 Mich. 135; Vandensen v. Cathcart, 43 Mich. 258; Maillet v. People, 42 Mich. 262; Sheller v. McKenney, 17 Ill. App. 185. But if it appear that the jury could not have been misled, the verdict will stand. Southern Oil Works v. Bickford, 14 Lea (Tenn.) 651.

An instruction that implies a right of recovery upon a case not made by the petition, is ground for a new trial. Eby v. St. Louis etc. R. Co., 77 Mo. 34.

An instruction upon an abstract proposition not relating to the case, especially if there be any tendency in it to mislead the jury, is erroneous. Slaughter v. Fowler, 44 Cal. 246; Hopkins v. Fowler, 39 Me. 368; Ross v. Garrison, 1 Dana (Ky.) 35; Sheller v. McKenney, 17 Ill. App. 185.

An erroneous instruction upon an abstract question of law not involved in the case is not a ground for a new trial. Reed v. McGreed, 5 Ohio 375; Jordan v. Jame, 5 Ohio 88; People v. Marble, 39 Mich. 309; Chadwick v. Butler, 28 Mich. 349.

Instructions which fail to direct the attention of the jury to the issues may afford ground for a new trial. Felsenthal v. Black, 8 Ill. App. 425; Lewis v. State, 4 Ohio 389; Van Hoesen v. Van Alstyne, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 75; Coleman v. Roberts, 1 Mo. 97; Adair v. Adair, 30 Ga. 102. But where additional instructions were not asked for, want of full instruction is not a good ground for a new trial. Blacketer v. House, 67 Ind. 414; Thompson v. Payne, 21 Tex. 621; Chiles v. Drake, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 146; Wright v. Boynton, 37 N. H. 9; Rodes v. Sherrod, 9 Ala. 63; Hooksett v. Amoskeag Co., 44 N. H. 105.

If instructions given to the jury, taken as a whole, express the law applicable to the case without material contradiction, the judgment will not be reversed because one instruction, if considered of itself, is capable of an application which would ignore a material question involved in the jury issues. Blanchard v. Jones, 101 Ind. 542.

See, on the general subject of instructions to juries, INSTRUCTIONS, 11 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law 236.

1. It may be ground for a new trial that an opportunity for cross-examination was refused. Petrie v. Lane, 58 Mich. 527; but not that the court allowed leading questions to be put to a witness, this being a matter within its discretion. Moran v. Abbey, 63 Cal. 56. Or that the court committed an injustice in limiting the number of witnesses on a certain issue. Ward v. Dick, 45 Conn. 235.

The dismissal of a case without a verdict, after testimony supporting the plaintiff's case has been submitted, is ground for a new trial. Smith v. Sioux City etc. R. Co., 15 Neb. 583; Pollock v. Wannamaker, 65 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 508.

An unintentional omission to send in to the jury an important instruction given by the court, with the others, is ground for a new trial. Hammond v. Foster, 4 Mont. 421.

Where a point not raised at the trial appears on the record and in the proceedings, and by them it also appears that no evidence touching it was produced, it may be a ground for a new trial. Slater v. Rawson, 1 Met. (Mass.) 453.

If there be sufficient certainty in the clerk's entry of the decree to support a declaration on a judgment on a summary proceeding, a new trial will not be granted for the irregularity of the clerk's entry. Gage v. Sartor, 2 Treadw. Const. S. Car. 247.

A new trial will be granted where judgment was rendered upon a point reserved, which did not appear upon the record. Dunett v. Barksdale, 2 Dev. L. (N. Car.) 251.

It is not a ground for a new trial that the court permitted the plaintiff, in an action of trover, to discontinue as to part of the co-defendants after verdict and judgment. Baldwin v. McKay, 41 Miss. 358.

The failure of the court to mark said, are discussed at length and applied in detail in other subdivisions of this article. Where the motion is founded on the error of the trial court in the conduct of the trial, a new trial is a matter of course, unless it is apparent that the error complained of did not and could not affect the verdict.¹ On an appeal, however, if error appears, it is presumed by the appellate court to have affected the verdict and to afford ground for reversal,

"given" instructions asked, which were in fact given, as required by statute, is not ground for a reversal of the judgment. Tobin v. People, 101 Ill. 121.

It is no ground for a new trial that the instructions given were lost after the trial. Porth v. Gilbert, 85 Mo. 125.

A new trial will not be granted for the purpose of discrediting a witness by showing contradictory testimony from his own deposition given at an early stage of the same cause—the deposition being on the files of the court, but accidentally omitted to be read. Keen v. Sprague, 3 Me. 77.

Nor on the ground that a witness, having testified that the character for truth of another witness was not good, admitted, on cross-examination, that at a former period he had declared that his character was good. Treat v. Browning, 4 Conn. 408.

Nor on motion of the defendant, because one of plaintiff's witnesses was examined without being sworn, where it does not sufficiently appear that the defendant himself and his attorney were ignorant of that fact before a verdict was returned. Riley v. Monohan, 26 Iowa 507.

Where objection was made to the competency of a witness, yet upon voir dire he was found qualified and sworn, and examined in chief without an exception being taken, or notice of intention to do so before the jury retired, it was held that this could not be relied upon as an objection in support of a motion to set aside the verdict and judgment and grant a new trial. Cunningham v. Porterfield, 2 W. Va. 447.

If a demurrer to evidence is erroneously sustained, the error may be reached by a motion for a new trial. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Goodrich, 38 Kan. 224. And so an erroneous refusal to discharge a jury during the trial. Evans v. Mengel, 3 Pa. St. 239. But it is held in Georgia that rulings on a trial duly excepted to do not afford ground for a motion for a new trial. Nicholls v. Popwell, 80 Ga. 604.

Nor is it ground for a new trial, that since the trial, the appellate court has changed its view of the law governing the case. Forstman v. Schulting, 38 Hun (N. Y.) 482.

That the trial court, instead of dismissing an action, ordered judgment for defendant for six cents nominal damages was held error without material prejudice and not ground for a new trial. Osborn v. Johnson, 35 Minn. 300; Gerbier v. Emery, 2 Washb. (U. S.) 413.

A new trial will not be granted in the Supreme Court of Michigan unless the protection of substantial rights requires it, if the case is such that on a new trial such damages only as are nominal and will not carry costs can be recovered. Lewis v. Flint etc. R. Co., 56 Mich. 638.

A new trial will not be granted because one of the parties was, on the motion of the other, excluded from hearing the testimony of some of the latter's witnesses, where no detriment to the excluded party is shown. Randolph v. McCain, 34 Ark. 606.

trial.¹ An abuse of discretion in granting or refusing an amend-

7 Blatchf. 536; Parshall v. Minneapolis etc. R. Co., 35 Fed. Rep. 649.

In Dwyer v. Brannon, 6 Mass. 330, the court said: "Whether the plea be good or bad is not now to be questioned on a motion for a new trial. The objection is on record and the plaintiff must seek her remedy by error if the plea is bad." So in Pearl v. Rawdin, 5 Day (Conn.) 244, it was decided that the insufficiency of the declaration was no ground for a motion for a new trial; and the court thought the point so clear that it refused to hear argument upon it, although it was stated that the question was brought up in that form by consent of parties. Again, in Minor v. Mead, 3 Conn. 289, it was held that an error apparent on the record could not be taken advantage of on a motion for a new trial. And so in Canterbury v. Bennett, 22 Conn. 623. Again in Tolland v. Willington, 26 Conn. 578, it was said that a motion for a new trial is the proper remedy for error in admitting or rejecting testimony, or in the charge of the judge to the jury, a motion in error for errors in the declaration, pleadings, and judgment.

To the same effect are Meyer v. M'Lean, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 510, where the court said: "By going to trial on the plea and notice, the plaintiff admitted the plea to be valid, as a general issue. The judge at nisi prius is not to decide on the pleadings; and he was right in admitting the evidence. This is an application for a new trial; but why should we award a new trial, if the plea be bad. A new trial is never granted for a defect in the pleadings. The plaintiff should have sought a different remedy." And so in White v. Spencer, 14 N. Y. 247 and Corning v. Corning, 6 N. Y. 97. Again in Barney v. Bliss, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 60, the court said: "The judge at the trial is never to decide on the pleadings; nor is a new trial ever granted for a defect in the pleadings (citing Meyer v. M'Lean, supra). If the pleadings are bad, it would be quite idle to award a new trial. In such case, the party, if he has any remedy, must seek it in another form."

The ruling of the court on a plea of abatement is not ground for a new trial. Bohanan v. State, 15 Neb. 209.

Failure to compel a party to answer interrogatories filed with the pleadings has been held no ground for new trial. Cates v. Thayer, 93 Ind. 156.

The overruling of a demurrer is not ground for a new trial. Gibson v. Carreker, 82 Ga. 46; City of Griffin v. Johnson, 84 Ga. 279; De Barry-Baya Merchants' Line v. Austin, 76 Ga. 306; Nicholls v. Popwell, 80 Ga. 604; Rogers v. Rogers, 78 Ga. 688; Perkins v. McDowell (Wyoming, 1890), 23 Pac. Rep. 71.

It is not a ground for a new trial, but for an assignment of error, that a part of a pleading has been erroneously stricken out. New Albany v. White, 100 Ind. 206.

It is no ground for a new trial, that a demurrer to a special plea was erroneously sustained, when the facts alleged in such plea might have been given in evidence under other pleas. Powell v. Asten, 36 Ala. 140; Bates v. Coe, 10 Conn. 280.

A new trial will be granted when the state of the pleadings was calculated to confuse the minds of the jury, and to make it impossible for them to render an intelligent verdict. Pearce v. Jordan, 9 Fla. 526.

It is ground for a new trial to strike out a plea on motion, unless it was improperly filed or was utterly frivolous. Marshall v. Hamilton, 41 Miss. 229.

In Vance v. Isbel, 13 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 371, it was held that a verdict should be set aside where the cause was submitted to the jury on the issues joined, without disposing of a demurrer to a plea.

In Calderwood v. Tevis, 23 Cal. 335, this was held not ground for a new trial, where objection was not made at the time of the trial.

A new trial will be granted after a trial on a general plea of non est factum, if the court, on demurrer, rejected a special plea which was good. Johnson v. Bank of U. S., 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 310.

That a feme sole defendant married pending the trial, and that the marriage was not suggested of record, nor the husband made a party, is no ground for a new trial. Phillips v. Stewart, 27 Ga. 402.

ment may afford ground for a new trial;¹ so may a refusal of the right to open and close;² an abuse of discretion in refusing a continuance,³ or a change of venue;⁴ or a defect in the issues, the defect being more than a mere irregularity.⁵ The death of the trial judge, without having settled the bill of exceptions, is ground for a new trial;⁶ or the going out of office of the trial judge before having made up the case on appeal.⁷ If the findings of a court, which has tried the case without a jury, are clearly against the weight of evidence, it may be ground for a new trial, as in the case of a verdict rendered under similar circumstances.⁸

the court should award a new trial. Hitchcock v. Haight, 7 Ill. 604.

Where the record shows that a good plea in bar has not been tried, the defendant can have a new trial. Dermott v. Wallack, 1 Black (U. S.) 96.

Where an office judgment was rendered against the defendant, in an action on the case, with a writ of enquiry, and afterwards, without any plea in the cause, the jury was sworn as if there was an issue, and a verdict was found for the defendant, it was held that the verdict should be set aside and a new trial ordered. *M'Million v. The requirement of N. Car. Code, § 395, that issues shall be made up and reduced to writing for submission to the jury, is mandatory, and if not complied with, a new trial should be granted. Bowen v. Whitaker, 92 N. Car. 367.

III. DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT IN GRANTING OR REFUSING NEW TRIAL.—It may be stated generally that, except where, under a statute, a party is entitled to a new trial as matter of right, as, in some States, in ejectment suits and actions involving questions of title to land,¹ and except in those cases where the motion for a new trial is founded on error of law, the motion is addressed to the discretion of the court.² This discretion is, of course, a judicial discretion,¹ and, if shown to have been abused, will be revised by the appellate court. As, however, the trial court has the better opportunity of passing upon the question, where the motion is founded on newly discovered evidence, surprise, misconduct of jurors, parties, or witnesses, that the verdict is against the evidence, or against the weight of evidence, or that the damages given are excessive or inadequate, the appellate court is

Where a case was submitted to the court without a jury and the court decided that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover on the proof given, and without entering judgment of record, continued the case and permitted the plaintiff to amend his petition, and at a subsequent term the cause was tried again, it was held that the action of the court was simply an exercise of the power to grant a new trial and would not be reviewed. *Simpson v. Where a recovery was had against a city for an injury to a passenger walking over a rough place in its sidewalk, the fact that the presiding judge, in the order overruling a motion for a new trial, stated that, "in his judgment the alleged injury was, or should not be an actionable defect, as to require the city to remedy such slight imperfections, would be to impose upon it an extraordinary degree of diligence; but as he had fully and fairly charged the jury as to the defect being actionable, and they, having found in favor of the plaintiff on that question, he felt that he should not disturb their verdict," did not render his refusal of a new trial an improper use of his discretion. *City of Atlanta v. If there is some evidence to support a verdict, the refusal of a new trial will not be disturbed by the supreme court. Turner v. Scott, 77 Ga. 270; Stevens v. Middlebrooks, 77 Ga. 81.

Where a verdict was given for $1,000 jointly against two joint trespassers, and afterwards most of the jury made affidavit that they had intended to render a verdict against the defendants for $500 each, a motion for a new trial on this ground was overruled, and the supreme court refused to interfere with the discretion of the trial court. Alexander v. Humber, 86 Ky. 565.

Under the statutes of Arkansas, the circuit court has discretion whether to receive a motion for a new trial, although filed after the prescribed time, and the supreme court would be slow to interfere with the discretion exercised; but where the circuit court considered the statute imperative, the supreme court may direct the trial court to use, but not how to use, its discretion. Gould v. Fatum, 21 Ark. 329; see also Hilliard v. Carr, 6 Ala. 557.

The discretion of the trial court in granting or refusing a new trial is made a matter for consideration for the general statement frequently made that the appellate court will not revise such exercise of discretion. The right of revision will be exercised more freely by the appellate court where the trial court has refused than where it has granted a new trial.¹

IV. MISCONDUCT AS REASON FOR NEW TRIAL.—1. Misconduct Defined.—Misconduct, as the term is used in connection with the subject under discussion, is any unlawful behavior by those entrusted in any degree with the administration of justice, by which the rights of the parties and the justice of the case may have been affected.² It need not be shown, necessarily, that the misconduct relied on as ground for a new trial actually controlled or determined the verdict, if it is made apparent that the verdict might have been affected by it.³

supreme court by statute. Augusta & Co. v. Wellbourn, 31 Ga. 365.

When the propriety of an order granting a new trial for excessive damages comes before an appellate court for review, the question is not precisely that presented to the trial court on the motion for the new trial, but rather whether it clearly appears that the trial court, in granting the order, abused its sound discretion in failing to exercise a sound, practical judgment upon all the relevant facts before it. Pratt v. Pioneer Press Co., 32 Minn. 47.

Where the jury, in action to condemn land for a street, brought in a verdict of $4,000 for the owner, when three of the latter's witnesses testified that the land was worth $7,000, and five of the city's witnesses testified that it was worth from $3,200 to $4,000, it was held that an order granting a new trial was no abuse of discretion. Allen v. Milwaukee, 72 Wis. 182.

3. Johnson v. Root, 2 Cliff. (U. S.) 108, 128.

In Com. v. Roby, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 496, where the ground for the motion in a criminal case was, that the jury received food and drink during their retirement, this, under the then existing state of the law, being unlawful,

SHAW, C. J., reviewed the authorities and declared that "It is not every irregularity which will render the verdict void and warrant a setting aside. This depends upon another and additional consideration, namely, whether the irregularity is of such a nature as to affect the impartiality, purity, and regularity of the verdict itself;" and cited as authority for this proposition, 21 Viner's Abr. 448, art. Trial; Rex v. Burdett, 2 Salk. 645; 2 Hale's P. C. 306; Hix v. Drury, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 302; Rex v. Kinnear, 2 B. & Ald. 462, where the jury separated without licence from the court, and it was held that though the jurors might be punishable, there was not a mistrial, and no ground for a motion for a new trial; and also Barnes 441; Duke of Richmond v. Wise, 1 Ventr. 125, where the fact of the jury having had wine, it not appearing to have been at the expense of the party, was held not to be a cause for a new trial; and Co. Litt. 227b, where it was said, if a juror eats or drinks at his own expense, before the jury have agreed, he is liable to be fined, but the verdict is good; and further said: "The result of the authorities is, that where there is an irregularity of the proceedings, as where meat and drink or other refreshment has been furnished by a party, or where the jury have been exposed to the effect of such influence, as where they have improperly separated themselves, or have had communications not authorized, there, inasmuch as there can be no certainty that the verdict has not been improperly influenced, the proper and appropriate mode of correction or relief is by undoing what is thus improperly and may have been corruptly done; or where the irregularity consists in doing

2. Misconduct of the Court—(a) GENERALLY.—Private communications between judge and jury constitute ground for a new trial, and it may be stated generally that the party moving for the new trial on this ground is not required to show affirmatively that the communications tended to his injury, the principle upon which the rule rests being that such communications are so dangerous and impolitic that it should be presumed conclusively that harm was done; but the source of danger is in the secret nature of the communications.¹ Intoxication of the judge during the progress of a trial is such misconduct as will entitle the defeated party to a that which may disqualify the jurors for proper deliberation and exercise of their reason and judgment, as where ardent spirits are introduced, there it would be proper to set aside the verdict, because no reliance can be placed upon its purity and correctness. But where the irregularity consists in doing that which does not and cannot affect the impartiality of the jury, or disqualify them for exercising the powers of reason and judgment, as where the act done is contrary to the ordinary forms, and to the duties which jurors owe to the public, the mode of correcting the irregularity is by animadversion upon the conduct of the jurors or of the officers, but such irregularity has no tendency to impair the respect due to such verdict."

The text proposition may be said, in short, to be elementary, and to be supported and assumed by a multitude of cases.

1. In Wiggins v. Downer, 67 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 65, the authorities are reviewed, and the rule stated in the text declared to result therefrom. Here the jury returned into court at the close of the evening session, when neither party was present in person or by counsel, and requested the court to repeat certain propositions which the jury had passed upon. In response to such request, the judge outlined the propositions as he had stated them previously in his charge. The attendance of counsel could not have been secured before the next morning, and the colloquy between court and counsel took place in open court. It was held that here was not such a communication as should vitiate the verdict.

In Thayer v. Van Vleet, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 111, it appeared that a justice's court jury sent for the justice after they had retired; that he went into their room, and, on being asked if they could add anything to the charge, replied

"no," and left them. It was held that no such abuse of justice was shown as required a new trial.

In Bunn v. Croul, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 239, it was held that a justice of the peace could not, in the absence of the parties, or without their consent, answer the question whether certain evidence had been given, the question having been asked by the jury after they had retired.

In Taylor v. Betsford, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 487, it was held that a justice of the peace could not, after the retirement of the jury, enter their room at their request, but apart from and without the consent of the parties to answer certain questions. In Benson v. Clark, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 258, it appeared that the justice, at the request of the jury, after their retirement, without the consent of the parties, entered the jury room, but refused to answer questions put to him and retired; but, after leaving, sent to them a certain paper for which they had sent an officer to him. Here it was held that both acts were irregular.

In Neil v. Abel, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 185, it was held error for the justice, without the consent of the parties, to permit the jury to use his minutes sent for by them.

In Plunkett v. Appleton, 51 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 469, a verdict was set aside because the judge, without the knowledge of counsel, sent written communications to the jury, answering questions of law addressed to him by the jury and sent to him by an officer.

Watertown Bank etc. Co. v. Mix, 51 N. Y. 559, may be referred to as an additional authority, though the point was not here squarely presented.

In Sargent v. Roberts, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 337, the court said: "We are all of the opinion, after considering the question maturely, that no communication whatever ought to take place be-new trial.¹ A trial judge must not allow needless and scandalous attacks upon the character of parties; this is such misconduct as will warrant setting aside the verdict.² A refusal to allow counsel for a party to argue the evidence before the jury is good ground for a new trial.³ Even the manner and deportment of the presiding tween the judge and the jury, after the cause has been committed to them by the charge of the court, unless in open court, and where practicable, in the presence of the counsel in the cause." Here the jury sent a written communication to the judge, stating that they could not agree, and the judge replied in writing.

There is a South Carolina case, Goldsmith v. Solomons, 2 Strobb. (S. Car.) 296, where it was held that the fact that the presiding judge answered an enquiry of the foreman which he came into court to make, and without communicating its purport to parties or counsel, afforded no ground for a new trial; and there are New Hampshire cases to the point that the court, in its discretion, may give written instructions to the jury upon questions of law at their request, after they have retired. Allen v. Aldrich, 29 N. H. 63; School Dis. v. Bragdon, 23 N. H. 517. And that this may be done in the absence of counsel. Shapely v. White, 6 N. H. 172; Basset v. Salisbury Co., 28 N. H. 438. It has been held in this State, however, that it is irregular to state the evidence in this way in the absence of counsel. Shapely v. White, 6 N. H. 172.

In Chinn v. Davis, 21 Mo. App. 363, it was held that though the judge should not communicate with the foreman of a jury in a whisper, after the case has been submitted, and without consent of counsel, yet that this was not ground for reversal, it being apparent that no harm was done.

"A judge has no more right to communicate with a jury after it has retired than any other person, and we must look upon his visit in this case in the same light that we would view the entry of any third person into the jury room while the jury was in consultation." Hoberg v. State, 3 Minn. 262.

And see also in support of the statement of the text, Henlow v. Leonard, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 200; State v. Alexander, 66 Mo. 148; United States v. Gilbert, 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 21; Church v. Hubbart, 2 Cranch (U. S.) 239, note; Douglass v. McAllister, 3 Cranch (U.

S.) 299; Brown v. Campbell, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 176; Shaeffer v. Landis, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 449.

It was held in Mahoney v. Decker, 18 Hun (N. Y.) 365, where, after the jury had retired, and in the absence of counsel, the court replied to a communication sent by the jury that there was no evidence upon a certain point, that the fact that counsel learned of the communication before the jury retired a second time and made no objection, constituted such a waiver of the irregularity as to make it right to refuse a new trial, especially as it appeared that in no event could he have been prejudiced by the communication. And see Rogers v. Moulthrop, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 274; Horton v. Horton, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 589.

Where, the defendant and his counsel, having left the court room after the retirement of the jury, the court, in their absence, gave to the jury, who could not agree on a question of fact, additional instructions, and caused to be read to them the phonographic report of certain testimony, it was held that the absence of the defendant and his counsel afforded no ground for a new trial. Alexander v. Gardiner, 14 R. I. 15.

1. "It would be better to submit questions in dispute to the arbitration of chance than to the decision of a tribunal which is not thoroughly upright and scrupulously fair as between litigants; and can it be said that an upright judge, a scrupulously fair man, one who appreciates the dignity of his office, can impartially determine the interests of litigants, and fairly administer the law, when in a state of intoxication? Such conduct on the part of a judge is not only reprehensible, but is indeed criminal." Repath v. Waker, 13 Colo. 109.

2. Rickabus v. Gott, 51 Mich. 227, where it was held ground for a new trial that hearsay and irrelevant testimony, which could have had no other object than to wound and disparage one of the parties, constituted a ground for a new trial.

judge may afford ground for a new trial, where it is such as must obviously have prejudiced the jury by its display of bias.¹

(b) REMARKS TO COUNSEL.—It is misconduct, for which a new trial will be granted, for the trial court to compliment one attorney at the expense of the other, or to use language which tends to bring an attorney into contempt before the jury,² or where the remarks of the court to counsel show an unfavorable opinion toward either party to the suit.³

(c) REMARKS TO JURY; COERCION OF JURY.—Language on the part of the court, the obvious tendency of which is to coerce an agreement on the part of the jury affords ground for a new trial. • To insist too strenuously upon the necessity of an agreement may have such effect.⁴ Any improper remark of the court in the

1. Wheeler v. Wallace, 53 Mich. 355, where COOLEY, C. J., after stating what took place upon the trial, said: "It is very unusual to have exception taken on writ of error to the manner and deportment of the trial judge in the conduct of the trial, and under ordinary circumstances a court of review would not scrutinize very closely his methods when no error in his rulings was alleged. Still, it is possible for a judge to deprive a party of a fair trial, even without intending to do so, by the manner in which he conducts the case, and by a plain exhibition to the jury of his own opinions in respect to the parties, or to their case."

In a seduction case, where the age of the parties was before the jury, it was held not error calling for a reversal that the court frequently alluded to the female (a woman of twenty-four) as a "girl." State v. Richards, 72 Iowa 17.

2. McDuff v. Detroit Evening Journal Co. (Mich., 1891), 47 N. W. 671; Wheeler v. Wallace, 53 Mich. 355. In the former case, to an objection made by defendant's attorney to the admission of evidence, the court said: "I don't want to compliment Mr. P. (plaintiff's attorney), but I am well aware of the fact that Mr. P. knows how to try a lawsuit." Held, to be improper language from the court.

It is no ground for reversal that the court said that the attorney was trifling with the court in asking for a continuance, the remark being justified by the facts. Krapp v. Hauer, 38 Kan. 430.

3. Cronkhite v. Dickerson, 51 Mich. 177; People v. Hare, 57 Mich. 505; Mittel v. Chicago, 9 Ill. App. 534; in the former of which cases the court said: "Jurors are very vigilant in scrutinizing all that is said by the trial judge in the progress of a cause before them, and great care should be observed that nothing is said which can by any possibility be construed to the prejudice of either party. Courts cannot be too circumspect in this regard."

4. In Green v. Telfair, 11 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 260, the court says: "A judge may also keep the jury together as long as in his judgment there is any reasonable prospect of their being able to agree; but beyond this I do not think he is at liberty to go. An attempt to influence the jury by referring to the time they are to be kept together, or the inconvenience to which they are to be subjected, in case they shall be so pertinacious as to adhere to their individual opinions and thus continue to disagree, cannot be justified. A judge has no right to threaten or intimidate a jury in order to affect their deliberations. I think he has no right even to allude to his own purposes as to the length of time they are to be kept together. There should be nothing in his intercourse with the jury having the least appearance of duress or coercion."

In this case the cause was submitted to the jury between 2 and 3 o'clock on Saturday afternoon, and was the last cause tried at the circuit. The jury, after being absent several hours, stated their inability to agree, and asked to be discharged. The trial judge, after adverting to the desirability of an agreement, said that in five years he had discharged but one jury for inability to agree, and sent the jury out again. One of the jurors said that he supposed that they would be discharged at midnight, but the court said "no;" that he was authorized to receive their verdict on Sunday; that he was going away by the next train, and that if they should not agree before he left he would return on Monday and receive the verdict. The verdict was returned in half an hour. It was held that it should be set aside. This case, though only a special term case, was cited with approval in Slater v. Mead (N.Y. Supreme Court), 53 How. Pr. (N.Y.) 57; but was disapproved in Erwin v. Hamilton (N.Y. Supreme Court), 50 How. Pr. (N.Y.) 32, in which latter case the facts were substantially similar; and was approved also in Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Moog, 81 Ala. 335. In support of the general rule may be cited Terre Haute etc. R. Co. v. Jackson, 81 Ind. 19; Obear v. Gray, 68 Ga. 182; Gholston v. Gholston, 31 Ga. 625; Furhman v. Mayor etc. of Huntsville, 64 Ala. 263; Spearman v. Wilson, 44 Ga. 473; People v. Olcott, 2 Johns. Cas. (N.Y.) 301; State v. Green, 7 La. An. 518; State v. Ladd, 10 La. An. 271; State v. Bybee, 17 Kan. 462; Spearman v. Wilson, 44 Ga. 473; Sickler v. Town of La Valle, 65 Wis. 572.

In Peirce v. Rehfuß, 35 Mich. 53, it appeared that the jury, after having been out five hours, announced their inability to agree, and were then instructed as to their duty in endeavoring to reconcile their views and arrive at a verdict, if consistent with their consciences, rather than that the parties should be put to the trouble and expense of trying the case again. It was urged that this language afforded ground for a new trial; but the appellate court held otherwise, and declared that the trial court, in thus instructing the jury, was but acting in the performance of a highly commendable duty. This holding, and the language thereof, were approved as correct in principle in Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Moog, 81 Ala. 335. To the same point, substantially, is Allen v. Woodson, 50 Ga. 53.

A new trial should be granted where the verdict was rendered shortly after the judge told the jury (which had been out all night) that they could have breakfast at their own expense, they having had no supper. Physioc v. Shea, 75 Ga. 466.

A jury reported its inability to agree. The judge said that this seemed to be too common, and that there ought to be an agreement; that he should not discharge them, but should keep them together for the remaining three weeks of the term unless they agreed. A verdict was returned the next day. It was held that it should be set aside. Chesapeake etc. R. Co. v. Barlow, 86 Tenn. 537.

Where the judge, without the knowledge of either party to a suit, sent word to the jury that if they did not agree he would keep them together for four days, it was held that a verdict would be set aside without proof that, but for the threat, it would not have been rendered. Terre Haute etc. R. Co. v. Jackson, 81 Ind. 19.

Bias of the Judge.—An exception to a charge on the ground that the manner in which the judge submitted the case, and his comments on the evidence, gave undue prominence to whatever would tell in the appellee's favor, and thereby unfairly prejudice the appellant's case, cannot have weight if the bias of the judge is not manifest in the charge, so that there is reason to believe the jury were improperly influenced, and the charge should be considered together and not merely by the passages. Merchants' Bank v. Örtmann, 48 Mich. 419.

Preliminary Remarks as to the Duty of Jurors Are Proper.—Thus, in an action against a town to recover damages for an injury sustained by reason of a defective highway, the trial judge, after twelve jurors of the regular panel were called and had taken their seats, and before they were sworn or the parties had exercised their right of challenge, said to them in substance that he had learned that in a similar case tried at that term some of the jurors had taken the ground that, no matter what the testimony or merits of the case might be, they would not find a verdict against a challenge for damages occasioned by a defective highway. He then reminded them of their duty and the obligation which their oath imposed to try and decide such cases according to the law and testimony adduced, regardless of their individual opinion as to the wisdom or justice of the law making towns liable in such cases, and told them that as jurors they had nothing whatever to do with the policy of the law, but were bound to administer it faithfully while it was in force. Held, that such remarks were proper, and furnished no ground for new trial. Sickler v. Town of La Valle, 65 Wis. 572. See also cases cited supra, and Mayor etc. of Columbus v. Goetchins, 7 Ga. 139.

Edens v. Hannibal etc. R. Co., 72 Mo. 212; Farnham v. Farnham, 73 Ill. 497; State v. Bybee, 17 Kan. 462. In this case the court say: "It may not be possible to single out any single sentence and say that this is, strictly speaking presence and hearing of the jury, liable to influence their action, is misconduct.¹

3. Misconduct of Counsel.—(a) IMPROPER REMARKS TO JURY.—The argument of counsel to the jury must be confined to the law and evidence.² The misconduct of counsel in argument, in order to warrant a reversal, must be of such a nature as to injure and taken by itself, erroneous, and sufficient to justify a reversal, though there are some that seem to trespass a good deal on the right and duty of each juror to the free exercise of his individual judgment. Yet the general impression of these instructions, as we read them and as it seems to us must have been received by the jury is, that the jury ought, by compromise and surrender of individual convictions, if necessary, to come to an agreement, and that a failure to do so would be an imputation upon both jury and court. Now, while a court may properly call attention of the jury to many matters which increase desirability of agreement, such as the time already taken, the improbability of securing additional testimony, the general public benefit, the speedy close of a litigation, and, at least in cases where the matters of State are of minor importance, the question of expense to the parties and the public, yet no juror should be influenced to a verdict by fear of personal disgrace or pecuniary injury. No juror should be induced to agree to a verdict by a fear that a failure to so agree would be regarded by the public as reflecting upon either his intelligence or his integrity. Personal considerations should never be permitted to influence his conclusion, and the thought of them should never be presented to him as a motive for action."

1. Skelly v. Boland, 78 Ill. 438; Wannack v. Mayor etc. of Macon, 53 Ga. 163; Hasbrouck v. Milwaukee, 21 Wis. 217; Hair v. Little, 28 Ala. 236; Cronkhite v. Dickerson, 51 Mich. 177; Moncallo v. State, 12 Tex. App. 171; Bowman v. State, 19 Neb. 523; Sarah v. State, 28 Ga. 576.

In charging the jury that they might give exemplary damages if the trespass was accompanied with circumstances of aggravation, the judge "playfully remarked, in the way of illustration, 'such damages as would teach the old gentleman not to violate the Sabbath, nor injure his health by riding in the night, nor interfere with the rights of others.'" Held, that the instructions were erroneous, because the remarks were calculated to make the jury believe that the judge thought the facts justified heavy exemplary damages. Hair v. Little, 28 Ala. 236.

A remark by a presiding judge on the trial of a case, that the proceeding was "a civil suit, but if the jury considered the evidence they would find it decidedly criminal," if excepted to and not withdrawn, is a reversible error. Furham v. Mayor etc. of Huntsville, 54 Ala. 263.

2. Campbell v. Maher, 105 Ind. 383; Tucker v. Henniker, 41 N. H. 318; Dickerson v. Burke, 25 Ga. 225; Cook v. Ritter, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 253; Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Cheever, 36 Ohio St. 201; Kinnaman v. Kinnaman, 71 Ind. 417; Cleveland Paper Co. v. Banks, 15 Neb. 20; Hall v. Wolff, 61 Iowa, 559; Huckell v. McCoy, 38 Kan. 53.

Where the defendant's attorney persisted in commenting upon the fact that the plaintiff had secured a change of venue, it was held that a new trial should be granted. Campbell v. Maher, 105 Ind. 383; Farman v. Lauman, 73 Ind. 568; Carter v. Carter, 101 Ind. 450.

So, too, where counsel referred to the fact that defendant failed to testify in a criminal case. Long v. State, 56 Ind. 182; Petite v. People, 8 Colo. 516; State v. Balch, 31 Kan. 465.

Allusions to the importance of the case to either party are to be guarded very closely. Gault v. Concord R. Co., 63 N. H. 356.

It is misconduct for which a new trial will be granted for counsel to read to the jury extracts from newspapers for the purpose of prejudicing the jury in favor of his client. Chicago etc. R. Co. v. Bragonier, 13 Ill. App. 467; Baldwin v. Bricker, 86 Ind. 221; Thomp. & M. on Juries, § 351.

A new trial will be granted where the counsel for one party, by fraudulent representations, deceived the other party and his counsel as to the correctness of a plat in an action of ejectment. Webb v. Parker, 41 Ga. 478.

the opposite party.¹ Counsel must not state as evidence, facts within his own knowledge, but which have not been proven on the trial.² When there has been an abuse of privilege by counsel

1. Shular v. State, 105 Ind. 289; Combs v. State, 75 Ind. 215; Morrison v. State, 76 Ind. 335; Epps v. State, 102 Ind. 539; Anderson v. State, 104 Ind. 467; *Railroad v. Where counsel has made an improper statement in argument, but, when interrupted by opposing counsel, has declared that there was no evidence in the case to sustain his statement, and that he only put it as a conjecture, it will not be presumed that the jury were prejudiced by such statement. Hinton v. Cream City R. Co., 65 Wis. 323.

In Chicago etc. R. Co. v. Sullivan (Ill., 1888), 17 N. E. Rep. 460, it was held that to say to a witness, "Remembering that you told us that you expected your expert fee in this case, I hope you won't charge the poor railroad company anything extra," did not require reversal. So in Festner v. Omaha etc. R. Co., 17 Neb. 280, an immaterial statement as to the price paid by the plaintiff for a house damaged by taking land for a right of way was held not prejudicial error sufficient to require a new trial.

In Miner v. Lorman, 66 Mich. 530, and Willis v. McNatt, 75 Tex. 69, it was held that remarks of counsel, though based on facts not in evidence, made in answer to that said by the opposing counsel, did not require a new trial.

In Enright v. Atlanta, 78 Ga. 288, it was held immaterial that the defendant's counsel, in the cross-examination, addressed the plaintiff familiarly. In Gulf etc. R. Co. v. Coon, 69 Tex. 730, an allusion by counsel to the fact that his client and himself had "fought shoulder to shoulder in the late war," was held immaterial. See also Goff v. Scott (Ind., 1890), 25 N. E. Rep. 906.

Where, however, in an action on a fire insurance policy, counsel for plaintiffs, in his concluding argument to the jury, said that the ancestry of plaintiffs was well known to counsel, and to every one else who had lived in the community with them; that their honor, integrity, honesty, and truthfulness, and that of their descendants, had never been called in question until this soulless corporation, defendant in the case, had charged one of their descendants with falsehood, fraud, and misrepresentation, it was held objectionable language. Commercial F. Ins. Co. v. Allen, 80 Ala. 571.

Again, where, in a suit against a railroad for injuries, plaintiff's counsel said to the jury, "You ought to deal severely with these bloated corporations, that can run their road right through a man's house or yard," and the court did not control him, and the jury found a verdict for plaintiff "for amount sued for" ($20,000), it was held that it was reasonably evident the jury were influenced by the improper language, and the court should have given a new trial. Galveston etc. R. Co. v. Cooper, 70 Tex. 67.

But it must clearly appear that the line of argument was unwarranted. Baltimore etc. R. Co. v. Boyd, 67 Md. 32; Miller v. Brown (Iowa, 1889), 42 N. W. Rep. 561. And see also on the general subject, Newton v. State, 21 Fla. 53; Angelo v. People, 96 Ill. 209; s. c., 36 Am. Rep. 132; Martin v. State, 63 Miss. 505; Laubach v. State, 12 Tex. 2. Brow v. State, 103 Ind. 133; Roeder v. Studt, 12 Mo. App. 566; Hall v. Wolff, 61 Iowa 559; People v. Dane, 59 Mich. 350; Gibson v. Zeibig, 24 Mo. App. 65. In Roeder v. Studt, 12 Mo. App. 566, the court say: "An advocate must not make himself a witness and state facts not in evidence to prejudice the jury. Such statements should be checked, and a severe reprimand administered in the presence of the jury to the attorney who is guilty of this violation of duty."

It is error for the court to allow counsel, against objection, to repeat and argue therefrom testimony that has been offered and excluded, nor is the error it is the duty of the court to stop the counsel or caution the jury against it in the charge.¹ And this, if done, may cure the error.² Language that tends to degrade and bring into contempt the character of the opposite party, when his character has not been impeached, should not be used.³ While the conduct of coun-cured by an instruction to disregard the testimony. Marble v. Walters, 19 Mo. App. 134. See also Reich v. Mayor etc. of N. Y., 12. Daly (N. Y.) 72; Mitchum v. State, 11 Ga. 615; *Tucker v. Misstatement of evidence by counsel is such misconduct as will entitle the injured party to a new trial. Bradshaw v. State, 19 Neb. 147; Bullard v. Boston etc. R. Co., 64 N. H. 27; Thompson v. Barkley, 27 Pa. St. 263; Berry v. State, 10 Ga. 511.

However, it has been held that an erroneous statement of the testimony by counsel is not a good ground for a new trial. People v. Barnhart, 59 Cal. 402; People v. Lee Ah Yute, 60 Cal. 95.

When the evidence is conflicting, counsel has a right to assume that the facts testified to by his witnesses were proven. Hatcher v. State, 18 Ga. 460.

In an action against a railroad company for personal injuries, the plaintiff's attorney, holding up a paper, asked a witness if he knew the handwriting of one of the brakemen on the train, and also if the defendant had not discharged the brakeman for making a statement. It was held that, as the paper itself was inadmissible in evidence, the question tended to bring out the inference that the paper was adverse to the defendant, and that the defendant was entitled to a new trial for the attorney's misconduct. *Baldwin v. In Proctor v. DeCamp, 83 Ind. 559, the court say: "There was evidence in the case before us upon which the appellee's counsel had a right to comment. Granting that he drew from it an unauthorized conclusion, or that he gave it a wrong coloring and meaning, he was still within the evidence, and when this is so courts cannot interfere. If counsel go beyond the evidence and bring in foreign and unproved matters, courts should interfere; and if the trial court does not interfere, and the matter improperly brought before the jury is of a material character, the appellate court may reverse the judgment." It is the privilege and duty of counsel to show up in their true light such acts and conduct of the opposite party as are deserving of criticism or condemnation, but he must not depart from the evidence for such purpose, and surreptitiously introduce before the jury irrelevant matters. Denver etc. R. Co. v. Moynahan, 8 Colo. 56.

Where plaintiff's counsel urged upon the jury that the facts warranted the supposition that the defendant had procured an indictment against the plaintiff in order to impair his credibility, and as there was no such evidence, a verdict of more than double a former verdict, and $4,000 more than the trial court was willing to allow, was set aside and new trial ordered. *Henry v. Great latitude is allowed counsel in argument in appealing to the sympathy of the jury; and it was held that the court did not abuse its discretion in allowing plaintiff's attorney to appeal to the jury in her behalf as a soldier's widow, and in denouncing her opponents as leeches and oppressors of poor women and widows, she, in the meantime, sitting near facing the jury and weeping, or pretending to weep, when such appeals were made. Dowdell v. Wilcox, 64 Iowa 721.

Courts should not attempt to draw too closely the line between what is or is not proper argument of counsel, but there should be ascribed to counsel a sense of honor and to jurymen ordinary intelligence. *Combs v. Reading extracts from works of science or art, as well as from a classical, historical or other publication, is allowed in argument of counsel to the jury by way of illustration, but such reading cannot be made a pretext to get improper matter before a jury. *Legg v. Statements of plaintiff's counsel in an action of slander, that the action was only brought to vindicate character, and that the damages given new trial, must have been objected to when made.¹

(b) MISCONDUCT IN CONDUCT OF THE TRIAL.—It is misconduct, for which a new trial will be granted, for counsel to state in the presence of the jury what he can or proposes to prove, when such evidence has been excluded.² No indirect method of getting excluded evidence before the jury should be allowed,³ nor should counsel persist in getting inadmissible evidence before the jury.⁴ Communications between juror and counsel during trial is such misconduct as will entitle the injured party to a new trial.⁵ It is misconduct for counsel to introduce evidence immaterial to the issue for the sake of assailing the character of the opposite party.⁶ Such misconduct of counsel as intoxication may afford over expenses would be returned, while held to be very improper, unless made in good faith, were not sufficient to warrant the appellate court in granting a new trial. Larkins v. Tartar, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 681.

Counsel should not appeal to the prejudices of the jurors against the opposite party, and such conduct, unless unrebuked by the court, will warrant a new trial. Gibson v. Zeibig, 24 Mo. App. 65; Miller v. Dunlap, 22 Mo. App. 97; State v. Lee, 66 Mo. 165; State v. Barham, 82 Mo. 67; Brown v. Hannibal etc. R. Co., 66 Mo. 588; Bremmer v. Green Bay etc. R. Co., 61 Wis. 114; Brown v. Swinesford, 44 Wis. 282.

Instructions of the court to the jury to disregard improper remarks of counsel do not cure the error. The School Town of Rochester v. Shaw, 100 Ind. 268; State v. Noland, 85 N. Car. 576. But see Evansville v. Wilter, 86 Ind. 414; Railroad v. Gurley, 13 Lea (Tenn.) 46.

Reading from law books to the jury against the will of the court and stating what they contained after being stopped by the court is misconduct of counsel, for which a new trial will be granted. Reich v. Mayor etc. of New York, 12 Daly (N. Y.) 72. See also Lesser v. Perkins, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 341; People v. Anderson, 44 Cal. 70; Tuller v. Talbot, 23 Ill. 357; Sprague v. Craig, 51 Ill. 288; Koelges v. Guardian L. Ins. Co., 57 N. Y. 638.

But reading from law books before instructions are given, where the law read corresponded with the instructions given, will not entitle the defeated party to a new trial. Bloyd v. Pollock, 27 W. Va. 75. See also Koelges v. Guardian L. Ins. Co., 57 N. Y. 638.

A citizen of M county was engaged to teach school in F county, and subsequently brought suit to recover for services. On application of the plaintiff, the venue of the cause was changed from F county to M county, where, upon the trial of the cause, the plaintiff's attorney, in the closing argument over the objection of the defendant, urged the jury to "stand by your own citizen;" and, also over objection and against the admonition of the court, told the jury that the school trustees, pupils and citizens of F county are trying to disgrace and oppress a citizen of M county, and other language calculated to prejudice the jury against the defendant. Held, that the defendant was entitled to a new trial for such misconduct of counsel. The School Trustees of Rochester v. Shaw, 100 Ind. 168.

ground for a new trial;¹ or bringing a case on for trial in violation of a stipulation to give notice.²

4. Misconduct of Litigants.—Misconduct of one of the litigants may afford ground for a new trial; as, for example, where it is shown that he subpoenaed as witnesses ten out of the original panel of eighteen jurors, in order to gain an undue advantage in the selection of the jury.³ Furnishing refreshments to the jurors by the successful party to a suit is generally a ground for a new trial.⁴ A verdict will be set aside even for the least intermeddling with the jurors.⁵ But where the tampering is known to the op-

1. While the intoxication of the attorney of the losing party might, under some circumstances, afford ground for a new trial, the refusal of the trial court to grant a new trial on such ground will not be disturbed by the appellate court, the extent of the intoxication being in doubt and the matter not having been brought to the attention of the court until the trial had ended. *Fitch v. The furnishing of food and drink to jurors when confined to the limits of ordinary hospitality, there being no design to influence the verdict, will not be a ground for a new trial. Carlisle v. Town of Sheldon, 38 Vt. 440; Coleman v. Moody, 4 Hen. & M. (Va.) 1.

Where the successful party paid for the dinner of a witness who was without funds, it was held to be no ground for a new trial. Grace v. Martin, 83 Ga. 245.

Nor will treating jurors to soda water by the successful party after they are discharged, be such misconduct as will entitle the defeated party to a new trial. Grace v. Martin, 83 Ga. 245. See also Pittsburgh etc. R. Co. v. Porter, 32 Ohio St. 328.

In an action for damages to land, the court announced that if both or either of the parties would pay the expenses a view of the property by the jury would be allowed. The plaintiff refused to pay any part, and protested against the proceeding. The defendant agreed to pay all expenses. The jury were taken in defendant's conveyances and dined at his expense. posing counsel before trial, a new trial will not be granted.¹ The promise of a reward to induce a reluctant witness to testify in a particular way, will warrant a new trial,² or the hiring a witness to remain away from the trial.³ To procure a judgment in the absence of the defendant, induced to stay away by a representation that the action would be dismissed, may be ground for a new trial.⁴ Fraud and collusion between the magistrate and the successful party, whereby a fair trial was prevented, is ground for a new trial.⁵

5. Misconduct of Jurors.—The misconduct of jurors may afford ground for a new trial. This misconduct commonly relates to matters such as improper influence upon jurors by parties, counsel, or other persons, intended to affect the verdict; improper bias or prejudice; use by the jury of intoxicating liquors; giving or receiving communications after the jury has been sworn; separation of the jury after the cause has been committed to them and before a verdict is reached. In these and similar instances, the duties of the jury have been set out and explained under another title.⁶ It is in authorities which have decided the question of the right to a new trial for misconduct of the jury, that what amounts to misconduct has been determined, and a repetition of these principles and authorities in a slightly different application under this title, is therefore, unnecessary.

6. Misconduct of Court Officials—(a) MISCONDUCT OF THE SHERIFF.—It is misconduct for a sheriff to threaten a jury that they will be removed to another county unless they speedily agree upon a verdict, and to tell them that the court is making preparations for that purpose.⁷ It is also misconduct for the sheriff to

If the complaining party participated in the juror's misconduct, a new trial will not be granted. United States v. Salentine, 8 Biss. (U. S.) 404.

7. Sheriff's Misconduct.—Gholston v. Gholston, 31 Ga. 625; Obear v. Gray, 68 Ga. 182.

Where the officer in charge told the jury that unless they decided their case in fifteen minutes they would be driven from the room they occupied by the order of the court, and that there was no other comfortable room for them, it was held insufficient to warrant a court of equity in setting aside the verdict and ordering a new trial. Crafts v. Hall, 4 Ill. 131.

It has been held that improper remarks to a jurymen by a sheriff, while rendering the latter subject to a fine, do not vitiate the verdict. Reins v. People, 30 Ill. 256.

Affidavits of jurors to show that the jury were influenced by the remarks of a bailiff in a jury room will not be received. State v. Cowan, 74 Iowa 53.

The fact that the bailiff told the jury that they would be detained until the next day if they did not agree upon a verdict, will not support a motion for a new trial. Wiggins v. Downer, 67 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 65. See also Leach v. Wilbur, 9 Allen (Mass.) 212.

leave a jury alone in company with other persons.¹ The presence of the bailiff in the jury-room with the jury, after it has been charged, is fatal to the verdict, and this, though he speaks no word to the jurymen.²

(b) MISCONDUCT OF PROSECUTOR.—It is misconduct, for which a new trial will be granted, for the prosecutor to exhibit papers bearing on a case to a jury out of court.³ So, if the prosecutor furnishes liquors and cigars to the jurors during the trial, a new trial may be granted,⁴ or if he furnishes entertainment to or bestows favors upon the jurors.⁵

7. Misconduct of Bystanders.—Unchecked demonstrations of applause at a trial, which may have influenced the verdict, may afford ground for a new trial.⁶

1. Wormley's Case, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 712; People v. Hughes, 29 Cal. 257; Caleb v. State, 39 Miss. 721.

That a person, not a sworn officer, was permitted to go to the jury room after the jury had retired to make up their verdict in a capital case, and to have charge of them in the absence of the bailiff, was held sufficient ground for a new trial. Hare v. State, 4 How. (Miss.) 187.

But where, after a jury had retired under the attendance of an officer, and, before the court adjourned, another officer was sworn to attend upon them, and after the adjournment a third was sworn by the clerk to supply the place of the second for a few minutes, it was held that this was according to usage, and no ground for a new trial. Commonwealth v. Jenkins, Thach. Cr. Cas. (Mass.) 118.

It was held in Commonwealth v. Shields, 2 Bush (Ky.) 81, that the failure of the court to administer to the sheriff the oath required by the Kentucky statute, that he will keep the jury together and suffer no person to communicate with them, was ground for a new trial. And so in Spain v. State, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 514; Roberts v. State, 72 Ga. 673. And see Varnschen v. State, 8 Tex. App. 45.

2. People v. Knapp, 42 Mich. 267; Rickard v. State, 74 Ind. 275. See also Poole v. Chicago etc. R. Co., 2 McCrary (U. S.) 251; 12 Cent. L. J. 492; State v. Snyder, 20 Kan. 306; *Cole v. However, if the counsel for the defendant knew of the presence of the bailiff in the jury room and made no objection, a new trial will be refused. Waterman v. State, 116 Ind. 51.

Where the defendant, against whom a verdict has been rendered in a civil action, shows, upon a motion for a new trial, by the testimony of several jurors that the bailiff diverted their attention by talking of other matters, and took part in their deliberations as if a member of the jury, that he was a partisan of the plaintiff, the verdict should be set aside, although the plaintiff had no connection with the misconduct of the officer. Barnett v. Eaton, 62 Miss. 768.

Where the officer in charge carried reasonable refreshments into the jury room, but no conversation took place between such officer and the jurymen, it was held to afford no ground for a new trial. Com. v. Roby, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 496.

3. Prosecuting Attorney's Misconduct.—State v. Hascall, 6 N. H. 352.

4. People v. Montague, 71 Mich. 447.

6. Owens v. State, 64 Tex. 500.

In Caswell v. Pitcher (Me. 1887), 10 Atl. Rep. 453, it was held that ground for a new trial did not appear in the fact that a bystander remarked in the presence of the foreman of the jury during the recess on the first day of the trial, "that if they gave this girl the case, every girl in the county would sue her father," no injury appearing.

So in Com. v. White, 147 Mass. 76, it was held that the discretion of the trial court, in refusing a new trial in a criminal case on the ground of statements made by outsiders in the hearing of the jury, should not be interfered with.

In Smith v. Millingham, 44 Ga. 200, a new trial was held to have been properly granted where the father of one of the parties, who had been rejected as a witness, had talked to a witness in the hearing of the jury as to what would have been testified to had his testimony been allowed.

V. MISTAKE AND SURPRISE—1. Surprise Defined.—Surprise is any unexpected situation in which a party to an action may be placed, without any default on his part and which may be injurious to his interests.¹

2. General Principles.—While a new trial is properly granted where a party is surprised, and no laches can justly be attributed to him,² in order that it may be granted for surprise, it must be shown that the surprise occurred in reference to a matter material to the issue, and that injury resulted therefrom;³ and that the

It was held in Kerr v. Lunsford, 31 W. Va. 659, that the court would not set aside a verdict merely because a newspaper, during the trial, stated that the case was dragging along, and that the general public opinion was that the jury would sustain the will or disagree.

1. Mistake and Surprise.—Hill's Annotated States Oreg., p. 319; Bouvier's Law Dict., tit. New Trial; Oakley v. Sears, 7 Robt. (N. Y.) 111; Hatfield v. Macey, 52 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 193; Platt v. Munroe, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 291; Dewey v. Frank, 62 Cal. 343.

"Surprise, in its legal acceptation, denotes an unforeseen disappointment in some reasonable expectation against which ordinary prudence would not have afforded protection." Peers v. Davis, 29 Mo. 184; 3 Gra. & Wat. on New Trial 398; Fretwell v. Laffoon, 77 Mo. 26; Dewey v. Frank, 62 Cal. 343.

2. Devo v. Reynolds, 15 Ind. 233.

The general rule is that the party surprised on a trial must apply for relief at the earliest practicable moment, and in such method as to produce the least expense, vexation and delay. But this rule may be relaxed where the surprise is clearly established and the consequences of it can be avoided on another trial; and where it is further apparent that the party has not been guilty of laches, and has acted in good faith in omitting to apply for relief at an earlier stage of the proceedings. Delmas v. Martin, 39 Cal. 555.

In a suit for a mining claim, the plaintiff set forth his claim of title, which was denied in the answer. He was allowed to show a title made in a different way, and it was held, upon the defendant's affidavit of surprise, that he was entitled to a new trial. Eagan v. Delaney, 16 Cal. 85.

If, by any reasonable cause, a party has been unable to present the merits of his case to the jury, a new trial should be granted to him. Jones v. Fennimore, 1 Greene (Iowa) 134.

There may be surprise occasioned by a correct ruling for which a new trial should be granted, if injustice would result from its refusal. Chinn v. Taylor, 64 Tex. 385.

In Chicago etc. R. Co. v. Vosburgh, 45 Ill. 311, WALKER, J., observed: "In applications for new trials on such ground (surprise), it is not only necessary that the party should have been surprised, but that it was in a matter material to the issue, and that it produced injury to the party; that it was not the consequence of neglect or inattention on the part of the party surprised; also that he used all reasonable efforts to overcome the evidence which worked the surprise, or that it was not within his power to have done so by the employment of reasonable diligence."

Illness of Counsel.—Where a motion for a new trial, on the ground of surprise by reason of illness of counsel during the trial, did not allege that such illness was of such a nature as to affect his faculties, a new trial was refused. Simmons v. Murray, 13 Daly (N. Y.) 477. See also Whitworth v. Murphy, 29 Iowa 470.

The surprise for which a new trial applicant for the new trial has not been guilty of negligence or want of skill in providing against such surprise.¹ The first duty of counsel, surprised at the trial, is to secure delay by the proper legal method, but he cannot neglect this in the hope of securing a verdict in spite of the surprise, and then obtain a new trial.² A

A new trial will be granted where there was a substitution of a verbal for a written contract without notice in the pleadings. Goldstein v. Lowther, 81 Ill. 399. Or the introduction of an unrecorded deed of which the adverse party had no knowledge. Delmas v. Martin, 39 Cal. 555. Or the use of a false copy of a record. Farnham v. Jones, 32 Minn. 7; Russell v. Reed, 32 Minn. 45.

It must be shown that a different result would probably be the issue of the new trial. Haber v. Lane, 45 Miss. 608; McClusky v. Gerhauser, 2 Nev. 47.

One is not entitled to a new trial because, when testifying, he was so nervous, excited, and embarrassed that he forgot many important facts, and answered in such a manner as to prejudice his case. Korte v. Hoffman, 97 Mo. 284.

A new trial, applied for on the ground of surprise, should not be granted when it appears that the new testimony to be offered is merely cumulative. State v. Wightman, 27 Mo. 121.

Mere surprise at the result of a trial cannot entitle the party so surprised to a new trial. Lane v. Brown, 22 Ind. 239.

Ignorance of Statute.—Where the court ruled that the rights of the parties in a cause depended upon the interpretation of a statute which, as afterwards discovered but at the time unknown to all concerned, had been repealed, it was held that a new trial should be granted. Belmont v. Morrill, 69 Me. 314.

So where the court overlooked a statute under which certain rejected testimony should have been received. *Cooper v. In Schellhous v. Ball, 29 Cal. 605, SANDERSON, J., observed: "To entitle a party to a new trial on the ground of surprise, the same must be exclusively shown by the affidavits; and, moreover, it must appear that the fact or facts from which the surprise resulted had a material bearing upon the case, and that the verdict may be mainly attributed to their effect. (Hartwright v. Badham, 11 Price 383.) Upon this ground new trial should be granted with great caution, for in many cases it is used as a pretext and a cover for carelessness and inattention rather than a meritorious ground for relief. A party claiming to have been injured must show that the surprise has not resulted in any degree from his own fault or negligence, and must in addition claim his relief at the earliest opportunity. If he can relieve himself from his embarrassment in any mode, either by a nonsuit, or a continuance, or the introduction of other testimony, or otherwise, he must not take the chances of a verdict, but must at once fortify his position by resorting to all available means of present relief." Followed in Doyle v. Sturla, 38 Cal. 456. See also Butler v. Vassault, 40 Cal. 74; Patterson v. Ely, 19 Cal. 28.

A new trial will not be granted for accident or surprise which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against, where it does not appear that parties were diligent in preparing for trial. Solomon v. Norton (Ariz., 1886), 11 Pac. Rep. 108.

new trial has been refused for negligence of counsel in preparing the case for trial,¹ and a new trial will not be granted when the defeated party's surprise arose from a misapprehension of the law applicable to his case.² The particular facts which constitute the (Ky.) 5, SIMPSON, J., observed: "The correct practice in such a case is for the party at once, upon the discovery of the cause, during the progress of the trial, which operates as a surprise on him, to move a continuance or postponement of the trial, and not attempt to avail himself of the chance of obtaining a verdict on the evidence he has been able to introduce; and if he should fail, then to apply for a new trial on the ground of surprise. To tolerate such a practice would have the effect of giving to the party surprised an unreasonable and unfair advantage, and tend to an unnecessary and improper consumption of the time of the court."

In Hurlburt v. Parker, 43 Hun (N. Y.) 634, the party against whom a verdict was rendered had ample opportunity to state his surprise before verdict, but his counsel decided to take his chances on a favorable verdict. It was held that he was not entitled to a new trial. See also Albert v. Seiler, 31 Mo. App. 247; Dewey v. Frank, 62 Cal. 343; Seaman v. Koehler, 12 N. Y. St. Rep. 582; Board of Regents v. Ball, 29 Cal. 605; Doyle v. Sturla, 38 Cal. 456.

An excuse which would have been a good reason for the continuance of a cause is not, necessarily, a good reason for a new trial. Strippelmann v. Clark, 11 Tex. 296.

1. Negligence of Counsel.—Moody v. Dick, 4 N. & M. 348; Gwilt v. Crawley, 8 Bing. 144; Handy v. Davis, 38 N. H. 411; Commonwealth v. Benesch, Thatcher's Cr. Cas. (Mass.) 684; Westheimer v. Cooper, 40 Kan. 370; Shields v. Burns, 31 Ala. 537; Yates v. Monroe, 13 Ill. 219; United States v. Humason, 7 Sawyer (U. S.) 252.

Where the applicant relied upon the statements of opposing counsel and failed to prepare for proving certain issues, a new trial was refused. Smith etc. Implement Co. v. Wheeler, 27 Mo. App. 16; Jackson v. Van Werp, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 273.

But where a failure to prepare for trial was the result of an attempt of the opposing counsel to mislead, the negligence is excusable. Symons v. Bunnell, 80 Cal. 330; Chamberlain v. Lindsay, 1 Hun (N. Y.) 231.

A failure to prepare for trial on account of a stipulation between counsel that the case should be postponed, will not prevent the injured party from having a new trial, when judgment was taken against him in violation of such stipulation. Mordhorst v. Reynolds, 23 Neb. 485; Chicago etc. R. Co. v. Gillett, 38 Iowa 434.

But it has been held that the proper way to meet a violated stipulation is to move for a postponement of the case. Couillard v. Seaver, 64 N. H. 614.

When a case has been placed on the calendar and was called in its order, a new trial will not be granted because plaintiff went on with the trial without giving defendant's attorney notice according to agreement, there being no affidavit of merits. O'Keefe v. Leufest, 35 Minn. 237. See also Keeley v. O'Brien, 66 Ill. 358. See also, infra, this title (2) MISTAKES OF COUNSEL.

2. Counsel's Misapprehension of Law.—Phillips v. Wheeler, 10 Tex. 536; Hite v. Lenhart, 7 Mo. 22; Law v. Law, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 366; Legrand v. Baker, 6 Mon. (Ky.) 235; Root v. Catskill Mt. R. Beals, 27 Ind. 77; Fuller v. Hutchings, 10 Cal. 526; Klockenbaum v. Pierson, 22 Cal. 163.

In Root v. Catskill Mt. R. Co., 33 Fed. Rep. 858, the defendant tried the case upon a certain theory as to the burden of proof and of contributory negligence, which theory was erroneous. It was held that he could not have a new trial on the ground of surprise. See also Barrows v. Fox, 39 Minn. 61; Ferguson v. Gilbert, 16 Ohio St. 88.

A surprise alleged to have been surprise must be fully set up in the motion for the new trial,¹ and in case the application is made in behalf of the defendant, it must be alleged that he has a good defence to the action.² The granting of a new trial upon the ground of surprise rests in the discretion of the court.³

caused by the attorney supposing the law to have been different from what it was is no ground for a new trial. Fuller v. Hutchings, 10 Cal. 526; Packer v. Heaton, 9 Cal. 569; Lawrence v. Fulton, 19 Cal. 689; Klockenbaum v. Pierson, 22 Cal. 160.

A new trial will not be granted because the plaintiff was surprised by the ground of objection taken at the trial and did not come prepared to meet it. Jackson v. Roe, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 77.

A new trial will not be granted to allow evidence to be admitted which had been supposed by the counsel to be immaterial in the first trial. Northampton Nat. Bank v. Kidder, 50 N. Y. Super. Ct. 246.

A new trial may be granted on the ground of surprise at a correct ruling of the court and as a result of the attorney's negligence, if the party has a meritorious defence and injustice would result from its refusal. Chinn v. Taylor, 64 Tex. 385; Buford v. Bostick, 50 Tex. 371; 1 Gra. & Wat. New Trials 187; 2 Gra. & Wat. New Trials 675.

In Anderson v. Market Nat. Bank, 66 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 8, POTTER, J., remarks: "I observe, however, that the defendant's counsel does not state in his affidavit that he was surprised at the rulings, though perhaps he was, but is not willing to confess it. Still there need not be much delicacy about it, for I imagine that counsel, both the unlearned, and the learned, are frequently surprised at the judge's ruling; the former that so many of the rulings are sound, and the latter that so few of them are sound. But new trials are only granted where surprises arise in relation to the rulings of the judge upon points of law. If the latter practice should come to prevail, there would, indeed, be no end to litigation." See also, infra, this title (2) MISTAKES OF COUNSEL.

Affidavit of Surprise.—Something more than the party's unsupported allegation of surprise is necessary in an affidavit whereon a motion for a new trial is based. Brooks v. Lyon, 3 Cal. 113.

An affidavit in support of a motion for a new trial, on the ground of surprise and newly discovered evidence, which wholly fails to show any clear facts or circumstances showing that the party was surprised on the trial, or had used due diligence, gives no support to the motion. Ballard v. Noaks, 2 Ark. 45. See also Meechum v. Judy, 4 Mo. 361; Schellhaus v. Ball, 29 Cal. 605; Brooks v. Douglas, 32 Cal. 208.

On an application by a defendant for a new trial, on the ground of surprise, if the defence intended to be set up do not otherwise appear, it must be shown by affidavit that the counsel believes, or that the party believes, on the advice of counsel, that it is a good and valid one. Dow v. Town of Hinesburgh, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 35.

Evidence.—A party moving for a new trial, on the ground of surprise, must prove the surprise, and that he was injured thereby, as well as show how he can avoid it. Blake v. Howe, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 306; Smith v. Morrison, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 81; Cook v. De La Guerra, 24 Cal. 237; Holly v. Christopher, 3 Mon. (Ky.) 14.

Office of Pleadings in Preventing Sur-

3. Various Kinds of Surprise—(a) NOTICE OF TRIAL.—Motions for a new trial based upon want of notice¹ are not favored, since, in the orderly and rapid transaction of business in court, the responsibility must rest upon counsel to see that the court's rules are complied with, and the parties and witnesses are ready when the case is reached. In many instances, therefore, new trials have been refused where lack of notice is assigned as the basis of the application.² In others, however, peculiar circumstances have been held to justify a new trial, but such cases furnish no rule of uniform application.³

(b) ABSENCE FROM TRIAL—(1) Absence of Parties.—It is obvious that no uniform rule can be stated to show under what circumstances the absence of a party from the trial will justify granting a new trial. In the following instances new trials demanded for absence of parties were refused: Where the same party had repeatedly obtained delay and at the pending term was absent on prise.—Surprise as to the cause of action cannot be alleged as a ground for a new trial, if the declaration and exhibits give notice. Smith v. Morrison, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 81; Bitting v. Mowry, 1 Miles (Pa.) 216; Harrison v. Wilson, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 547; Dodge v. Kendall, 4 Vt. 31.

Where the plaintiff has simply proved the allegations of his pleadings, the defendant cannot complain of surprise. Francisco v. Benepe, 6 Mont. 243.

Where there was no notice of a special term of court, the regular term having been adjourned, and for this reason a defendant failed to make a defence, a new trial was granted him. Joslin v. Coffin, 5 How. (Miss.) 539.

A new trial will be refused when the record shows such a notice of the pendency of the suit as to justify the court in overruling a motion to set aside a default. Chapin v. Jackson, 45 Ind. 153.

Where a defendant in several suits was served with process and destroyed the summons and afterward went with his attorney to the clerk of court to see the papers in one particular case, which could not be found, a default was set aside and new trial granted on the ground of surprise. McCall v. Hitchcock, 9 Bush (Ky.) 66.

Plaintiff demanded a jury trial, but failed to pay the jury fee, and the case, though not stricken from the nonjury docket, was placed on the jury docket, which showed that the fee had not been paid. Defendants averred that they attended court until the judge announced that there was no jury for the following week; that they, having been informed by plaintiff and the clerk that the case was on the jury docket, and having found this true by inspection of the record, did not attend during that week, during which time judgment was rendered for plaintiff; and that they were able to produce material testimony. Held that defendants were entitled to a new trial, though the case should not have been placed on the jury docket until the fee had been paid. Lanius v. Shuler, 77 Tex. 24.

3. It is not ground for a new trial that the case came on for trial sooner than the party expected, on account of his mistaking the day when it was set for trial. Stout v. Calver, 6 Mo. 254.

Where the presiding judge had been counsel for the plaintiff, and the defendant did not expect he would sit and therefore did not prepare himself, this is not sufficient ground of surprise to grant a new trial. Owings v. Gibson, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 515.

Where the defendant moved for a new trial on the ground that there was an understanding between him and the plaintiff that they would meet at court account of the same accident;¹ because the party's counsel told him that the opposing counsel would take no advantage of his absence;² because he was intoxicated;³ because he resided in another county and mistook the time of the trial;⁴ because misled by the remark of an attorney in trying another case;⁵ because the party relied upon his attorney to be present;⁶ when guilty of culpable neglect;⁷ where the case assumed an unexpected position during the voluntary absence of the party;⁸ where he neglected to inform his counsel of important facts;⁹ where he assumed that his case would not be reached;¹⁰ that he did not know on what day of the term his cause would be tried;¹¹ where he inferred from the sickness of the judge that his own counsel would hold court.¹² Inferences drawn from remarks by a judge and counsel out of court are no excuse,¹³ nor that his counsel named the wrong day.¹⁴ Other miscellaneous cases are cited in the notes.¹⁵

In the following instances the excuses given by parties for absences were held to justify a new trial: Sickness of a party, or and set the cause for trial on a particular day, and the agreement was not consummated before the regular call of the docket, when the defendant was not prepared for trial, a new trial will not be granted. *Moody v. Miscellaneous Instances.—Where a party during a trial left the court room without asking the court to wait for his return, and went to a hotel three squares distant to procure the presence of a female witness indisposed, and on his return the evidence was closed, held that it was not a surprise entitling him to a new trial. Thompson v. Updegraff, 3 W. Va. 629.

A defendant who had been defaulted made affidavit that he was present in court and ready for trial on the day for which his case was set down; that his counsel advised him that a different case, then being tried, would take the rest of the week; that he accordingly left for that time, and in the interval was defaulted. Held, not to be sufficient ground for a new trial. Desnoyer v. McDonald, 4 Minn. 515.

A voluntary absence of a party from a trial will not entitle him to have a new trial for the purpose of using his testimony. Thompson v. Anthony, 48 Ill. 468.

An affidavit by an agent of the defendant corporation that he understood that certain attorneys had charge of the case taken to the circuit court by appeal, without showing whence he so understood, or that any preparation was made for trial, the attorneys denying that they were ever employed, held, to afford no ground for a new trial. Singer Mfg. Co. v. May, 86 Ill. 398.

Mere absence of the plaintiff is no

his immediate family;¹ sickness, combined with absence of an important witness;² unavoidable accident;³ counsel's mistake as to the county to which the venue had been changed;⁴ an erroneous supposition that the death of the plaintiff abated the action;⁵ unavoidable absence of an agent employed to make proper showing for continuance;⁶ irregular calling of the docket;⁷ misleading statements of the court;⁸ failure of clerk of court to send promised notice;⁹ absence of defendant and witness from the Commonwealth, combined with sudden indisposition of counsel;¹⁰ inability to reach court by reason of high water, being himself his own counsel;¹¹ accidental absence under peculiar circumstances.¹² A party to a civil action has an absolute and constitutional right to be present at all times on the trial. To exclude him because he was sensitive and nervous is reversible error.¹³

But the affidavits must show freedom from negligence on the part of both attorney and client. Whitworth v. Murphy, 29 Iowa 470.

The sickness of the daughter of a party to a suit has been held to be a sufficient excuse for absence. Peebles v. Ralls, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 24.

It must be shown that the sickness was of such a nature that the party could neither be at the trial nor confer with his attorney. Edwards v. McKay, 73 Ill. 570. See also White v. Martin, 63 Ga. 659.

When the party to a suit, who is a material witness in his own behalf, is compelled to leave home even on account of his health, when his suit is liable to be called for trial, such absence will not afford good ground for a continuance or a new trial. Schlesinger v. Nunan, 26 Ill. App. 524.

A party applying for a new trial on the ground of his sudden illness, causing unavoidable absence, and claiming to be a material witness in his own behalf, must show that neither himself nor his attorney was guilty of negligence. Whitworth v. Murphy, 29 Iowa 470.

The trustee appeared in the course of the same day, the justice and the plaintiff's attorney being present, and denied his liability and asked for a new trial, which was refused. On petition to the superior court for a new trial, the trustee denying under oath that he was indebted, or had any property of the principal, a new trial was granted, the costs of the petition to abide the result of the suit. Rigney v. Hutchins, 9 N. H. 257.

13. Chandler v. Avery, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 9.

Affidavit of Surprise for Absence.—Where a new trial is asked for on the ground that the defendant was absent from court on the day the case was at the original trial furnishes no ground for a new trial.¹ An attorney is presumed to know the time of the meeting of the court and cannot allege his ignorance as an excuse.² Negligence of counsel employed by a party is the same as that party's own negligence, and the latter must suffer the consequences of it;³ nor will it be sufficient simply to set up, in an application for a new trial, the illness of counsel, or his absence on other professional business; it must also be alleged that the judgment is con-called and tried, because somebody had told him that the presiding judge had given public notice to all parties in cases that were litigated that they need not attend court on that day; it must be made affirmatively to appear from whom the defendant obtained such information, and that such public notice was in fact given. Massey v. Allen, 48 Ga. 21.

On a motion for a new trial it is not enough that the applicant account for his absence at the trial; he should also show due diligence in preparing, and that, because of his absence, his preparation was unavailing. Mussin v. Collins, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 350.

The affidavit must show, in addition to the cause of absence, that the presence of the party would have produced a different result in the trial. Ferrill v. Marks, 76 Ga. 21.

1. Freeman v. Weyland, 23 Tex. 529; Power v. Gillepsie, 27 Tex. 370; Star v. Torrey, 22 N. J. L. 190; Alexander v. Lewis, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 407; Mulholland v. Heyneman, 19 Cal. 605; Shields v. Coddington, 32 Kan. 107.

It is within the discretion of the trial court to refuse defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground of surprise in the withdrawal of his junior counsel from the case just before trial, where defendant not only failed to move for a continuance on that ground, but had notice of the withdrawal in time to employ, and did employ additional counsel. Gaines v. White (S. Dak. 1891), 47 N. W. Rep. 524.

Parties are bound to attend to their cases, and appear when they are reached. Therefore, where the defendant's attorney was, from necessity, absent when the case was reached, and it was defended by his partner, without the knowledge of defendant, who was in the city with witnesses, held, that these facts constituted no ground for a new trial. Hawthorne v. Bowman, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 524.

A misunderstanding between the attorneys of the respective parties as to the day of trial will entitle the injured party to a new trial. Symons v. Bunnell, 80 Cal. 330. See also, Robertson v. Williams, 81 Cal. 268.

When it can be shown that the counsel could not by reasonable diligence ascertain the condition of the case and the time it was fixed for trial and be present, a new trial may be granted. Riley v. Louisville, 2 La. An. 965; Lockett v. Toby, 10 La. An. 713.

It seems that a party to the suit must know at his peril the day on which his case will be called. Brevard v. Graham, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 177; Yelton v. Hawkins, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 1.

Where counsel relied upon court proceedings published in the daily newspaper for notice of the calendar upon which the cause to be tried was to have been placed, and was absent from the trial, a new trial was refused. Miller v. McGraw, 20 Ill. App. 203.

Although circumstances seemed to indicate that the case could not be reached, or, if reached, would not be tried, the absence of counsel will not afford a good ground for a new trial. Warren v. Purtell, 63 Ga. 428.

3. Yates v. Monroe, 13 Ill. 212.

If counsel's absence is accompanied by the least negligence of the party a trary to law and evidence, or that justice requires its revision.¹ It must appear that there were probable merits in the cause which suffered prejudice from counsel's absence.² Appellate courts will hesitate to review a refusal of the trial court to grant a new trial for this cause, since the matter is largely one of discretion.³ In some instances it has been held that the absence of counsel from a trial may, in the discretion of the court, be a good ground for a new trial.⁴

(3) Absence of Witnesses.—Where it is shown, by a party to a suit, that he was deprived of the benefit of a witness, who was excusably absent from the trial, and whose testimony was material, a new trial may be granted.⁵ And it must appear that the new trial may, in the court's discretion be denied. Keeley v. O'Brien, 66 Ill. 358; Walsh v. Walsh, 114 Ill. 655; Renso v. Merryman, 71 Ala. 195.

Illness.—To warrant granting a new trial on account of the sudden illness of the attorney of the defeated party, proof must be made, in support of the motion, that the applicant can, on another trial, make a better showing. Porter v. Triola, 84 Ill. 325.

Absence of counsel on account of the sickness of his wife was held to afford no ground for a new trial where it did not appear that he was free from negligence in notifying his colleague of his absence in time to move for a continuance. Hart v. Thomas, 61 Ga. 470.

Sickness of counsel is not a good ground for a new trial, when there is a manifest lack of diligence in not attending the court or providing other counsel. 1869, Landrum v. Farmer, 7 Bush (Ky.) 47.

Instructions to Jury in Counsel's Absence.—Additional instructions given to a disagreeing jury in counsel's absence furnishes no ground for a new trial. Alexander v. Gardner, 14 R. I. 15. See also Blacketer v. House, 67 Ind. 414.

Absence of Counsel Because Not Paid.—A new trial will be refused where it appears that counsel was absent because he had not received his fees. Cobb v. State, 78 Ga. 801. See also State v. Walker, 39 La. An. 19; Goldstone v. Sperling, 39 Cal. 447.

Illness of Counsel and Neglect of Party.—Sickness of counsel is not a sufficient excuse for his absence, when the client has been negligent in procuring other counsel. Landrum v. Farmer, 7 Bush (Ky.) 47. See also Yeizer v. Burke, 3 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 439.

It must be shown by affidavits what the absent witness would have sworn to. Lillienthal v. Anderson, 1 Idaho. N. S. 673; Swartzell v. Rogers, 3 Kan. 374. And that there is a good de-testimony of such absent witness would probably affect the result.¹ But in order to have the advantage of a continuance or a new trial on the ground of absent witnesses, they must have been regularly summoned.² It is a general rule that a new trial should not be granted on account of the absence of witnesses when a continuance has not been asked for, or the absence of witnesses is caused by any form of neglect by the party applying for a new trial.³

If witnesses who have material testimony to offer, have been duly subpoenaed, fail to appear at the trial, their absence will entitle the injured party to a new trial. Hyburn v. State, 26 Tex. App. 668; Tilden v. Gardinier, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 663; Ruggles v. Hall, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 112.

If the testimony of the absent witness could have been procured previous to the trial, his absence will not afford a ground for a new trial. Servis v. Cooper, 33 N. J. L. 68.

Where a party during the trial went in search of witnesses, and returned with them while his adversary's counsel was addressing the jury, he should then have offered them as witnesses, and his failure to do so prevented him from having a new trial on account of their absence. Dettman v. Zimmerman, 53 Iowa 709. See also Ketchum v. Breed (Wis.), 26 N. W. Rep. 271.

Illness of Witness.—If a party to an action learns that a material witness is absent on account of sickness, he should move for a continuance. Gee v. Moss, 68 Iowa 318. See also Watterson v. Watterson, 1 Head (Tenn.) 1.

Intoxication of Witness.—Where a witness was excluded from testifying because of drunkenness application for a continuance should be made before a new trial will be granted and materiality of the witness's testimony must be shown. Fox v. Territory, 2 W. T. 297; Land v. Miller, 7 Tex. 463.

A party moved for a new trial on the ground that a material witness for him was incapacitated by intoxication to give evidence on the trial. For aught shown by the affidavits in support of the motion, the party might have previously known of the intoxication and have been instrumental in obtaining it. Held, that the motion was rightly overruled. Iseley v. Lovejoy, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 462.

A refusal of the right to cross-examine a witness because of his intoxication is a sufficient ground for a new trial. State v. McNinch, 12 S. Car. 89.

Absence of Witness Caused by Adversary.—A new trial will be granted for disingenuous attempts on the part of the prevailing party to stifle or suppress evidence, or to thwart the proceedings, or to obtain an unconscionable advantage; and upon this ground a new trial was awarded to the plaintiff, where the defendant, by letters and persuasions, without the plaintiff's knowledge, induced a witness to absent himself from the town in which he lived, and in which the court was sitting, on the day on which the cause was set down for trial, in order to prevent the plaintiff from proving a material fact, known to the witness, which he knew was material, and which he had reason to believe could be proven by no one but himself. *Carey v. (c) SURPRISE AS TO EVIDENCE—(1) General Principles.—As in similar instances, elsewhere adverted to in this title, the party surprised by the introduction of evidence materially affecting his case, under circumstances where he is entitled to delay, must first have exhausted his other remedies before he is entitled to a new trial. One who has failed to apply for relief by a continuance, or similar remedy, cannot first raise the issue of surprise by evidence, on a motion for a new trial.¹ In like manner, as has been else-

v. Moss, 68 Iowa 318; Dettman v. Zimmerman, 53 Iowa 709; Edwards v. Dignan, 2 D. P. C. 642; Young v. Commonwealth, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 550; Wells v. Sanger, 21 Mo. 354; Washer v. Breedlove, 75 Tex. 649.

Depositions.—The fact that witnesses, whose depositions are taken, reside within 40 miles of the place, is a fact of which the party taking such depositions can inform himself by ordinary diligence; if it be not known, the want of knowledge is to be attributed to his own laches, and surprise thus produced cannot be ground for a new trial. Peers v. Davis, 29 Mo. 184.

Adversary as Witness.—Either party may summon the other as a witness. If this is neglected, and that other suddenly and unexpectedly disappears when wanted, a continuance should be asked for the purpose of having him summoned. The party prejudiced cannot go to the jury, and then ask a new trial to let in his opponent's testimony. Kellogg v. Ballard, 10 Wis. 440.

Requisites of Affidavit Alleging Absence of Witnesses.—An affidavit for a new trial, because the first was had in the absence of material witnesses, must explain why a continuance was not asked for. Jones v. Gaither, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 166.

Upon an application for a new trial on the ground of surprise arising from the sudden illness of a witness, what he would testify to must be shown, and the court is not bound to take the statement of the applicant or his counsel for the purpose. Swartzell v. Rogers, 3 Kan. 374.

An affidavit for a new trial, on the ground that a witness was absent, must show the facts to be proved by such witness. Warren v. Ritter, 11 Mo. 354.

Where two of the defendant's witnesses, being present when the trial commenced, disappeared without leave or notice, and the party, in support of a motion for a new trial, filed the next day his own affidavit and that of another of the fact, held, that his affidavit ought to have been accompanied by the affidavit of the witnesses, showing the facts to which they would testify; it ought to have stated that the defendant could not prove the same facts by other testimony; and if the affidavits of the absent witnesses could not be procured, that fact should be stated. Cotton v. State, 4 Tex. 260; S. P. Mann & Clifton, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 304; Ward v. Cobbs, 14 Tex. 303.

Remedy by Suffering Nonsuit.—In Helm v. First Nat. Bank, 91 Ind. 44, in construing an Indiana statute regulating new trials and providing that new trials may be granted for "accident or surprise which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against" (Ind. R. S., 1881, § 559), HAMMOND, J., observed: "But it seems to be quite well established that a plaintiff is not entitled to a new trial on account of surprise at any evidence given for the defendant, for the reason that he has it in his power to dismiss his case, without prejudice to his rights, and commence another suit. Cummins v. Walden, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 307; Atkisson v. Martin, 39 Ind. 243. In the former case, BLACKFORD, J., delivering the opinion of the court, said: 'It is a general rule, indeed, that the plaintiff, after a verdict against him, can have no claim to a new trial on account of his having been surprised by any evidence of the defendant. If the plaintiff finds himself unprepared to where explained, such motions are addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court.¹

While the party thus surprised will be permitted a new trial in a proper case (and there are numerous instances in which this relief has been granted),² the review of such applications has commonly shown that the party surprised, has, by his own conduct, barred himself from this remedy. The introduction of testimony by the adverse party, which could not reasonably be expected, and which operates as a surprise and brings about an meet the defendant's evidence, he always has it in his power to suffer a nonsuit, which will leave him at liberty to sue again for the same cause of action. It would be giving the plaintiff too great an advantage to permit him to take the chance of a verdict, and when it is lost, relieve him from the verdict and give him chance with another jury, merely because the evidence against his claim was stronger on the first trial than he expected it would be." In Holbrook v. Nichol, 36 Ill. 161, where an affidavit for a new trial, in an action of ejectment, stated that the party had within the last five months examined the record of deeds in the county where the land was situated, and ascertained that the record of a power of attorney authorizing the conveyance, for which the opposite party claimed, failed to show anything indicating a notarial seal appearing in the notary's certificate that being a material fact; that he had reason to believe that the letters "L. S." appearing upon the certified copy of the record given in evidence by his adversary had been affixed to the copy of the certificate furnished by the clerk after it had been given by that officer to the opposite party; that he anticipated the production of no such certificate, and was taken by surprise when it was produced at the trial in another county, and in consequence had subpoenaed no witness to prove the facts as they existed; and that he could prove, by the clerk and his deputy, that there was nothing appearing upon the record to indicate that a seal had ever been affixed to the notary's certificate—held, that the affidavit clearly showing that the party had been taken by surprise on the trial; that he had been vigilant and had used every reasonable precaution and effort to be prepared for trial, and had been guilty of no laches, the court erred in refusing a new trial.

The introduction, as evidence, of an unfavorable verdict, is ground for a new trial.¹ Where one party is allowed to testify to facts which it could not have been anticipated that he would be permitted to testify to, a new trial should be granted when injury results.² The fact that the adversary's evidence is different from what it was supposed it would be, is not sufficient.³ If there has been any want of diligence in ascertaining what the testimony of a witness would be, a new trial will be refused.⁴ Surprise cannot be alleged where the evidence is within the issues framed by the pleadings.⁵

unrecorded deed, of which the opposite party had no notice or knowledge, at the close of the evidence on the trial, is a sufficient surprise to authorize the granting of a new trial. Larrimore v. Williams, 30 Ind. 18; Sproul v. Resolute F. Ins. Co., 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 71.

A defendant, whose property was attached, filed an evasive answer, under oath, admitting the debt sued on. A subsequent attaching creditor intervened, and on the trial of the right to hold the property, the defendant in the first action, without any notice that he should do so, testified that the debt was not due. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a new trial on the ground of surprise. Coghill v. Marks, 29 Cal. 673.

1. Surprise as to Evidence.—Holbrook v. Nichol, 36 Ill. 161; Egan v. Delaney, 16 Cal. 87.

The filing a new account on an appeal and the testimony in support thereof is a surprise to opposite party entitling him to a new trial or a continuance. Webb v. Lasater, 5 Ill. 543. See also Newhall v. Appleton, 47 N. Y. Sup. Ct. 38.

Where a bill of particulars is filed, a party cannot be surprised at any evidence offered by his adversary to establish the items, even if such evidence were not offered at a former trial. Rockford etc. R. Co. v. Rose, 72 Ill. 183.

Where the plaintiff has confined his evidence to the pleadings, the defendant cannot complain of surprise. Francisco v. Benepe, 6 Mont. 243.

Where a defendant filed a deposition which contradicted the testimony of the plaintiff, which was alleged as a surprise, a new trial was refused. Thompson v. Anthony, 48 Ill. 468.

Where a party has it in his power to produce evidence that will contradict the testimony which is claimed to have been a surprise and fails to make use of it, his negligence will bar a new trial. Rockford etc. R. Co. v. Rose, 72 Ill.

2. Menk v. Commercial Ins. Co., 70 Cal. 585.

The fact that a witness was rejected on the trial of a case, as being incompetent through interest, is not a sufficient reason for granting a new trial as for a surprise. Haskins v. Smith, 17 Vt. 263.

At a trial before a referee, a witness for plaintiff, objected to as incompetent because interested, testified that he had no present or contingent interest in the result, and was thereupon permitted to testify to transactions with a decedent. On its afterwards appearing from the testimony of plaintiff that such witness was interested in the result, the referee excluded his testimony. Held, that plaintiff could not complain that he was surprised by such ruling, and was thereby prevented from introducing other testimony to the like effect. Morrison v. Murphy, 36 Mo. App. 36.

Absence, Surprise, etc.—When a motion for a new trial on the ground of surprise is made, because witnesses have failed to testify as they represented before the trial they would testify, the question is, whether the evidence to be produced on another trial is such as will probably secure a different result. *Stellwagen v. 5. Cole v. Fall Brook Coal Co., 10 N. Y. Supp. 417; Knapp v. Fisher, 49

Overlooking material testimony,¹ or neglecting to secure valuable and accessible evidence,² does not warrant a new trial. The introduction of false but immaterial evidence, not passed upon, and not necessary to be passed upon, is not ground for a new trial;³ nor is it a ground that the parties asking it were surprised by the impeachment of one of them.⁴ A new trial will not be granted to enable a party to impeach his opponent's witnesses.⁵

(2) Unexpected Evidence of Friendly Witness.—Surprise arising from a party's own witnesses, testifying otherwise than was expected, is not, as a matter of course, a sufficient ground for a new trial.⁶ But if he has used all the diligence necessary in ascertaining what the testimony would be, and it turns out to be different from what he has a right to expect, a new trial will be granted.⁷ The truth of the testimony of a disappointing witness must be denied, or it must be shown that the party surprised will be able to supply the needed testimony on the new trial.⁸ The evidence must be on a point material to the issue, and injury must result therefrom to the party complaining.¹

(3) Unexpected Evidence of Hostile Witness.—Surprise at the testimony of witnesses called by the adverse party will not afford a good ground for a new trial, unless the party against whom the testimony is given has been misled by previous statements of the witnesses.² But where such a witness has attempted to mislead the injured party, by stating that such hostile testimony would not be given, a new trial may be granted.³ A party must be prepared to meet any material evidence which is competent under the issues, and has no right to assume that such evidence will not be introduced.⁴ But the admission of new testimony-in-chief, after the case has been closed, and the exclusion of testimony offered in rebuttal, is a surprise.⁵ The affidavit of a witness that his testimony at the trial was false would present a good ground for a new trial.⁶ Only under extraordinary circumstances will a new trial be granted on the ground that a witness was mistaken in his testimony.¹

(4) Loss of Documents and Records.—If material and important evidence be missing at the trial, a continuance should be asked, or a nonsuit taken.² Where an account book was in possession of

An affidavit, by a witness in the former trial, that he was surprised on his examination, and explaining and correcting a mistake in his testimony, is not sufficient to warrant the granting of a new trial. Steinbach v. Columbian Ins. Co., 2 Cai. (N. Y.) 129.

A new trial will not be granted for the false swearing of the witnesses of the prevailing party when such perjury is denied by the witnesses. Dexter v. Handy, 13 R. I. 85.

In general the witness should be convicted of perjury before a new trial will be granted for his false testimony. Holtz v. Schmidt, 44 N. Y. Super. Ct. 327. See also Dexter v. Handy, 13 R. I. 85.

1. O'Kelly v. Felker, 71 Ga. 775.

Miscellaneous.—The mere fact that a witness used at a former trial of a case was not used at the final trial, gives the adverse party no reason for asking for a new trial on the ground of surprise, where the court are satisfied that all the testimony which he thereby lost the opportunity of using, could only have been used by him as impeaching testimony, if the witness had been introduced. Shepherd v. Hayes, 16 Vt. 486.

A new trial will not be granted on the ground of surprise, where surprise arose from the production of an unexpected witness to certain facts, to impeach whom no preparation had been made, and the omission to call an anticipated witness whose impeachment had been prepared for. Beach v. Tooker, 10 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 297.

A new trial will not be granted to a party upon an affidavit that he was taken by surprise, by the testimony of a witness whom he alleges to have been mistaken, unless it be shown by what evidence the mistake can be established, and a sufficient reason is given why it was not introduced on the trial. Ellis v. Kelly, 33 Miss. 695.

A new trial cannot be demanded as a right, because a witness was sworn in the cause who is since found to have been convicted of an infamous crime. Commonwealth v. Green, 17 Mass. 915. See also Haughton v. Haughton, 11 La. An. 200.

Unexpected evidence, impeaching the character of a witness is not a surprise for which a new trial ought to be granted. Bell v. Howard, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 117; Den v. Geiger, 9 N. J. L. 225; Shumway v. Fowler, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 425. But see Wilson v. Clarke, 27 Miss. 270.

Where a party called his adversary's witness, thus making him his own, he cannot allege surprise at his evidence, as a ground for a new trial. Higden v. Higden, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 42. Especially where the witness has since died. Duryee v. Dennison, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 248.

The fact that a defendant in an action had forgotten at the trial that before suit brought he had, through his attorney, tendered a certain amount of money to the plaintiff in satisfaction of his claim which was refused, and which was less than the verdict, is no ground for a rehearing after final judgment, on the ground of accident or surprise, under section 2408 of Alabama Code. Allington v. Tucker, 38 Ala. 655.

A want of recollection of a fact, which, by due attention, might have been remembered, is not a ground for granting a new trial. Watts v. Johnson, 4 Tex. 311; Cochrane v. Middleton, 13 Tex. 275.

A new trial will not be granted merely because a witness was not sworn. Sheeks v. Sheeks, 98 Ind. 288.

2. Lost Papers.—Kilgore v. Jordan, 17 Tex. 341; Linard v. Crossland, 10 Tex. 462; McClure v. King, 15 La. An. 220; Cotton v. State, 4 Tex. 260; Farnham v. Jones, 32 Minn. 7.

Failure to ask for a continuance is not always a bar to granting a new trial. Farnham v. Jones, 32 Minn. 7.

If lack of diligence appears a new trial will not be granted for loss of documentary evidence. Tefft v. Marsh, 1 W. Va. 38; Chapman v. Moore, 107 Ind. 223.

Where a deposition had been taken and filed, but was not called for on the trial, a new trial was refused, on the ground that the deposition contained material matter and had been lost. Chapman v. Chapman, 4 Call (Va.) 430.

the defendant, who denied its existence, but who afterward produced it in another trial, a new trial was granted.¹ The unexpected production of written testimony by the opposite party, supposed to have been lost, will entitle the defeated party to a new trial.² Loss of an original record, and the introduction by the adverse party of what purports to be a copy, but which is not, there being no reason for supposing it not to be, is ground for a new trial.³

(5) Rejection of Expected Evidence.—The rejection at the trial of evidence, which the party had a right to believe to be admissible, is good ground for a new trial.⁴ So, too, if documents which had been allowed to be read at a former trial are rejected, a new trial may be granted.⁵ But the rejection of incompetent expected testimony is not ground for a new trial.⁶

A new trial will be granted when a judgment is rendered upon a supplied record which is not a true copy, where the original papers have been found and reinstated. Thomas v. Hutchinson, 25 Ark. 558. See also Farnham v. Jones, 32 Minn. 7.

Stenographer's Notes.—The loss of a stenographer's notes before settling a bill of exceptions is not a ground for a new trial. Golden Terra Min. Co. v. Smith, 2 Dak. 377.

A new trial was granted on payment of costs, on account of the loss of papers in the custom house, and because it was doubtful whether the truth of the transaction appeared on the trial, for the want of the proper preparation of the defence. Boker v. Bronson, 4 Blatchf. (U. S.) 472; S. P. Wilkinson v. Martin, 13 La. An. 479.

1. Blackburn v. Crowder, 110 Ind. 127.

Where defendant supposes an instrument to be lost, and at the trial plaintiff, who is not entitled to its possession, unexpectedly produces it, and an alteration on its face appears, which defendant cannot explain for want of time, a new trial may be granted him. Russell v. Reed, 32 Minn. 45.

Where evidence was introduced of the items of an account without objection, and on cross-examination defendant said he got them from his book, but afterwards said it was lost, held, the loss was not such surprise as to be ground for a new trial. Sullivan v. O'Conner, 77 Ind. 149.

2. Russell v. Reed, 32 Minn. 45.

Lost Request for Instructions.—The loss of the instructions requested in a case before the overruling of a motion for a new trial is no ground for granting a new trial. Addams v. Suver, 89 Ill. 482.

3. Farnham v. Jones, 32 Minn. 7.

4. Boyce v. Yoder, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 515.

5. Helm v. Jones, 9 Dana (Ky.) 26.

Where evidence was held admissible under a previous decision of the court, and was ruled out by an overruling decision at the trial, a new trial was granted. Starkweather v. Loomis, 2 Vt. 573.

If evidence has been offered and received on a former trial, the plaintiff cannot urge that he is taken by surprise if it be offered again. Nor can the defendant urge such objection in case the plaintiff has offered evidence which has been received on the former trial. And the rule applies with equal force to both plaintiff and defendant. Rabun v. Cage, 23 La. An. 675.

6. Morgan v. Marshall, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 316; Lawrence v. Fulton, 19 Cal. 683; Sanford Mfg. Co. v. Wiggin, 14 N. H. 441; Turnley v. Evans, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 222; *Morgan v. Depositions.—Where a deposition is ruled out on the ground of irregularity, such ruling cannot be a surprise, which will entitle the defeated party to a new trial. Smith v. Natchez Steamboat Co., 1 How. (Miss.) 479. See also Dorsey v. Mawry, 10 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 298; Lawrence v. Fulton, 19 Cal. 683; Lee v. Banks, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 11; Gentry v. McKeken, 5 Dana (Ky.) 34; Blair v. Childs, 10 Heisk. (Tenn.) 199.

(6) Suppression of Evidence by Adversary.—If the adverse party deprives his opponent of material testimony for the purpose of gaining an advantage over him, a new trial will be granted.¹ But the failure of one party to produce material testimony in favor of his adversary is not a ground for a new trial.² So, if a witness purposely withholds material testimony with intent to injure a party, a new trial will be granted.³

(d) SURPRISE ARISING FROM MISTAKE—(1) Mistake of Parties.—A failure to make a defence to an action, through the mistake of a party to the suit arising from negligence, will not be a good ground for a new trial.⁴ But where the mistake arises from a misleading remark or ruling by the court, a new trial will

But where the irregularity consists in lack of authority of the lawyer who attended the taking of the deposition in behalf of the defendant a new trial was granted to allow it to be regularly taken. Bank of Tennessee v. Cowan, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 70.

So the suppression of a deposition that would be of no benefit to the complaining party will not entitle him to a new trial. Hirsch v. Patterson, 23 Ark. 112.

When the court, after granting a motion for the suppression of a deposition as containing matter irrelevant to the issue, permits the matter to go to the jury without a reasonable notice to the party making the motion, the latter is entitled to a new trial. The S. B. Violet v. McKay, 23 Ark. 543.

Where the defendant tries the case upon a certain theory as to the burden of proof and of contributory negligence, he cannot demand a new trial on the ground that the theory was erroneous. Root v. Catskill Mt. R. Co., 33 Fed. Rep. 858.

Positive evidence must be shown that the adverse party has been implicated in keeping the witness away from the trial. Marsh v. Monckton, 1 Tyr. & G. 34.

Where a material witness for the defendant concealed himself in the plaintiff's house to avoid the service of a subpœna, a new trial was granted the defendant. Buller's N. P. 328.

An interference by one party to defeat the service of a subpœna on behalf of the other by inducing the witnesses to avoid will ordinarily be good cause for a new trial. Barron v. Jackson, 40 N. H. 365.

The fact that the plaintiff and his counsel led defendant to believe that certain facts would be admitted, or not seriously disputed, at the trial, and so he was induced to omit preparing evidence of them, is not —there being no fraud—such surprise as calls for a new trial. Taylor v. Harlow, 11 How. (N. Y.) Pr. 285.

On a motion for a new trial on the ground of surprise and mistake, the applicant's attorney made affidavit to the effect that he was surprised and mistaken at the trial because he relied on the statements of opposing counsel, and therefore failed to prepare to prove certain issues; but the affidavit failed to allege definitely what the opposing counsel's statements were, and it did not appear that they were relied on. Held, error to grant a new trial. Smith etc. Implement Co. v. Wheeler, 27 Mo. App. 16.

A new trial is properly refused on the ground of surprise and mistake where the applicant avers that, relying on the statements of opposing counsel, he failed to prepare to prove certain issues, the statements of the opposing counsel not being definitely averred, being oral, and it not appearing with certainty that they were relied on even. Smith etc. Implement Co. v. Wheeler, 27 Mo. App. 16.

Where a party authorized his attorney to settle a suit, and supposing it had been so settled, gave no further attention to it, held, that the above facts constituted no ground for a new trial. Patchin v. Wegman, 19 Mo. 151.

It would seem that a very clear case of accident, mistake or misfortune must be shown to induce the court to interfere."

the competency of a witness,¹ or the relevancy or materiality of certain evidence,² or the effect of a certain law upon the case at bar,³ a new trial will not be granted. In certain instances, however, new trials have been permitted where, owing to peculiar facts in the case, it has appeared that the mistake of counsel was excusable.⁴

(3) *Mistake of Witnesses.*⁵—Where it clearly appears that a witness has made a mistake in giving his testimony, which is material to the issue, and which probably affected the verdict, a new trial will be granted.⁶ The testimony by which it is proposed

In Cutler v. Rice, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 494, the attorney for the defendant in a real action, in consequence of perturbation of mind caused by dangerous illness in his family, neglected to make any claim for an allowance for betterments. Upon the proper showing, it was held that the court could, in its discretion, grant a new trial for the furtherance of justice.

Plaintiff's counsel brought suit for another client against the same defendant, which suit came to such a point that it should have been dropped from the docket, but this was not done. Plaintiff's suit was taken up on exceptions, which were sustained, and the case remanded, whereupon it should have been re-entered on the docket for new trial, but, when plaintiff's counsel looked at the docket, he saw the other case against the same defendant, and, mistaking it for plaintiff's case, failed to re-enter the latter. Held, that there was enough mistake to entitle plaintiff to a new trial, under Pub. St. R. I., ch. 221, § 2. Burrough v. Hill, 15 R. I. 190.

The defendant having been defaulted by reason of a mistake in his attorney, who had informed him of a change of the venue of the case as being to H county instead of D county, the judgment was set aside on the ground of surprise. Hannah v. Indiana Cent. R. Co., 18 Ind. 431.

An appellant from a judgment of a justice of the peace was allowed until the opening of court on the second day of the term to enter his appeal. The entry was made by him on the first day, but was inserted by the clerk in an unusual place on the docket. The appellee's attorney, after examining the docket for the case without success on the first day, left a memorandum with the clerk, requesting him to enter his appearance if the appeal should be entered. The clerk assented, but inadvertently neglected to do so, and the appellee was defaulted. He had no knowledge of the fact until an officer called on him with an execution issued upon the judgment. Held, that he was entitled to an injunction and a new trial. Seymour v. Miller, 32 Conn. 402.

But if the mistake would not by correction decide the controversy, there being no explanation why the fact in regard to which the mistake was made was not proven by other witnesses, a new trial may be refused. Brinson v. Faircloth, 82 Ga. 185. See also O'Kelly v. Felker, 71 Ga. 775.

to prove a mistake of a witness must be shown in the affidavit for a new trial, and also the reason why it was not introduced at the trial.¹ An affidavit of the mistaken witness must be produced showing that the testimony will be different in the next trial and that it is material.²

VL OBJECTIONS TO VERDICT—1. In General.—A new trial is often the best and perhaps the only remedy for such irregularities in verdicts—as disregarding the court's instructions, reaching the verdict by irregular methods, and finding verdicts irregular in form. In such instances, however, the principles of law applied have only this relation to such a title as new trial, that, having first determined what was the duty of court or jury in the premises, the new trial is granted or refused as a result of the application of legal principles, either properly classified under other titles³ or as varied as is the wide range of jurisprudence.⁴

2. Verdict Contrary to Court's Instructions.—Where the verdict is clearly contrary to the court's instructions, it will be set aside and a new trial granted.⁵ It has been held that if the verdict is con-

The mistake of a witness testifying in her own behalf, which is the result of ignorance, inadvertence, or negligence, will not entitle her to a new trial. Valentino v. Weil, 67 Ga. 15; Graham on N. T. 187.

Mistake of witness in matters immaterial to the issue does not furnish a ground for a new trial. Magnay v. Knight, 1 M. & G. 944.

A new trial will not be granted because a witness did not use language to convey the meaning he intended. Sheffield v. Mullin, 28 Minn. 251.

It is only in extreme cases that a mistake of witnesses should be allowed to afford a ground for a new trial. O'Kelly v. Felker, 71 Ga. 771. In this case the court say: "It will not do, except in extraordinary cases, to make such mistake a rule for granting a new trial. It is too tempting to parties to get affidavits of mistake from witnesses, and the temptation and tendency would be too great to bribery and perjury." See also Trevor v. McKay, 15 Ga. 550; Scofield Rolling Mill Co. v. State, 54 Ga. 635.

4. See INSTRUCTIONS, 11 Am. & Eng.

Encyc. of Law 236. It is evident that the correctness of the instructions of a court, which may be called upon in the same charge to deal with several branches of law, cannot be determined by applying abstract principles of law apart from the facts of particular cases, and that any attempt to deal with even one such principle here and away from the title under which it is properly classified might mislead if not accompanied by the full explanation to be found there. Instead, however, of entirely omitting the cases often classified in digests under this title new trials, it was thought better to insert some instances with the warning just given.

In Cunningham v. Magoun, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 13, SHAW, C. J., said: "The great principle, which is at the basis of jury trial, is never to be lost sight of, that to all matters of law the court are to answer, to all controverted facts the jury. The verdict of a jury is practically to be taken for truth."

trary to instructions it will be set aside, although the instructions do not state the law correctly; but other decisions oppose this view.¹ A verdict contrary to the law and the evidence will be set

"Formerly this distinction was effectually preserved by special pleading, whereby juries were compelled to answer yes or no to a precise fact averred on one side and denied on the other, and by attainments and other expedients where juries departed from the truth, through prejudice or corrupt motives. But by the prevailing use, in modern practice, of general declarations and general issues, the jury is in most cases left to find a general verdict, which necessarily embraces the whole matter of law and fact. The mode of trial, therefore, necessarily is, when the evidence is out, for the court to direct the jury hypothetically, adapting the instructions in the point of law to the state of evidence, putting it to the jury to return a verdict for the plaintiff or defendant, as they shall find certain facts proved to their satisfaction or otherwise by the evidence. The consequence obviously is that the jury, in finding a general verdict, do in form return a verdict embracing the matter of law as well as fact; and, therefore, as they may mistake the instructions of the court or may take the law into their own hands, imagining it to be severe and inequitable, they may return a verdict manifestly against the law and truth of the case. To render such a mode of trial safe and tolerable, there must exist a power somewhere to re-examine verdicts with some freedom, and when it is manifest that juries have been warped from the direct line of their duty, by mistake, prejudice, or even by an honest desire to reach the supposed equity, contrary to the law of the case, it will be the duty of the court to set the verdict aside. When, therefore, the evidence is clear, plain and strong, and the law has been clearly and explicitly stated to the jury, and they decide against the law, it imposes upon the court the duty of interfering, because it must be apparent that the jury has either unintentionally erred, by mistaking the terms of their instructions, or misapprehending the weight of the evidence, or that they have mistaken their duty or abused their trust. . . . But where the question is purely matter of fact, where there is evidence for the minds of the jury actually and fairly to weigh and balance—where presumptions are to be raised and inferences drawn, and the jury may be presumed fairly to have exercised their judgment, a court will not feel at liberty to set a verdict aside, although upon the same evidence they would have decided the other way."

Where a verdict of $100 was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, when the jury had been instructed to find a verdict for $200 or for the defendant, a new trial was granted. Wehringer v. Ahlemeyer, 23 Mo. App. 277.

Where the judge who tries a cause recommends a verdict for the plaintiff, with nominal damages, but the jury give substantial damages, such verdict cannot be treated as perverse. Chilvers v. Greaves, 5 M. & G. 305.

When a verdict is found contrary to the direction of the judge, in which he stated that he considered the evidence on one side to preponderate, a new trial may be granted. Coke v. Green, 11 Price 736.

Where the court lays down the proper rule for the measurement of damages, which instruction is disregarded by the jury, a new trial will be granted. Hoffman v. Bosch, 18 Nev. 360.

When a verdict is in conflict with the instructions of the court and the evidence, the court may, upon its own motion, set the verdict aside. Allen v. Wheeler, 54 Iowa 628.

And if the evidence and instructions are not pertinent to the issues presented by the pleadings, overruling a motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict is against such evidence and instructions, is not error. Scott v. Morse, 54 Iowa 732.

An appellate court will not reverse an order of the trial court granting a new trial on account of the jury disregarding instructions. Howell v. Pugh, 25 Kan. 96.

aside;¹ or where it is contrary to law.² An order of the trial court granting a new trial on account of the jury disregarding instructions will not be disturbed by the appellate court.³

3. Verdict Contrary to Weight of Evidence—(a) DEFINITION OF WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.—Weight of evidence is a phrase used to signify that there is proof on one side greater than that on the other.⁴ But it does not consist wholly in volume, nor in the number of witnesses sworn.⁵ The weight of evidence is for the jury.⁶

(b) GENERAL PRINCIPLES AS TO WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.—When a verdict is clearly against the weight of evidence, it is the duty of the court to set it aside and order a new trial.⁷ But the

In the case of Thompson v. Lee, 19 S. Car. 489, it was held that a jury are bound to take the law of the case from the court, and whenever they disregard their instructions as to the law their verdict should be promptly set aside and a new trial granted. See also Dent v. Bryce, 16 S. Car. 14.

Although the instructions of the court are binding upon the jury, yet when the court, by a clerical error, used the word "defendants" where "plaintiff" was meant, and the error and intent were manifest, and the jury followed the intent and not the language, the verdict should not be set aside on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the instructions. In Indiana and California it is not a ground for a new trial that the judgment is contrary to the law or evidence, the statutes of those States not making this a ground. Rosenzweig v. Frazer, 82 Ind. 342. See also Rodefer v. Fletcher, 89 Ind. 563; Martin v. Matfield, 49 Cal. 43.

If it appears that the jury acted under a misapprehension of the law, the verdict may be set aside, in the discretion of the court, although against neither the law nor evidence. Todd v. Boone Co., 8 Mo. 431; State v. Ross, 26 N. J. L. 224. See also Higgins v. Lee, 16 Ill. 495.

If the verdict be in accordance with justice it will stand, though the ruling on a point of law may have been doubtful. Ingraham v. South Carolina Ins. Co., 1 Treadw. Const. (S. Car.) 707; Rogers v. Although the jury are the judges of the weight of evidence they have no right to disregard competent evidence that is unimpeached. New Jersey Flax Co. v. Mills, 26 N. J. L. 60; Chicago etc. R. Co. v. Stumps, 69 Ill. 409; Blake v. McMullen, 91 Ill. 32; Wood v. Barker, 49 Mich. 295; Rankin v. Thompson, 7 Colo. 381; McAfee v. Robertson, 41 Tex. 355. Compare Facey v. Forrester, 3 D. P. C. 668; Cann v. Facey, 5 N. & M. 405.

Even if a witness is impeached but whose testimony is corroborated, his testimony cannot be disregarded by the jury. Yundt v. Hartrunft, 41 Ill. 9; Chittenden v. Evans, 41 Ill. 251; Huddle v. Martin, 54 Ill. 258; Crabtree v. Hagenbaugh, 25 Ill. 233.

And the fact that the jury had a view presents no insuperable obstacle to granting a new trial, on the ground that the verdict is against the evidence. Davis v. Jenney, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 221; Tully v. Fitchburgh R. Co., 134 Mass. 499. Compare Chicago etc. R. Co. v. Hopkins, 90 Ill. 316. If the case is tried by the court and his decision is contrary to the evidence, the finding will be set aside. Benedict v. Lawson, 5 Ark. 514; Wiegler v. Thomsen, 102 Ill. 156; Irving v. Cunningham, 58 Cal. 306.

Great weight is attached to the findings of the trial court because it has the witnesses before it; but this rule does not hold when the decision is based on depositions. Baker v. Rockawand, 118 Ill. 365; McCormick v. Miller, 102 Ill. 208; Knisele v. Sampson, 100 Ill. 573; Sherman v. Mitchell, 46 Cal. 576.

If the verdict of the jury is regarded by the trial court to be against the weight of evidence, an appellate court will set aside the judgment based upon the verdict, although the trial court deferred to the judgment of the jury. Turner v. Turner, 85 Tenn. 387; England v. Burt, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 401; Mount Edgecombe v. Symonds, 1 Price 278, 4 Chitty Gen. Prac. 74.

However, this principle of law is most emphatically denied by other courts. COLBURN, J., says: "The contention of the defendant, that he was entitled to a new trial, upon the statement of the judge that he was of the opinion that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, cannot be sustained. A judge has a right to set aside a verdict, which, in his opinion, is against the weight of evidence, and in some cases it is his duty to do so; but whether he shall do so in any given case is a question addressed to his judicial discretion. To require him as a matter of law to set aside every verdict, which is in his opinion against the weight of evidence, would result practically in the trial of facts by the court instead of the jury." Reeve v. Dennett, 137 Mass. 315. See also Cunningham v. Magoun, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 13; Muskegon Nat. Bank v. North West Mut etc. Co., 10 Daly (N. Y.) 540; Miller v. Citizens' etc. Ins. Co., 12 W. Courts generally exercise the power to set aside a verdict as being contrary to the evidence not only with caution but with a certainty that the jury has acted with passion or prejudice, or with some motive other than awarding impartial justice to the parties. Reese v. Third Ave. R. Co., 16 Fed. Rep. 368; McAlexander v. Puryear, 48 Miss. 420; 2 Bouv. L. Dict. 658; Schultz v. Pacific Ins. Co., 14 Fla. 73; Green v. Taney, 7 Colo. 278; Barth v. preponderance of evidence against the verdict must be very strong.¹ If the weight of evidence on any one point essential to sustain the verdict, is clearly against the verdict, a new trial should be granted.² Although the verdict may be against the weight of evidence, a new trial will not be accorded the plaintiff who is only entitled to nominal damages,³ unless some question

When a preponderance of evidence is in favor of the verdict, the court has no discretion to set it aside as unsustainable by the evidence. Sparlock v. West, 80 Ga. 302. But if the only evidence be that of the plaintiff, and it is in some respects contradictory and inconsistent, the court may, in its discretion, set the verdict aside. Conklin v. In ejectment, upon a plea of the statute of limitations, the court instructed the jury that good faith entered into the question of adverse holding. The jury found specially that the possession of the defendant was not upon a claim of right in good faith; they also found that his possession was adverse to plaintiff, and had continued five years. Held, that if good faith was material the verdict was contradictory, and if not the instructions were erroneous and a new trial should be granted. Cattle v. Morris, 57 Cal. 317.

In an action upon a note the defence was based upon alleged fraud, false representations, duress and want of consideration, none of which defences were sustained by the evidence. Held, that a verdict against the plaintiff should be set aside. Perkins v. Trinka, 30 Minn. 241.

of right is involved.¹ Nor will a new trial be granted to a defendant against whom the jury have found a less sum than the evidence showed to be due, if anything were due;² and if the verdict be for the defendant, against evidence, a new trial will not be granted if the plaintiff has received no real injury.³ A verdict will not be set aside on account of difference of opinion of the trial judge and the jury upon the merits of the case, unless the court can clearly say that the jury were not justified in their findings.⁴

(c) WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE AND CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.—As a general rule, where the evidence is conflicting, a court will not grant a new trial, even though the weight of evidence is against the verdict,⁵ especially if there is only a preponderance of evi-

In a conspiracy case the jury rendered a large verdict against two of the defendants and only $100 against the third, who sought to have the verdict set aside on the ground that the small amount of the verdict indicated that the jury did not find the issues against him. Held, that the verdict should stand. Fisher v. Meyer, 20 Blatchf. (U. S.) 512.

3. Burton v. Thompson, 2 Burr. 664.

If the verdict be for the plaintiff upon a presumption contrary to evidence, the court will not grant a new trial if the plaintiff is entitled to recover in conscience and equity. *Wilkinson v. WARNER, J., says: "When there is evidence on both sides in relation to the matter in controversy between the parties and a verdict of the jury is not decidedly and strongly against the weight of evidence, this court will not control the discretion of the court below, in refusing to grant a new trial." Treadwell v. Phinzy, 41 Ga. 63. See also Holmes v. Booher, 41 Ga. 125; Sherman v. Mitchel, 46 Cal. 576; Marble v. Fay, 49 Cal. 585; Atlantic etc. R. Co. v. Holcombe, 76 Ga. 590; People v. Ah Ti, 9 Cal. 16. But when it is clear that justice has not been done, the appellate court will control the discretion of the trial court. Vincent v. Chicago etc. R. Co., 29 Iowa 592. And in such cases conflict of testimony should not prevent the trial court from setting aside the verdict. Dewey v. Chicago etc. R. Co., 31 Iowa 373; Sherman v. Mitchel, 46 Cal. 576; Mullins v. Wieland, 68 Cal. 231, and cases cited.

Although the evidence is conflicting, it is not necessarily an abuse of discretion for the trial court to grant a new trial on the ground that the verdict is against the weight of evidence. Mullins v. Wieland, 68 Cal. 231. See also Bander v. Tyrrel, 59 Cal. 99; Marble v. Fay, 49 Cal. 585.

In Hull & Co. v. Alexander, 26 Iowa 569, the court says: "Without seeing and hearing the witnesses testify, but looking alone to the evidence as we have it in this record, we should find the other way. But there is a direct conflict in the testimony, and many of the witnesses on either side are directly or indirectly interested. In such cases the jury are peculiarly fitted to determine the credibility of the witnesses and weight of testimony, and the case must be very strong indeed to justify the reversal of a judgment on this ground by an appellate court." See also Hall v. Hodge, 2 Tex. 323.

After two concurring verdicts upon conflicting testimony the court will not set aside the verdict the second time on the weight of evidence, when there has been no attempt to show new evidence. Milliken v. Ross, 4 Woods (U. S.) 69.

If the case is tried by the court without a jury, a verdict based upon conflicting evidence will not be disturbed. Rowan v. Teague, 24 Ind. 304; Tuten v. Stone, 12 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 448; Paul v. Perez, 7 Tex. 338. See also Sawin v. Izard, 26 Ark. 371; Hamilton v. Iowa City Nat. Bank, 40 Iowa 307; Sisters of Visitation v. Glass, 45 Iowa 154; *Murray v. A verdict supported by some evidence will stand, though it may be against the weight of evidence. Buck v. Steffey, 65 Ind. 58; Frank v. Purkhiser, 83 Ind. 496; Addems v. Suver, 89 Ill. 482; Buchanan v. McLennan, 105 Ill. 56;

Courts should be reluctant to set aside a verdict where there is evidence to support it, or the evidence is of doubtful interpretation. Gore v. Moses, 1 W. Ter. 7.

When the evidence is voluminous and conflicting and of such a nature that it would support a verdict either way, the verdict will not be disturbed by the supreme court. Buchanan v. McLannan, 105 Ill. 56; Calvert v. Carpenter, 96 Ill. 63.

But in a criminal case, where the evidence is conflicting and contradictory, so that if the jury had been properly instructed the supreme court would not have felt justified in interfering with the verdict, yet if there be enough of evidence for the defendant to arouse a reasonable doubt whether the jury would have returned such verdict if properly instructed, and they have not been so instructed, a new trial will be granted. Chambers v. People, 105 Ill. 409.

Where there is evidence on both sides, though the verdict be against the weight of evidence, it will not be disturbed for that cause alone. Higgin v. Higgin, 2 A. K. Marsh. 500; McC Campbell v. McC Campbell, 2 A. K. Marsh. 551; Berry v. Elliott, 25 Ark. 89; Thompson v. Anthony, 48 Ill. 468; O'Brien v. Palmer, 49 Ill. 72; Miller v. Balthasser, 78 Ill. 302.

Where the evidence is so conflicting that a verdict for the defendant might be sustained, a new trial will not be granted because the verdict is contrary to the evidence. Owens v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 67 Tex. 679; McCarthy v. Mooney, 49 Ill. 247; Berry v. Elliott, 25 Ark. 89; Barth v. Jones, 7 Cal. 464; Buchanan v. McLennan, 105 Ill. 56.

In the case of Fort Wayne etc. R. Co. v. Husselman, 65 Ind. 73 it was held that the appellate court would not disturb the verdict on the mere weight of evidence. HAWK, J., in giving the opinion of the court, says: "How can this court or its judges possibly know that the evidence in support of the verdict or finding has been 'clearly and overwhelmingly, or conclusively contradictory?' To arrive at such a conclusion, must we not weigh the evidence? If so, how can we, as an appellate court, by merely reading the written evidence, without any personal knowledge of the intelligence or character of the witnesses, or any of those living indicia before us by which men ordinarily judge of the truthfulness and credibility of evidence, determine that the evidence in support of the verdict or finding has been 'clearly and overwhelmingly, or conclusively contradictory?' . . . When a jury have passed upon this question, and returned their verdict, and when the court under whose eye and within whose hearing the evidence has been introduced and the cause has been tried, has refused to disturb the verdict upon the weight or sufficiency of the evidence, we are clearly of the opinion that it is neither our province nor our duty to reverse the judgment of the trial court, merely because it may seem to us from our reading of the record that the evidence is clearly and overwhelmingly or conclusively contradicted." See also Evansville etc. R. Co. v. Smith, 65 Ind. 92; Atherton v. Allen, 65 Ind. 240; Dooley v. Jennings, 6 Mo. 61. Compare Toledo etc. R. Co. v. Goddard, 25 Ind. 185.

In negligence cases, if there be a presumption of negligence and the evidence is conflicting, the supreme court will not disturb a verdict which is satisfactory to the trial court. Georgia R. Co. v. Cox, 64 Ga. 619.

Where there is a conflict of evidence and the evidence of the plaintiff standing by itself is sufficient to support the verdict, the appellate court will not reverse the decision of the trial court. Calvert v. Carpenter, 96 Ill. 63. See also Sparks v. Etheredge, 82 Ga. 294; McCann v. Meehan, 53 Wis. 541; Merrell v. Nightingale, 39 Wis. 247; Harrington v. Chambers, 3 Utah 94; Grove v. Kansas, 75 Mo. 672.

Where a verdict of the jury is founded upon the testimony of a witness directly contradicted by another witness, and the trial court sets the verdict aside, the supreme court will not reverse the order granting a new trial. McCreary v. Hart, 39 Kan. 216. See also Pearce v. Vaughn, 25 Ga. 27; Georgia R. Co. v. Cox, 64 Ga. 619.

If there be a conflict of testimony upon material points the verdict will not be disturbed. Pinschower v. Hanks, 18 Nev. 99; Holland v. Brooks, 40 Ga. 94; Lyle v. Rollins, 25 Cal. 437.

If the court is satisfied that the jury has failed to comprehend the force of the evidence or the charge of the court, a new trial will be granted. Gaither v. Kansas City etc. R. Co., 27 Fed. Rep. 544. Compare Chicago etc. R. Co. v. Bock, 17 Ill. App. 17; Gregory v. Tuffs, 1 C. M. & R. 300; 2 D. P. C. 711; 4 Tyr. 820.

A general verdict will stand if there be sufficient evidence to support it on one of the issues. Crosett v. Whelan, 44 Cal. 200; Missouri etc. T. R. Co. v. Weaver, 16 Kan. 456. And the general verdict will not be disturbed, if in proper form, because the jury failed to answer the interrogatories. Redford etc. R. Co. v. Rainbolt, 99 Ind. 551.

Nor will the fact that special findings are indefinite, uncertain, conflicting or merely expressions of opinions, or are not within the issues, or are not sufficient answer to the questions put, be a ground for a new trial, the verdict being general. Keesling v. Ryan, 84 Ind. 89. Compare Union Pac. R. Co. v. Fray, 31 Kan. 739; McCarty v. James, 62 Iowa 257; Atchison etc. R. Co. v. Brown, 33 Kan. 757.

Where the special findings are inconsistent and contradictory a new trial will be granted. Aultman v. Mickey, 41 Kan. 348; Stoss v. Allman, 64 Cal. 47; *Chicago etc. R. Co. v. When a special verdict is defective because it does not find all the facts necessary to cover the issues, a new trial may be refused if the error alleged does the complaining party no injury. Harness v. Harness, 81 Ind. 160. See dence against the verdict.¹ But if the verdict is manifestly against the weight of evidence it may be set aside, notwithstanding the evidence is conflicting;² and also if it appear that the jury have been influenced by partiality, passion, or some undue bias,³ and if there be not sufficient evidence to support it.⁴

4. Verdict Irregular in Form.—If a jury return special findings, so inconsistent with each other and with the general verdict that judgment cannot be entered, a new trial will be granted.¹ If the verdict contain but one finding, when other questions of fact are necessary to enter up judgment, it is defective.² Ungrammatical findings of a jury do not vitiate the verdict when the sense is clear.³ A verdict defective in form which, by correction, makes another and different verdict, will be set aside.⁴ It is the duty of the court to see that improper and informal verdicts are not entered upon its records.⁵ Where the verdict is so uncertain that the real intent cannot be determined by it, a new trial should be granted.⁶

5. Verdict Not Regularly Found.—A new trial will be granted when a jury has arrived at their verdict by some process out of the common course, which leads to the conclusion that they have not discharged the legal functions of a jury. There are many varieties of ways in which this principle is applied, but the commonest examples are where the jury have cast lots, or followed any gambling process.¹ Although it has been held that in a claim for unliquidated damages, the average judgment of the jurors may be taken,² a similar process has been permitted to decide the length of a term of imprisonment;³ although in the last case the jury cannot previously agree to stand by the result.⁴ It has been stated to reform a deed was in the form, "We the jury, find for complainant, and recommend that the deed be reformed," it was held too uncertain, and a new trial was ordered. Payne v. Elyea, 50 Ga. 395.

VII. NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE—1. General Principles.—

Where, since the trial, the unsuccessful party has discovered new evidence which would, in all probability, have changed the result, he may move for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. But such an application is looked upon by the courts with distrust and disfavor,² and is only granted under the following restrictions:

1. The evidence must have been discovered since the former trial.

2. The party must have used due diligence to procure it on the former trial.

3. It must be material to the issue.

4. It must go to the merits of the cause, and not merely to impeach the character of a witness.

5. It must not be merely cumulative.

6. It must be such as ought to produce on another trial an opposite result on the merits.³

Suit on a promissory note by the payee against the makers. Answer, general denial. Finding and judgment for the plaintiff. Complaint for a new trial, alleging that one of the defendants was surety for the other defendant, and that since the term at which the cause was tried he had discovered that, after the maturity of the note, his principal and the payee had, upon a consideration stated, agreed for an extension of the time of payment, without his knowledge or consent. Held, that said complaint stated newly discovered matter, not newly discovered evidence, and was bad on demurrer. Rich v. Starbuck, 50 Ind. 126.

A motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence will not be sustained where it appears that the testimony relied upon is that of the party's wife, and it does not appear that her evidence was unknown until after the trial. Richards v. Smith, 67 Tex. 610. And it was held in the same case that a motion will not be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence where the party himself, who was present at the trial and heard the witnesses of the opposite party, is to give the testimony relied upon.

Where the party is simply not apprised of the fact that certain evidence was material to his cause, he cannot obtain a new trial upon the ground that such evidence is newly-discovered. Robinson v. State, 15 Tex. 311.

It has been held that a new trial will not be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence where the party has once had a continuance, in order to procure the testimony of the witness whose evidence is now relied upon to obtain the new trial. State v. Ginger (Iowa, 1890), 46 N. W. Rep. 657.

Where husband and wife were plaintiffs upon a cause of action belonging to the wife, and for which she might have sued alone, new trial was refused where it was not averred that the newly discovered evidence was not fully known to the husband at the time of the trial, but merely that the wife had since discovered it. Berry v. Daily, 30 Ind. 183.

Where a party is aware that two or more persons know facts important to be proved by him, and goes to trial without calling such witnesses, he cannot obtain a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, because after the trial he discovers another person who could testify to the same facts. Hanley v. Life Assoc. of America, 69 Mo. 380.

A record in a public office cannot be newly discovered evidence on account of which a new trial will be granted, for the parties must be presumed to be acquainted with it. Vardeman v. Edwards, 21 Tex. 737.

A new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence will not be granted to the assignee of a cause of action ten years after the rendition of final judgment against his assignor, and nine years after the evidence was known to the assignor. Evans v. United States L. Ins. Co., 21 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 315 discovered just before the close of the trial, even after the argument of counsel, it will not be a ground for a new trial as "newly discovered evidence." The proper course in such a case being to ask the court to allow the testimony to go to the jury; or, if the witnesses are not at hand, for a continuance.¹ And a mere belief that new evidence exists is not a discovery,² nor is evidence newly discovered which was known to a party, but not to his attorney, or vice versa.³ As a general rule, it may be said that a new trial will not be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence, where the new evidence is that of a witness who has been examined on the former trial. But this proposition might more properly be considered under the next head, for it may well be considered negligent to fail to examine a witness upon a material point;⁴ and where no negligence is shown on the part of

A petition to the supreme court for a new trial, where the reason assigned is the discovery of new evidence, must, under the statute of Vermont, be preferred, and the citation be served on the adverse party within two years from the rendition of final judgment in the county court; and though the case may have passed to the supreme court on exceptions, and the citation be served within two years from the time the judgment was affirmed in that court, it is not sufficient if it exceed two years from the time of the judgment in the county court. Mower v. Warner, 16 Vt. 495.

A petition for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence filed more than four years after trial will be refused without considering whether or not the application is a meritorious one. Fisher v. Corwin, 35 Hun (N. Y.) 253.

Where a party sought a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, because he did not know that his wife was competent as a witness until after trial, it was refused. Gibson v. Williams, 39 Ga. 660.

If the witness who is offered as newly discovered was incompetent before the trial, but has since become competent, his evidence will not be regarded as newly discovered. Sawyer v. Merrill, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 16.

A new trial will not be granted upon the affidavit of a witness who was examined in the cause, in which he shows he will greatly strengthen his testimony. It would show negligence on the part of the party introducing him, and, if touching matters about which the party seeking a new trial, it may be granted though the witness had testified at the former trial.¹

(b) DUE DILIGENCE MUST HAVE BEEN USED.—It is not enough that the evidence should have been discovered since the former trial, but it must appear that the evidence is such, that, by the exercise of due diligence on the part of the applicant, it could not have been procured for the first trial.² Thus, as has been seen in the last he testified, would be cumulative. Martin v. Nance, 3 Head (Tenn.) 649.

The fact that a witness on a trial forgot to state a material fact on account of intoxication, is no ground for a new trial. McQueen v. Stewart, 7 Ind. 535.

On petition for a new trial, a witness used at the former trial may be admitted as new as to what has come to his knowledge since. Foster v. Hough, 1 Root (Conn.) 173.

A witness, being called to prove a receipt a forgery, pronounced it genuine, but failed to disclose his knowledge of the fact that it was given for more money than was received, supposing that he would not be permitted to give such evidence. In an action on a policy which had been lost, the plaintiff showed that he had made diligent search. Subsequent to a verdict for the plaintiff, the policy was found in an unusual place, and showed that it was payable to another than the plaintiff, whose receipt was on it. Held, that a new trial should be granted. Protection L. Ins. Co. v. Dill, 91 Ill. 174.

Evidence which counsel did not, on a trial, think would be material, and did not know of and so did not obtain, although it might easily have been discovered, will not, generally, be allowed to furnish ground for a new trial, although its materiality may arise from the views of the court in deciding the cause. Codman v. Vermont etc. R. Co., 17 Blatchf. C. Ct. 1.

Although a witness, whose evidence would have been material, was present in court during the trial of the cause, and although the defeated party might possibly have been led to suspect, from what was stated on the trial, that the witness could give evidence in his favor, yet if he had no knowledge that the witness could give such testimony, he will not be deemed guilty of laches because he failed to discover and avail himself of such a possibility. Bonyng v. Waterbury, 12 Hun (N. Y.) 534.

One who seeks a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence must rebut all presumptions against him, and when a witness is subpoenaed but fails to attend, it is the duty of the party to show that he took steps to secure his attendance by compulsory process. Marks v. State, 101 Ind. 353.

Counter affidavits on the question of diligence will be heard. Zeller v. Griffin, 89 Ind. 80; Finch v. Green, 16 Minn. 355; 3 Gra. & Wat. N. T. 1869.

A statement in an affidavit for new trial, on the ground of newly discovered evidence, that the party made enquiries among such persons as would be likely to know about the facts in the case, and that he did not know and did not learn that said witnesses knew or would swear to the facts stated until after the trial, is too general and indefinite to show proper diligence to discover the evidence. Pemberton v. Johnson, 113 Ind. 538.

A new trial will not be granted on account of newly discovered evidence, where it appears that the witnesses were known at the time of the former trial, but could not be found, and that no delay was asked on that account. State v. Lamothe, 37 La. An. 43.

Where the plaintiff knew the connection of a witness to the subject matter of an action, his affidavit that such witness had found some memoranda which would enable him to testify more fully as to the details, will not support a motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. Mercantile Bank v. Hawe, 33 Mo. App. 214.

A new trial was refused where, after verdict had been rendered for the value of a lot of oats, the defendant had them weighed and found them to be of less value than was found by the jury, it being held that their weight should have been ascertained before the trial. Norris v. Hix, 74 Iowa 524. See also Heathcote v. Haskins, 74 Iowa 566.

The question whether or not proper diligence has been used in seeking for evidence before trial is one for the trial court to decide, and its decision will stand. Smith v. State, 81 Ga. 479.

Diligence, or the want of it, in discovering testimony in a particular case, depends in so great a degree upon the various circumstances surrounding the parties, and the conduct of the cause, which are peculiarly within the knowledge of the trial court, that its determination on the matter of granting a new trial made in view of them will rarely be disturbed. Jones v. Singleton, 45 Cal. 92. See also Anderson v. State, 43 Conn. 514.

Upon the question of reasonable diligence, the physical and pecuniary condition of the party, his knowledge as to the essential facts of the case, and the difficulty of establishing them by competent testimony, are all proper to be considered. Detroit Savings Bank v. Truesdail, 38 Mich. 430. Compare Ready Roofing Co. v. Taylor, 15 Blatchf. (U. S.) 94; Hunter v. Randall, 69 Me. 183; Rollins v. State, 61 Ga. 430; Etna Ins. Co. v. Sparks, 62 Ga. 187.

Where a party forgets the presence of a witness at an important conversation until after the trial, he cannot obtain a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, where the testimony of such witness is relied upon. Munn v. Worrall, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 321. See also Wilcox v. Joslin, 10 N. Y. Supp. 342. See, however, Huebner v. Roosevelt, 7 Daly (N. Y.) 111.

Where before trial a party had his suspicions aroused as to the circumstances of the taking of a deposition, where the deponent has since died, that evidence has been newly discovered with regard to such deposition, is not a ground for a new trial if he neglected to make inquiries. Parker v. Chambers, 24 Ga. 518.

Where a witness was summoned by the applicant and was present at a former trial, but was not interrogated, his testimony cannot be relied upon as ground for a new trial. State v. Dorsey (La. 1890), 7 So. Rep. 326.

Where a party is allowed a new trial to prove a fact by a witness, and he is not produced nor his absence accounted for, no other trial will be granted to prove the same fact by a different witness. There is a want of due diligence. Valega v. Broussard, 3 La. An. 145.

A complaint for a new trial, upon the ground of newly discovered evidence, alleging that the plaintiff's attorney had made careful search for the witness in the city of his last known place of residence, as shown by the evidence therein set out, more than two months prior to the trial, and had then learned that he was in Switzerland, does not sufficiently show due diligence, especially as it is not shown that the plaintiff moved promptly to obtain the relief sought after the evidence first came to his knowledge. Allen v. Bond, 112 Ind. 523.

A new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence is properly refused when the only reason given for not having the proposed witness present at the trial was that the moving party did not and could not anticipate that his adversary would testify as he did. Hawxhurst v. Hennion, 9 N. Y. Supp. 542.

Want of diligence cannot be charged against a party who fails to procure existing testimony to disprove a fact of which he is not advised by the pleadings. Guman v. Maquoketa Sav. Bank, 38 Iowa 368. See also Menk v. Commercial Ins. Co., 70 Cal. 585; Dunham v. State, 3 Tex. App. 465.

United States Court of Claims.—Under the authority given to the court of claims to grant a new trial upon the motion of the United States, in a case to which the United States is a party, where it appears that injustice has been done to the United States, the measure of diligence to which parties ordinarily are held does not apply. Where the new trial is asked upon the ground of newly discovered evidence, the question is whether the evidence was known to the attorney general or his assistants at the time of trial. Knowledge by other officers, or want of diligence, will not defeat the motion. If the evidence was not presented because not deemed material, a new trial will not be granted. (Overruling Silvey v. United States, 7 Ct. of Cl. 305.) Ford v. United States, 18 Ct. of Cl. 62.

Where it was shown that the prevailing party had introduced false testimony upon a material issue which the defeated party could not then contradict, but could upon a new trial prove to be false, a new trial was rightly granted. First Nat. Bank etc. v. Wabash etc. R. Co., 61 Iowa 700.

Where the evidence is an account book kept by the opposite party, which is shown to have been in his possession, allegations in the complaint for a new trial that enquiries concerning a new book had been made of such party upon the trial when he was testifying as a witness and that he had denied that such a book was ever in existence, show diligence. Blackburn v. Crowder, 110 Ind. 127.

In support of a motion for a new trial for newly discovered evidence, it appeared by affidavit that the new witness was a boy of fifteen of whom enquiries had been made before the trial, to which he answered that he knew nothing about the cause, believing that what he did know had no bearing thereon. It was held that proper diligence had been shown. Kochel v. Bartlett, 88 Ind. 237.

The fact that the moving party had forgotten the evidence he seeks to introduce in the trial, is not a sufficient excuse for his negligence. Moan v. Abbey, 63 Cal. 56. See also Duignan v. Wyatt, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 385; Hatfield v. Nevey, 52 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 193; Bond v. Cutler, 7 Mass. 205; Gregg v. Bankhead, 22 Tex. 245; Sawyer v. La Flesh, 65 Wis. 659; Chamberlain v. Lindsay, 1 Hun (N. Y.) 231; Johnson v. Blanchard, 5 R. I. 24.

The affidavit of the attorney that he had no information of the evidence, and could not by reasonable diligence have discovered it, is not sufficient to support the motion for a new trial. The affidavit must show that the party himself had no such information. Morgan v. Bell, 41 Kan. 345.

That a witness had refreshed his memory since the trial by reference to a document which could have been obtained before, is not such newly discovered evidence as to be a ground for new trial. Hendy v. Desmond, 62 Cal. 261; Richards v. Hunt, 65 Ga. 342; Shields v. State, 45 Conn. 266.

Where a party is denying the validity of a marriage alleged to have been performed by a named minister in a certain city at a specified time, and knows before the trial that the testimony of such minister is important, he cannot, after the term, obtain a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, unless he excludes negligence on his part in ascertaining the whereabouts of the minister, shows that he moved promptly to obtain his testimony, and that he could not by the exercise of reasonable diligence procure the same at the trial. Allen v. Bond, 112 Ind. 523.

Where the Evidence Relied Upon Is That of a Co-party.—"The evidence offered as newly discovered, under the motion for a new trial, appears to have been known to the officers of the bank at the time of the trial. But one of the witnesses introduced to support the motion, was a stockholder in the bank at the time, and was not called upon to testify. He has since sold his stock to the bank. It was incumbent on the bank, if it had desired his testimony, to have caused his interest to be removed subdivision, if a party had an opportunity to examine a witness at the trial, he cannot, in general, obtain a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, where the evidence relied upon is that of such witness.¹ When the evidence relied upon is matter of record, the applicant must show a very strong case, indeed, to remove the presumption of negligence which must attach to his failure to produce such evidence at the former trial.² And, if

at the time of the trial, or to forego the benefit of it. And such interest may generally be removed in season, by ordinary exertion; but if it cannot be, the witness is excluded when offered, by a well established rule of law, and a subsequent removal of it does not furnish any legal ground for disturbing a verdict." Franklin Bank v. Pratt, 31 Me. 501.

Where the alleged new evidence is that of a codefendant, and it does not appear that a severance was asked for previous to the trial, nor that application was made before it was ended that a verdict of acquittal might be found against such party in order that she might testify on behalf of her codefendants; nor that the applicants became aware after the trial of the fact that the witness would testify in their behalf, it was held that there was not due diligence on the part of the applicant, and a new trial would be refused. State v. Woodworth, 28 La. An. 89. See also State v. Bean, 36 N. H. 122.

Where an accomplice pleads guilty, and his evidence which is relied upon to obtain the new trial was known to the applicant on his trial, a new trial will not be granted, as the accomplice's evidence was available at the former trial. Hudgins v. State, 61 Ga. 182.

1. Poullain v. Poullain, 79 Ga. 11.

A and B were jointly indicted for a crime. A, being tried separately, was found guilty. It appeared that A had reason, if innocent, to believe that B was guilty, and had opportunity on the trial to examine B, but neglected to do so. Held, a new trial would not be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence. People v. Miller, 33 Cal. 99.

A general allegation that a party used due diligence to obtain testimony, is not sufficient on an application for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence of a witness, who was subpoenaed by the party moving, and in court at the trial. "And a very strong case, indeed, should be made to justify a new trial on this ground when the witness relied upon was subpoenaed and in court." Diligence must be conclusively shown. Carson v. Cross, 14 Iowa 463.

Where the witness relied upon to furnish new evidence was the intimate friend and physician of the accused, and was examined touching the res gestæ, but failed to disclose this new matter, a new trial was refused. Collins v. State, 6 Tex. App. 72.

Where the corporation is the applicant and the new evidence relied upon is that of its officers, who were examined at the former trial, and the books of the corporation, a new trial will not be granted. Cheney v. Nebraska etc. Stone Co., 41 Fed. Rep. 740.

2. Robinoe v. Doe, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 85; Simpkins v. Wilson, 11 Ind. 541; Fuller v. Harris, 29 Fed. Rep. 814; Johnson v. Flint, 75 Tex. 379; Morgan v. Houston, 25 Vt. 570; Weimer v. Lowery, 11 Cal. 104. See also Bogert v. Simons, 1 Mill. Const. (S. Car.) 143; Peyton v. Kruger, 77 Ind. 486.

Newly discovered testimony, consisting of deeds on record affecting the very lands in dispute, will not warrant the granting of a new trial, for such records are always accessible to both parties, and diligence would examine and procure them in time for the trial. Shields v. Lamar, 58 Ga. 590.

Where, in a suit to recover for beer sold, a verdict was directed for defendant because there was no proof that plaintiff had a permit to sell from the board of supervisors, as required by Code Iowa, § 1526, a new trial was properly granted, on the ground of newly discovered evidence, where it appeared that before the trial, diligent search was vainly made in the auditor's office for the record of the application for and granting of the permit, but that after the trial a new search was instituted, and the original papers found in a room formerly occupied by the auditor's department, but which had for some time been used as a janitor's

the same facts could have been proven at the trial by other evidence than that newly discovered, a new trial will not be granted, unless the applicant can satisfactorily explain why he did not attempt to use the evidence at his hand.¹ room. Grotte v. Schmidt (Iowa, 1890), 45 N. W. Rep. 771.

Where a deed has been lost and could not be procured at the time of trial, but which was subsequently found, and it being shown that the index in the register's office was so mutilated that the record of the deed could not be found without searching the deed books leaf by leaf, a new trial was granted. Elliott v. Harris, 81 Ky. 470.

1. Nixon v. Christie, 84 Ga. 469; Herman v. Mason, 37 Wis. 273; McLain v. Lawson, 25 Iowa 279.

It is not a sufficient ground for a new trial that a witness resident in another State was discovered in the county too late to have him examined, unless it be shown that his deposition could not have been taken. Conwell v. Anderson, 2 Ind. 122.

Any affidavit that the affiant had supposed the subscribing witness to a deed to be dead, and discovered the contrary only during the trial, and it appeared that no preparation had been made to prove the handwriting of the witness, is not sufficient to support a motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. Bledsoe v. Doe, 4 How. Miss. 13.

The loss of relevant testimony in the form of letters, would, after diligent search, authorize proof of their contents, and their discovery after verdict and judgment, no reason being shown why they were not proved at the trial, is no ground for a bill for a new trial, especially if they were merely corroborative in a conflict of parol evidence, and not decisive of the controversy. Wimpy v. Gaskill, 76 Ga. 41.

A motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence will not be granted where it appears that the evidence relied on is that of the wife of the party making the motion, who came to the place of trial for the purpose of testifying, but was unable to take the stand on account of illness, it appearing that no postponement on account of her illness was asked for, and no effort made to take her testimony in any of the modes provided by law. Richards v. Smith, 67 Tex. 610.

A new trial will not be granted a party on the ground of newly discovered evidence, consisting of a lost document which he knew at the time of the trial to be in existence, and the contents of which, upon proof of loss, he could have proved by parol. Chapman v. Moore, 107 Ind. 223.

U. S. Courts.—Carr v. Gale, 1 Curt. (U. S.) 384.

Where a witness testified to one state of facts at the trial and made statements afterwards contradicting the statements formerly made, such fact furnishes no ground for a new trial. Lassiter v. Simpson, 3 S. E. Rep. 242; Duryee v. Dennison, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 249; Lake v. Hardee, 55 Ga. 667; Commonwealth v. Randall, Thach. Cr. Cas. (Mass.) 500; Hustead v. Mead, 58 Conn. 55.

The rule that newly discovered testimony, for the purpose of impeaching a witness who had testified on the trial, is insufficient to justify the allowance of a new trial, is applicable to the statements of persons in extremis. State v. Burt (La. 1889), 6 So. Rep. 631.

Newly discovered evidence going merely to the credit of a witness, even of a sole witness, is not cause for a new trial. Hunt v. State, 81 Ga. 140.

Newly discovered evidence, going to explain and add to conversations from which fraudulent misrepresentations of the credit of a person had been inferred and a verdict accordingly rendered, is neither cumulative nor impeaching, so as to justify the refusal of a new trial. Simmons v. Fay, 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 107.

As a general rule, a new trial will not be granted to afford opportunity of impeaching a witness, though cases may arise so imperative as to require the interposition of the court to prevent a palpable wrong. Cochran v. Ammon, 16 Ill. 316.

Contradictory evidence by the same witness, at different trials, to a point material, is cause for a new trial, provided the party aggrieved could not show the fact at the trial. Durkee v. Fessenden, Brayt. (Vt.) 167.

It is a general rule that a new trial will not be granted on account of newly discovered evidence to impeach a witness sworn on the former trial.

Whether this rule would be departed from where the verdict was rendered upon the sole testimony of the adverse party: Quære. It clearly ought not to be where such testimony, though the principal evidence in the case was supported by other evidence; nor where the party seeking the new trial had good reason to expect that the adverse party

Especially if this evidence is directly denied by the witness sought to be impeached.¹ But if the newly discovered evidence proves a distinct and material fact, even though it have the additional effect of impeaching the testimony of the adverse party, a new trial should be granted.² And a new trial has been granted where the principal witness made an affidavit that her testimony, as given on the trial, was incorrect;³ and where a material witness has been convicted of perjury in the cause upon his own confession.⁴

would be the principal witness in the case, and did not use reasonable diligence to ascertain his reputation for veracity and to be prepared to impeach him. Tappin v. Clark, 32 Conn. 367.

Rule Held Not to Apply in S. Carolina.—"The fourth ground of appeal is based upon the proposition that a new trial should not be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence, the effect of which is to impeach or contradict a witness examined at the former hearing. Whatever may be the rule elsewhere, it is quite certain that such is not the rule in this State, nor does it seem to be the rule in England. In Fox v. Levingsworth, 2 Bay (S. Car.) 520, a new trial was granted because evidence was discovered after the trial, showing that one Rountree, a witness, who had testified at the former trial, was interested in the event of the suit, though he had stated, when examined on his voir dire, that he had no interest. In Durant v. Ashmore, 2 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 184, a new trial was granted on the ground of after-discovered written evidence, which might have affected the credit of a witness examined at the former trial. So, in Fabrilus v. Cock, 3 Burr. 1771, a new trial was granted because evidence was discovered after the former trial, going to show the subornation of witnesses who testified at the first trial." Durant v. Philpot, 16 S. Car. 116, 125.

New York Military Tract.—In New York, it has been held, in causes concerning the title to military lands where the identity of the original patentee is in question, that a new trial may be granted to give the defendant an opportunity of impeaching the character of the principal witness for the plaintiff. Jackson v. Kinney, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 186. See also Jackson v. Hooker, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 207.

Where the evidence is of a distinct and independent fact, as the existence of an account book, a new trial may be granted even if such evidence does impeach the testimony of one of the parties. Blackburn v. Crowder, 110 Ind. 127.

Where the plaintiff's judgment follows the complaint, a new trial will not be granted for newly discovered evidence that tends to contradict the case made by the complaint. Bates v. Bates, 71 Cal. 307.

In case by a mother for the seduction of her daughter, the daughter swore that she was gotten with child on the evening of June 13th. On a motion for a new trial, the defendant introduced affidavits of several persons proving an alibi at that time, and himself made affidavit that he had no reason to suppose that she would fix this as the time of the connection, and therefore was not prepared, and did not attempt, to prove the alibi on the trial. Held, that these facts furnished ground for a new trial, on the ground of newly discovered evidence. Sargent v. —, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 106.

An affidavit of a credible witness that the plaintiff stated to him the nature of the transaction which was the subject of the suit, and that such statement was in direct conflict with his testimony at the trial and in accord with that of the defendant, is sufficient to support a motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. Weber v. Weber, 5 N. Y. Supp. 178.

4. Great Falls Co. v. Mathes, 5 N. H. 174. See also Seward v. Case, 50 Ill. 228.

The court will not set aside a verdict obtained by perjury, unless the witness has been convicted of perjury, or has died since the trial, and his conviction has thus been rendered impossible. Dyche v. Patton, 3 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 332.

Courts do not look with favor upon a motion for a new trial founded upon newly discovered evidence that a witness for the successful party committed perjury, unless the witness has been convicted. Holtz v. Schmidt, 12 Jones & Sp. (N. Y.) 327. Especially where the newly discovered evidence is that of the perjurer. People v. McGuire, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 269. But newly discovered evidence that the judgment was recovered by conspiracy and perjury has been deemed sufficient ground for granting a new trial where the fact of the conspiracy was first disclosed by the conspirators upon a quarrel between them after the trial, and the motion was made as soon as the fact was discovered. Raphaelsky v. Lynch, 2 Jones & Sp. (N. Y.) 31; 43 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 157; 12 Abb., N. S. (N. Y.) 224.

Evidence is not cumulative merely because former evidence may have indirectly tended to establish the same fact. Wolf v. Mahan, 57 Tex. 171.

Cumulative evidence means additional evidence of the same kind or degree as that previously given, and upon the same point, which in substance and effect simply repeats or adds to what has before been testified. See People v. Super. Ct. of N. Y., 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 285; Parshall v. Klinck, 43 Barb. (N. Y.) 203; Powell v. Jones, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 24; Gole v. Cole, 50 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 59; Cole v. Van Keuren, 51

How. Pr. (N. Y.) 451; Lawrence v. Ely, 38 N. Y. 42; Myers v. Riley, 36 Hun (N. Y.) 20. If the newly discovered evidence consists merely of additional facts and circumstances going to establish the same points which were principally controverted before, or of additional witnesses to the same facts and circumstances, such evidence is cumulative, and a new trial will be denied. People v. Superior Ct. of N. Y., 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 114, 127. But if the newly discovered evidence does not relate to a fact as to which the moving party gave evidence upon the trial, evidence of such new facts cannot be said to be cumulative within the meaning of the rule. Parshall v. Klinck, 43 Barb. (N. Y.) 203; Powell v. Jones, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 24. Baylies on New Trial, p. 528.

"From some of the cases on this subject, it may perhaps be inferred that courts have supposed all additional evidence to be cumulative merely, which conduced to establish the same ground of claim or defence before relied upon, and that none would be available for a new trial unless it disclosed or established some new ground. But this does not seem to us to be the true rule, as recognized in the best considered cases. There are often various distinct and independent facts going to establish the same ground, on the same issue. Evidence is cumulative which merely multiplies witnesses to any one or more of these facts before investigated, or only adds other circumstances of the same general character. But that evidence which brings to light some new and independent truth of a different character, although it tend to prove the same proposition or ground of claim before insisted on, is not cumulative within the true meaning of the rule on this subject: as in the present case, Merwin testified only that the libel, as printed and published, was not like the paper written by him and signed by Waller in the particular referred to. But now appears a new fact entirely independent of the testimony of Merwin—one, which did not exist, at the time Merwin speaks of, which is, that another person, without the knowledge or consent of either Waller or Merwin, inserted the objectionable words into the article, which appeared in the newspaper." Waller v. Graves, 20 Conn. 306.

Cumulative evidence is such as tends to support the same facts which were before attempted to be proved. Chatfield v. Lathrop, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 417; Gardner v. Mitchell, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 116; People v. Superior Ct. of N. Y., 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 286.

And where the evidence tends to establish a new fact which was not before in the case, it is not cumulative. Gardner v. Mitchell, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 116. See also Hughes v. Coursey, 46 Ga. 115; Houston etc. R. Co. v. Forsyth, 49 Tex. 171; Wall v. Trainer, 16 Nev. 131; Howland v. Reeves, 25 Mo. App. 458; Casey v. State, 20 Nev. 138.

Though the evidence tends to establish an issue controverted on the trial, yet, if it introduces a new and distinct fact, it is not cumulative. German v. Maquoketa Sav. Bank, 38 Iowa 368.

The admission of a party is not evidence of the same kind as the testimony of other witnesses, and therefore is not cumulative, although relating to the same controverted fact. Wayt v. Burlington etc. R. Co., 45 Iowa 217. See also Humphreys v. Klick, 49 Ind. 189; Rains v. Ballow, 54 Ind. 82; Fletcher v. People, 117 Ill. 190.

Where the new evidence relied upon tended to show direct admissions of the plaintiff, it is not cumulative, if the only evidence of a like nature introduced at the trial was evidence of acquiescence in statements made by his wife, the court said, "This court has held that 'testimony is not merely cumulative when it tends to prove a distinct fact not testified to at the trial, although other evidence may have been introduced by the moving party tending to support the same ground of claim or defence to which such fact is pertinent. Wilson v. Plank, 41 Wis. 94;" Goldsworthy v. Town of Linden, 75 Wis. 24.

In a suit for seduction under promise of marriage the plaintiff testified to the principal facts, and also that, after promise, the marriage was postponed until spring; also to subsequent conversation concerning the marriage and to conversations after the seduction. Held that newly discovered evidence of subsequent conversations between the parties like those to which the plaintiff had testified was not cumulative and was sufficient to warrant a new trial. Kochel v. Bartlett, 88 Ind. 237.

The finding of misplaced letters after the verdict which are relevant to the issue, but whose contents merely tend to corroborate one side of the case, and with little probability of the result being changed, will not be a sufficient ground for granting a new trial. Wienpy v. Gaskill, 79 Ga. 620. See also Robinson v. Veal, 79 Ga. 633.

Alleged newly discovered evidence, which is nothing but data by which the recollections of witnesses are refreshed, enabling them to testify more positively than before to facts corroborative of defendant's own testimony, is inconclusive and cumulative, and insufficient to require a new trial, especially when no diligence is shown to procure the evidence at the trial. Plumb v. Campbell, 129 Ill. 101.

When witnesses are examined in respect to the condition of the pistol used in a homicide, and on the point whether or not defendant shot at deceased, all additional evidence on these points is merely cumulative, and a new trial for newly discovered testimony will not be granted on such evidence. 1876, O'Shields v. State, 55 Ga. 696.

Where, on the trial of an action, admissions of a party tending to show his liability in such action have been proved, proof of other admissions made by him having the same tendency is cumulative evidence, and the discovery of such evidence cannot support a complaint for a new trial. Cox v. Harvey, 53 Ind. 174.

In replevin for a horse, the issue was whether the defendant had bought the horse of the plaintiff or held it as bailee. A witness testified that defendant told him he was breaking the horse for the plaintiff. A new trial was refused where the evidence relied upon was that of a witness to an admission of the defendant's, that he had not bought the horse of the plaintiff, but was breaking it for him. Audis v. Richie, 120 Ind. 138.

The issue in the first trial was whether money had been paid to one A. There was evidence of an admission of A that he had received it. The new testimony was that of a witness who saw A receive it. Held, that it was not cumulative. St. John v. Alderson, 32 Gratt. (Va.) 140.

In a suit by an attorney to recover for services, the defence was that he was employed, not by defendant, but by

And it is a settled rule that a new trial will not be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence, when the new evidence relied upon is merely cumulative of that introduced at the former trial.¹

one L. and the plaintiff's right to recover depended largely on the authority of L to employ him. On the trial the only testimony tending directly to establish such authority was that of L. Held, that newly discovered evidence that a certain person heard the defendant give L such authority will not be considered merely cumulative, in the sense that would make it an abuse of discretion to set aside the verdict on that ground. Smith v. Grover, 74 Wis. 171.

And the question whether or not certain evidence is cumulative is purely a question of law in deciding which the court has no discretion. Town of Manson v. Ware, 63 Iowa 346.

1. Thus, in ejectment for land in a military tract, a new trial was granted on the ground of newly discovered evi-

the subject of serious animadversions by the courts.¹

(e) MUST BE MATERIAL AND CONCLUSIVE.—The evidence must be material to the issue,² and so conclusive as to give rise to dence, though it was merely cumulative, and intending to impeach a witness sworn at the trial; ejectment for military lots being in this respect an exception to the general rule. Jackson v. Crosby, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 354; Jackson v. Hooker, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 207.

So in Barker v. French, 18 Vt. 160, the court said: "But it." [a new trial] "has not been refused solely because cumulative if it will make a doubtful case clear."

And in Hambel v. Williams, 37 Iowa 224, it was held that a new trial should be granted, although the newly discovered evidence was in some degree cumulative, the application being otherwise well founded. So, where the newly discovered evidence was only additional evidence of the petitioner's insanity, consisting of the testimony of various persons who had on different occasions observed his conduct and regarded it as indicating insanity, it was held that, if the court could see that it might reasonably affect the result, the fact that the evidence was in some sense cumulative, ought not, in a case where life was at stake, to be decisive against the granting of a new trial. Andersen v. State, 43 Conn. 514.

The rule that a new trial will not be granted on account of newly discovered cumulative evidence, is a rule that will be relaxed with great caution. Irwin v. Morell, Dudley (Ga.) 72; Callahan v. Caffarata, 39 Mo. 136.

In an action of ejectment, it had been an important question affecting the title, whether the father and mother of the plaintiff had ever been married, and the plaintiff had introduced a certificate of their marriage purporting to be signed by a certain magistrate, since deceased, and by E and another as witnesses. The defendant also introduced witnesses who testified that in their opinions the certificate was not that of the magistrate.

On a motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, it was alleged that the defendant had found several witnesses who would testify that E was in Louisiana at the time the certificate was dated, and several others that would testify that one L, at the request of the plaintiff's father, wrote the certificate and signed the name of the magistrate to it. Held, that while it is a general rule that a new trial will not be granted for newly discovered evidence that is merely cumulative, yet such direct evidence of the forgery was something so unusual that the defendant could not have been expected to enquire after it, while it was so apart from the ordinary mode of proving a forgery that it could not properly be regarded as merely cumulative. Knowles v. Northrop, 53 Conn. 360.

1. The rule or principle requiring the denial of a motion for a new trial, on the ground of the evidence newly discovered being cumulative, does not rest upon any just or solid foundation. It is simply the dictate of authority which has been followed without much consideration of its foundation. It is not one to be extended to cases not falling directly within its language. For there is the same propriety and necessity for giving a party a new trial, who can vindicate himself, or sustain his cause of action by cumulative evidence, as there is for any other reason. And there is certainly no justice in subjecting a person to what is really an unfounded claim, or for preventing him from maintaining an equally well founded defence, because the evidence discovered by him by which that can be done, may be of the same quality or description as that given upon the trial in which he has been defeated. Wilcox Silver Plate Co. v. Barclay, 48 Hun (N. Y.) 56. See also Clegg v. New York Newspaper Union, 4 N. Y. Supp. 287.

In Harnett v. Harnett, 59 Iowa 401, it was held that where the wife had been granted a divorce on the ground of inhuman treatment the husband was not entitled to a new trial for newly discovered evidence which tended to show that the wife's relations had unduly interested themselves in procuring the divorce, as such testimony would be immaterial to rebut the charge of inhuman treatment.

Where a wrong inference might have been, and probably was drawn by the jury from the testimony as to a fact not very material, and the remaining evidence strongly supported the verdict, a motion for a new trial, on account of the discovery of evidence explaining such testimony, was refused. Tuttle v. Cooper, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 414.

Newly discovered evidence may entitle a defendant to a new trial notwithstanding it has no pertinency to the issue of guilty or not guilty; as, for instance, if it shows that the conviction is for a higher grade of the alleged offence than the defendant is legally amenable for. See this case in illustration. Moore v. State, 18 Tex. App. 212.

Where the alleged newly discovered evidence, if offered, would be inadmissible under the pleadings, there is no ground for a new trial. Devot v. Marx, 19 La. An. 491.

Newly discovered evidence upon a question not involved in the issue upon which the case was tried, will not justify a new trial. Brickley v. Walker, 68 Wis. 563.

The remedy for a party who, after trial, has discovered material new matter, not admissible in evidence under the issues tried, is not a new trial, but a review of the judgment. 1875. Rich v. Starbuck, 50 Ind. 126.

A new trial should be granted if an unsatisfied judgment exists, which may properly be pleaded as a set-off, the existence of it being unknown to the defendant's attorneys at the trial. Childs v. District of Columbia, 19 Ct. of Cl. 332.

A witness has stated in his deposition that the amount of a certain excavation was 888 square yards, but in an exhibit attached thereto the amount was correctly stated as 888 cubic yards. Held, that evidence that the witness meant to say 888 cubic yards was immaterial and cumulative. Olathe v. Horner, 38 Kan. 312.

In an action for personal injuries caused to a freight conductor while uncoupling cars, defendant gave evidence based on observation, without taking the grade, that the track at the place of the injury was about level, not deeming it necessary to ascertain the exact grade, being led to believe by the allegations in plaintiff's petition that he would attempt to prove that the engine caused the train to lurch suddenly. After the trial defendant discovered by measurement that there was a grade. Held, that it was not error to grant a new trial on the ground of newly discovered and material evidence. Kane v. Savannah etc. R. Co. (Ga. 1890), 11 S. E. Rep. 493.

In an application for a divorce, a new trial will not be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence, where no reason for a divorce to which such evidence is applicable is mentioned in the petition. Pinkard v. Pinkard, 14 Tex. 356.

In an action of slander, after a verdict for the plaintiff, a new trial will not be granted to the defendant on an affidavit of newly discovered evidence which goes only to support the plea of justification. Beers v. Root, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 264.

Otherwise, if it goes to support the plea of not guilty. Beers v. Root, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 264.

Newly discovered evidence tending only towards mitigation of damages is not sufficient ground for a new trial. Schlencker v. Risly, 4 Ill. 483; Ham v. Taylor, 22 Tex. 225.

the presumption that if a new trial is granted it will change the result.¹

See however, Burlingame v. Cowee (R. I.) 12 Atl. Rep. 234, where it was held, that if the newly discovered evidence is applicable only in mitigation of damages, a new trial will not be granted unless it is very clear that if the new testimony had been before the jury, the verdict would be so manifestly excessive that the defendant would be entitled to a new trial on that account.

The affidavits in support of a motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence which do not show that a retrial would probably result in a change of verdict, are insufficient. Byrne v. Reed, 75 Cal. 277.

If the newly discovered evidence would result in an equipoise of witnesses upon the point of an alibi a new trial will not be granted. Bean v. People, 124 Ill. 576.

When the Effect of the Newly Discovered Evidence Upon the Result Is Doubtful.—Graham & Waterman in their work on New Trials, upon this subject remark that, "In cases where the new evidence is material and it is doubtful how in connection with the other testimony it might effect the jury, a new trial should always be granted." They then proceed to state the rule: "If it is clear that the new evidence would not change the result, the motion should be denied; but if it be doubtful as to how it would affect the verdict, the motion should be granted. We are aware that a majority of the cases do not go as far as this, but make it incumbent on the moving party to satisfy the court that, if a new trial were granted, the result would probably be different. This,

VIII. AMOUNT OF DAMAGES—1. Excessive Damages.—Excessive or inadequate damages awarded by a jury, as a ground for a new trial, is but a branch of a more general ground already treated, viz: That the verdict is contrary to the evidence. For it is evident however, is making the court weigh the testimony and pronounce for the jury in advance. And it virtually excludes from the benefits of new trials all cases of doubt. We do not believe that in practice the rule can be carried to the rigid extent we would be led to suppose from the language of the authorities." Lindley v. State, 11 Tex. App. 283; citing Graham & Waterman on New Trials, pages 1043 and 1044, note 3; Turnley v. Evans, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 222; Mechanics' F. Ins. Co. v. Nichols, 1 Harr. (Del.) 410; *Robins v. See also Holmes v. Roper, 10 N. Y. Supp. 288; following the rule stated in Wilcox Silver Plate Co. v. Barclay, 48 Hun (N. Y.) 54, which was: "What the effect of the testimony of these witnesses might be upon another trial of the action cannot certainly now be determined. It presents a controverted case, in which the jury might adopt either view. There is a probability certainly that they would consider the case of the plaintiff made out rather than that the defence of the defendant was proved. And in this state of the evidence it will be a matter of propriety and justice to submit the case to the hearing and decision of another jury." Where the newly discovered evidence gives rise to a strong probability that the defendant is innocent, a new trial should be granted. Morse v. State, 108 Ind. 599.

Cases in Which It was Held to be Conclusive or Otherwise.—Where the motion is for a new trial, on the ground of newly discovered evidence, consisting of proof that the footings of the account contained in the book kept by the bank of which plaintiff is receiver, showing its daily cash balances, are erroneous, which footings had been read to the jury as being accurate, a new trial will be granted where the judge is satisfied by the case, that if the book so read in evidence had contained accurate footings of said account, the verdict would have been for the defendant. Butterworth v. Warth, 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 624.

A new trial prayed for to obtain the testimony of a witness whose testimony could not be obtained in season to be used at the first trial, but whose testimony was shown to be unworthy of credit by facts proved therein, was refused for that reason. Jernigan v. Wainer, 12 Tex. 189.

For newly discovered evidence tending to prove an alibi—held, that a new trial should be granted, defendant having been convicted of an assault with intent to rape. McCleavland v. State, 24 Tex. App. 202.

A judgment on a promissory note may be set aside and a new trial granted upon the discovery of a receipt proving the payment of the debt. Bacon v. Williams, 11 Gray (Mass.) 222.

On a motion for new trial for newly discovered evidence the court will hear evidence as to the credibility of the new witness, and the bad character of the witness is sufficient ground for refusing a new trial. Parker v. Hardy, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 246. See also Pomroy v. Columbian Ins. Co., 2 Cal. (N. Y.) 200; People v. Superior Ct. of N. Y., 10 Wend (N. Y.) 288; Ames v. Howard, 1 Sumn. (U. S.) 491. Graham on New Trials 7.

Newly discovered evidence which tends to affect only the amount of punitive damages and not the general result is not a good ground for a new trial. Peck v. Small, 35 Minn. 465.

In Miller v. Ross, 43 N. J. L. 552, VAN SYCKEL, J., says: "It will require an extreme case to justify this court in granting a second rule, after the right of a party to a retrial has been deliberately considered and denied. The newly discovered evidence should not only be so persuasive as to scarcely leave it debatable that the verdict is wrong, but also such evidence as the most careful enquiry and preparation of the case for the trial at the circuit, and for the first rule to show cause, would have failed to bring to the knowledge of the party which seeks to prolong the litigation."

That the supreme court may set aside a verdict and order a new trial for newly discovered evidence there must that, if the damages be either excessive or too small, the verdict must be contrary to the evidence.¹ Where the law recognizes some fixed rule in determining the amount of damages, whereby it may be known that a verdict is excessive, the court may set aside such a verdict.² If the amount of the verdict exceed that be enough of the former evidence before the court that it may be seen whether the new evidence is sufficient to change the result. Omaha etc. R. Co. v. O'Donnell, 24 Neb. 753.

Where the amount of damages is matter of opinion merely, the fact that the jury have fixed them at a greater or less sum than any of the witnesses, is not a ground for a new trial. Brewer v. Tyringham, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 547.

It is not sufficient for a party who seeks a new trial, for the excessiveness of the damages, merely to raise a doubt whether they are not too large; but it is incumbent on him to show affirmatively and most satisfactorily that they are so, and to what extent. Clark v. Whitaker, 19 Conn. 319.

Judgment After Default.—If a jury after default in a case when the criterion of damages is fixed by law, should assess too large an amount, the verdict should be set aside. White v. Green, 3 Mon. (Ky.) 155. See also Chase v. Brown, 32 N. H. 130.

In actions for torts to property, without malice or injury to the person or feelings, the real injury is the standard for the measure of damages; and if the jury give a verdict beyond the amount of the real injury, as it appears in evidence, the verdict may be set aside. Berry v. Vreeland, 21 N. J. L. 183.

If an undisputed item in an account is wholly unconsidered by the jury, the verdict will be set aside. Wyman v. Erickson, 35 Minn. 202.

Or, if a gross sum is given for principal and interest when no interest is due, and the verdict does not show which part is for principal and which for interest, a new trial will be granted. Lesesne v. Grant, 1 Brev. (S. Car.) 403.

claimed by the pleadings, the verdict will be set aside, and a new trial granted.¹ And if the jury fail to assess damages according to the rule correctly laid down by the court, a new trial may be

In a proceeding to condemn land for a right of way by a railway company, when there is a conflict of testimony and diversity of opinion as to the value of the property sought to be taken, and when the jury have made a personal inspection of the premises the supreme court will not reverse on the ground that the damages are excessive or that the evidence does not support the verdict. *Chicago etc. R. The price of three slaves sold with warranty of soundness was $2,550. In an action for a breach of warranty as to two only, the damages assessed were $2,200. A new trial was granted for excess of damages. Ingraham v. Russell, 3 How. (Miss.) 304.

On a motion for a new trial for a verdict against evidence, it being claimed among other things that the damages were higher than the evidence would warrant, held, that though the damages appeared to be greater than the court would have given, yet as they depended on sundry matters of account which the evidence did not enable the court to state with precision, it was not so manifest that the jury had erred in the assessment of damages as to make it the duty of the court to set aside the verdict. Douglas v. Chapin, 26 Conn. 76.

When the defendant pleads a recoupment, counter claim or set-off, the court will not set aside a verdict on account of its amount. Harton v. Bloom, 33 N. Y. Super. Ct. 115.

If there be any calculation which the evidence will reasonably support, the verdict will stand, though it may not be by the same calculation as used by the jury. Hilliard on N. T. (2nd ed.) 569; Dacy v. Gay, 16 Ga. 204. See also Willis v. Lowry, 66 Tex. 540.

Where a jury gives damages upon two distinct grounds and do not return how much was given upon each, the only remedy is to set aside the verdict if it was against law or evidence as to either. Chesley v. King, 74 Me. 164.

Where the evidence was clearly insufficient on the question of damages to justify the verdict, a new trial will

Where the verdict of the jury, or the finding of the court on trial by consent without a jury, awards damages in excess of the amount claimed in the complaint, plaintiff, if he desires to amend the complaint in respect to the amount claimed, must abandon the verdict or finding, pay costs, and consent to a new trial. Decker v. Parsons, 11 Hun (N. Y.) 295.

A new trial will not be granted after verdict because the amount of damages assessed by the verdict exceeds the amount claimed in the writ, but not the amount laid in the declaration. Roderick v. Railroad Co., 7 W. Va. 54.

Where the amount of the verdict was only slightly in excess of the amount claimed in the declaration, the court allowed the verdict to stand by the plaintiff remitting the excess. *King v. given.¹ But where there is no legal measure of damages, and where the damages are unliquidated, and the amount is referred to the discretion of the jury, the court will not ordinarily interfere. The estimation of damages is peculiarly within the province of the jury, they being considered especially competent to determine such matters; and, therefore, it is particularly incumbent upon the court to forbear any encroachment upon the functions of the jury in this particular, save in the strongest cases of injustice. No mere difference of opinion, however decided, justifies an interference with the verdict for this cause, but the amount must be so out of the way as to evince passion, prejudice, partiality, or corruption in the jury.² In case of excessive damages, a new trial

Where, in an action by a husband and his wife to recover of a railroad company for putting them, with their two children and baggage, off a passenger train three-fourths of a mile from a station at midnight, in December, the evidence was conflicting as to whether he requested the conductor to put them off then and there, she denying any knowledge thereof. Held, that a verdict for the plaintiffs for $1,000, although seeming excessive, should not be disturbed. Baltimore etc. R. Co. v. Pixley, 61 Ind. 22.

A verdict for $8,000 in favor of a woman for injuries caused by the negligence of the defendant, which confined her to her bed for several months causing great and constant pain, was held to be just and not excessive, and that though she was earning but $30.00 per month. Harold v. New York Cent. R. Co., 13 Daly (N. Y.) 378.

A verdict of $1,450 was not excessive for injuries to a girl nine years old caused by the bite of a dog, it appearing that a new trial would be a great hardship for the plaintiff. Fitzgerald v. Dobson, 78 Me. 559.

It has been held that there must be affirmative evidence that the jury were unduly influenced in order that a verdict should be set aside as excessive. Cox v. Northwestern Stage Co., 1 Idaho, N. Where a case is left to a jury on the question of damages, only the verdict must stand unless a sufficient justification appears from defendant's showing. Davis v. Burgess, 54 Mich. 514.

Under the Indiana statutes providing that a new trial may be granted on the ground "that the damages are excessive," it has been held that the provision applies only to cases of tort.

Where the action is ex contractu, the Hence an action on a sheriff's bond being an action on a contract the amount of recovery cannot be considered under a motion for a new trial because "the damages awarded the plaintiff are excessive." Moore v. State, 114 Ind. 414.

The courts have an unquestionable power to grant a new trial to defendant in an action for a wrong, on the ground that the damages awarded by the verdict are excessive. But the power should be sparingly exercised. Clapp v. Hudson River R. Co., 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 461; Blum v. Higgins, 3 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 104.

In an action for a diversion of a water course in which the only question litigated was that of damages, there was a wide diversity in the opinion of the witnesses. Held, that an order granting a new trial, and setting aside a verdict as excessive, was within the sound discretion of the trial court. Schaffer v. St. Paul, 41 Minn. 310.

A judge may set aside a verdict as excessive even in a case where exemplary damages are recoverable. Tynberg v. Cohen, 76 Tex. 409.

It has been held that a new trial will be granted for excessive damages in any kind of action if the circumstances require it. Ducker v. Wood, 1 T. R. 277; Hewlett v. Crutchley, 5 Taunt. 277; Jones v. Sparrow, 5 T. R. 257; Goldsmith v. Sefton, 3 Aust. 808.

In an action for a trespass upon land, damages to the full value of the land are excessive, and a new trial will be granted. Thompson v. Morris Canal etc. Co., 17 N. J. L. 480.

Where a Mississippi statute provided that the jury should "be the sole judges of the damages sustained," it was held, that in actions under the statute, the courts had no authority to set aside a verdict on the ground of excessive damages. Lewis v. Black, 27 Miss. 425.

In breach of promise cases coupled may be granted with respect to the assessment of damages without opening the whole case.¹ Even though the trial court may have regarded the verdict as excessive, but allowed it to stand, the appellate court will not disturb it.² A new trial will not be

Whether the damages are excessive in an action on the case for personal injury from negligence depends upon the facts, and when the judgment of the trial court is affirmed by the appellate court its decision on that question is final. Chicago etc. R. Co. v. Holland, 122 Ill. 461.

In three successive trials of an action for personal injuries the plaintiff obtained verdicts of $3,000, $2,500, and $6,000, respectively, upon substantially the same evidence as to the extent of his injuries. Held that, in view of the first two verdicts, the damages awarded by the third are excessive, and the judgment thereon is reversed for that reason. Baker v. Madison, 62 Wis. 137.

A verdict, upon a second trial, for $8,000 for personal injuries caused by a defective sidewalk (the first verdict, rendered two years and eight months after the accident, having been for $2,000 only) is held excessive, and a new trial is ordered, unless the plaintiff remit $3,000 therefrom. McLimans v. Lancaster, 63 Wis. 596.

To warrant a trial court to set aside a verdict for excessive damages, the damages must be not merely more than the court would have awarded had it tried the case, but they must (especially in an action for defamation) so greatly and grossly exceed what would be adequate in the judgment of the court, that they cannot reasonably be accounted for, except upon the theory that they were awarded, not in a judicial frame of mind, but under the influence of passion—that is to say, of excited feeling, rather than of sober judgment; or of prejudice—that is to say, of a state of mind partial to the successful party, or unfair to the other.

2. Tennessee Coal etc. Co. v. Roddy, 85 Tenn. 400.

"In view of the rule at common law, and so discovered in the decisions of our predecessors on the bench, we hold that in actions for damages for personal torts that it is within the strict province of the jury to estimate the extent of the injury and assess the damage, and that unless there is manifest abuse of this trust such as to indicate passion, prejudice, partiality or unaccountable caprice or corruption that the trial judge ought not to interfere. It follows a fortiori that when the trial judge has simply expressed his disapproval of the verdict as being excessive, yet has refused to set it aside, that this court will not alone, upon the ground of such disapproval or dissatisfaction with the amount of the verdict, grant a new trial." Tennessee Coal etc. Co. v. Roddy, 85 Tenn. 400.

An appellate court may consider the damages larger than they would have given and yet not feel justified in setting aside the verdict. Duberly v. Gunning, 1 Burrow 609; Goodall v. Thurman, 1 Head (Tenn.) 217; Chenoweth v. Hicks, 5 Ind. 224; Blanchard v. Morris, 15 Ill. 35.

Appellate Court.—The objection is not generally available in error that the damages are excessive. If, however, on the nature of the case, or on a proper return of all the testimony, the granted in order to allow the injured party to recover only nominal damages.¹ But if a judgment for the plaintiff would entitle him to costs, or is necessary to vindicate any right drawn in question, a new trial will be granted, if the jury have erroneously found for the defendant when they should have found nominal damages for the plaintiff.²

2. Inadequate Damages.—As a general rule, a new trial will not be granted on the ground that the damages are too small in actions for wrongs and injuries.³ Especially if the cause of the point can be raised in the appellate court, as under the practice in many of the States it can, and it thus clearly appears that the damages found are excessive, the judgment will be reversed on that ground. *Cuff v. Inadequate Damages Not a Ground for New Trial a Common Law—In Action for Torts.—There has been never a doubt that the power to grant new trials for excessive damages exists at common law, as well as in actions ex delicto as in actions ex contractu; but smallness of damages seems not to have been ground for a new trial, at least in actions of trespass, unless made so by statute, apparently for no better reason than that actions for torts, at least actions of trespass vi et armis, were considered as bearing an analogy to prosecutions for crimes as to which it is an admitted doctrine that whilst a new trial may be granted upon the application of the accused upon the ground that the punishment inflicted by the jury is too great, no such application is allowed on the part of the commonwealth, because the penalty assessed by the jury is too small. 4 Minor's Inst. 758, citing, Jackson v. Boast, 2 Va. Cas. 49; Rixey v. Ward, 3 Rand. (Va.) 52; Humphrey v. West, 3 Rand. (Va.) 516; 6 Com. Dig. 227, Plead. (R. 17). See also Bacon's Abr. tit. L. 4 (ed. 1851, p. 605), citing Mocsham v. Buller, 2 Roll. R. 21; Stra. 940; Howard v. Newton (Mich.), 6 G. 2; Stra. 1051; Barker v. Dixie Trin, 9 G. 2; Maurice v. Brencok, Doug. 509 S. P., and other cases.

In Benjamin v. Stewart, 61 Cal. 608, the court said: "There is a provision that a new trial may be granted for the cause of 'excessive damages appearing to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice.'" But there is no provision which authorizes the setting aside of the finding of the cause of the passion or prejudice of the jury exhibited by the rendition of the verdict for insufficient damages, and, as the whole matter is statutory, the last is not proper as an independent ground for setting aside a verdict.

It may be that under the fifth statutory ground for a new trial—"insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict"—a party might urge that a jury found against the evidence in finding a less sum than the evidence established as the amount of damages sustained; but in such case the statement must specify the particulars from which the evidence is alleged to be insufficient, and where, as is the case before us, no such specifications are made, the statement must be disregarded. Compare Bennett v. Hobro, 72 Cal. 178.

New trials for inadequate damages have been refused in slander cases. Randall v. Haywood, 5 Bing. N. C. 424; Forsdike v. Stone, 3 C. P. L. R.

607; Colyer v. Huff, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 34; Wavle v. Wavle, 9 Hun (N. Y.) 125. See, however, Rixey v. Ward, 3 Rand. (Va.) 52, in assault and battery, Shoff v. Wells, 1 Neb. 168. See also Sharpe v. O'Brien, 39 Ind. 501; Pritchard v. Hewett, 91 Mo. 547; s. c., 60 Am. Rep. 265.

A trial court may regard the damages wholly inadequate and yet refuse to grant a new trial on that account. Lancaster v. Providence & S. S. Co., 26 Fed. Rep. 233; Walker v. Smith, 1 Wash. (U. S.) 202. See also Brooks v. Ludin, 1 N. Y. Supp. 338.

Some courts have attempted to make a distinction as to what kind of actions will warrant an appellate court in setting aside a verdict for inadequate damages. Watson v. Harmon, 85 Mo. 443; Phillips v. Southwestern R. Co., 4 Q. B. Div. 406; Sharpe v. O'Brien, 39 Ind. 501; Taunton Mfg. Co. v. Smith, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 10.

Civil Code Ky., § 341, providing that a new trial shall not be granted on account of the smallness of damages in an action for injury to the person or reputation, nor in any other action in which the damages equal the actual pecuniary injury sustained, does not apply where special damages are pleaded and proven. Jesse v. Shuck (Ky. 1889), 12 S. W. Rep. 304.

While it is provided by § 2839 of the Code of Iowa that "a new trial shall not be granted on account of the smallness of the damages, in an action for an injury to the person or reputation, where the damages equal the actual pecuniary injury sustained," yet a court is not required thereby to grant a new trial in every case where the damages are less than the actual pecuniary injury; and in this case, where the jury evidently meant to say, by finding a verdict for one dollar, that plaintiff was not entitled to damages at all, and the preponderance of the evidence was strongly against his right to recover, held that a motion for a new trial was properly overruled. Hubbard v. Town of Mason City, 64 Iowa 245.

By statute in many States a new trial will not be granted on account of the smallness of damages in an action for an injury to the person or reputation, nor in any other action when the damages equal the actual pecuniary injury sustained. R. St. O., § 5306; Civ. Pro. Wyo., § 2653; Code Iowa, ch. 9, § 2839; R. St. Ind. 1881, art. 23, § 560; Comp. Stat. Neb., § 314, p. 670.

injury is a matter of conjecture;¹ or if other causes than the act of the defendant were instrumental in bringing about the damage.² Where actual damage is shown with such definiteness as to be capable of being classified under a particular head, and determined by a legal measure, a verdict for merely nominal damages will be set aside.³ And where a verdict gives grossly inadequate damages to a plaintiff, it is as much a ground for a new trial upon the motion of the plaintiff as a verdict for excessive damages would be upon the motion of the defendant.⁴ Or if the evidence

In an action by B to recover damages for grain in the field destroyed by hogs belonging to L, a verdict was rendered for twenty-five cents. There was testimony tending to show the amount and value of the grain destroyed; also that hogs other than those of L committed a portion of the injury, but there was no testimony tending to show the number of such hogs, nor what proportion of the damage was occasioned by the hogs of L. Held, that an objection by B that the verdict was against the weight of evidence could not be sustained. Blanchard v. Loges, 11 Neb. 460.

Where the damages recovered equal the pecuniary loss in actions for injuries to person or character no new trial will be granted for smallness of damages. Sullivan v. Wilson, 15 Ind. 246. But see Sharpe v. O'Brien, 39 Ind. 501.

A new trial, on account of the smallness of damages, in actions for injuries to person or character, is not prohibited absolutely by the statute of Indiana, but only in cases where the damages recovered equal the pecuniary loss. Sullivan v. Wilson, 15 Ind. 246.

"A verdict for a grossly inadequate amount stands upon no higher ground in legal principle, nor in the rules of law or justice, than a verdict for an excessive or extravagant amount. It is doubtless true that instances of the former occur less frequently, because it is less frequently possible to make it clearly appear that the jury have grossly erred. But when the case does plainly show such a result, justice as plainly forbids that the plaintiff should be denied what is his due as that the defendant should pay what he ought not to be charged." McDonald v. Walter, 40 N. Y. 551.

Where evidence shows that the plaintiff was not entitled to any verdict at all, or was damaged to a much larger amount than the jury had given him by their verdict, a new trial should be granted. Lough v. Romaine, 4 Jones & Sp. (N. Y.) 332.

In Whitney v. Milwaukee, 65 Wis. 409, a verdict for $24.27 damages for injuries caused by a fall upon a defective cross-walk, imposing costs of suit amounting to $30.47 on plaintiff, was set aside as perverse on its face and a new trial ordered.

In a suit for damages for physical injuries, it appeared that the plaintiff had been so injured as to remain insensible for the whole day, and for ten or twelve days he was unable to use his feet, and hardly knew he had any, and was laid up for five months. The jury found that the injury occurred through negligence of the defendants, without fault of the plaintiff and assessed damages at six cents. Held, that the damages were inadequate, and a new trial must be granted. Robbins v. Hudson River R. Co., 7 Bosw. (N. Y.) 1.

"It is objected, however, that verdicts cannot be set aside on account of the damages being too small, but we are satisfied that this is a mistake. It is a power rarely exercised, and especially in actions of personal wrongs, such as slanders, batteries and the like; but when the foundation of the action is a breach of contract, and the damages are capable of estimation, if there is glaring deficiency, justice requires that the case shall be revised. Taunton Mfg. Co. v. Smith, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 10.

Under Wis. Stat., ch. 132, relating to new trials, where, if the plaintiff were entitled to recover at all, he was entitled to a larger amount than that allowed by the jury, the verdict may be set aside for insufficient evidence on a motion founded upon the judge's minutes. *Emmons v. Where some elements of damages properly involved in a plaintiff's claim are evidently omitted in the consideration of the case by the jury, a new trial will be granted on the ground of inadequate damages. Phillips v. Southwestern R. Co., 4 Q. B. Div. 406.

In cases of a malicious prosecution the plaintiff may be entitled to attorney fees, together with the costs of defence in the original action. Gregory v. Chambers, 78 Mo. 294; Bradlaugh v. Edwards, 11 C. B., N. S. 377; Closson v. Staples, 42 Vt. 209; Farlie v. Dauks, 30 Eng. L. & Eq. 115.

In an action for a malicious prosecution, the undisputed evidence conclusively showed that plaintiff had incurred reasonable expenses in his defence exceeding fifty dollars. The jury were instructed that if they found for plaintiff he would be entitled to recover a reasonable sum for the expense so incurred, but they found for the plaintiff, and assessed his damages at five dollars. Under the statute, the plaintiff, recovering less than fifty dollars, could recover no more costs than damages. Held, that it was error to deny his motion for a new trial. Waufle v. McLellan, 51 Wis. 484.

A verdict for $24.27 damages for considerable injuries to plaintiff's person, which verdict (being for less than $50) entitled the defendant to recover costs amounting to $30.47, is held to have been perverse, and a new trial is ordered. Whitney v. Milwaukee, 65 Wis. 409.

The court should set aside a verdict for the plaintiff in an action for the conversion of property when the damages assessed by the jury are manifestly inadequate; and where the trial court refuses to do so, the supreme court will interfere and reverse the judgment. Watson v. Harmon, 85 Mo. 443.

less sum will be set aside, and a new trial granted.¹

3. Remittitur.—Where a new trial should be granted for this cause, the court may, in many instances, impose upon the successful party the option of accepting a new trial or remitting such portion of the damages as justice may require.² If the jury have reported to the court several items or elements of damage, upon which they have founded their verdict, and one or more of such items can be shown by fixed rules and principles of law to have been improperly allowed, when the amount can be ascertained, remission of such amount will remove the objection if the verdict is excessive; or if the court can, by any fixed rules of law, determine the damages in a particular case, they may order the plaintiff to remit any excess.³ And so, in an action ex delicto, if the plaintiff remits damages to the amount that the court may deem proper, a new trial may be refused.⁴ But if the verdict is grossly excessive

An erroneous entry of judgment may be cured by the plaintiff remitting the excess. Smith v. Paul, 8 Port. (Ala.) 503; Lear v. McMillen, 17 Ohio St. 464.

There is an apparent departure from sound principle in this practice. The court concludes that the jury were influenced by passion or prejudice, or both, because they found such excessive damages, and yet allows their finding, covering the major propositions of the case upon which damages are consequent, to stand. Why should a verdict be in part retained if the jury were really influenced by passion or prejudice? Where their estimate of damages is rejected and another substituted, is the latter a verdict? See Sutherland on Damages; Luson v. Smith, 1 Nev. & Man. 304; Sherry v. Frecking, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 452; Koeltz v. Bleckman, 46 Mo. 320.

In an action for libel the general term of the supreme court can, on appeal, exact as a condition to refusing a new trial that plaintiff stipulate to a reduction of the verdict in the absence of any other error. Holmes v. Jones (N. Y.), 24 N. E. Rep. 701.

A verdict may be excessive even after remission of a part, in which case a new trial will be granted. Johnson v. Van Kettler, 66 Ill. 63.

Where a judgment is reversed upon the sole ground that the damages awarded are excessive, the appellate court may indicate the excess and allow it to be remitted and judgment entered for the balance. Baker v. Madison, 62 Wis. 137.

Where, in a suit by a wife for the homicide of her husband, who was a railroad employé, the Carlisle tables of mortality were introduced in evidence and the value of the services of the deceased proved, thereby furnishing a measure of damages, and after a verdict for the plaintiff for $12,000, and pending the motion for new trial counsel for plaintiff voluntarily wrote off from the verdict $2,000 so as to come within the measure of damages proved, the refusal of a new trial was not error. The Central R. Co. v. Crosby, 74 Ga. 737.

"The practice of permitting a remittitur of a portion of the verdict, even in actions sounding in damages, is so well settled that the point made against the judgment in this case on account of the remittitur entered need not be discussed as a new question. The rule is uniform that when there is a motion for a new trial on the ground of excessive damages, plaintiff may if he chooses remit a portion of the verdict to obviate the objection. The court cannot compel a plaintiff to remit any portion of his verdict, but he may have his election to do so or stand the chances of another verdict." SCOTT J., in Albin v. Kinney, 96 Ill. 214. See also McCausland v. Wonderly, 56 Ill. 410; Thomas v. Fischer, 71 Ill. 576. In Lowenthal v. Streng, 90 Ill. 74, the court expressed misgivings as to the propriety of the practice.

Where, in an action for slander, there is a verdict for $4,000, and the trial court decides that all damages above $500 are excessive, such excess shows that the verdict was rendered under the influence of passion or prejudice, and must be set aside, though the plaintiff may have agreed to remit $3,500. Steinbuchel v. Wright, 43 Kan. 307.

In the case of Koeltz v. Bleckman 46 Mo. 320, the court say: "The extraordinary verdict of the jury renders it certain that they disregarded the evidence and mistook the law. The question in this case is, will the remittitur cure the error? We think not. As the verdict was for more than the amount demanded in the petition, of course it could not be permitted to stand. . . . The truth crops out in the whole proceeding, and the conclusion is irresistible that the defendant's side of the case was never considered by the jury; and to allow the judgment to stand by the remittitur is really permitting the plaintiff to make up his own verdict."

Remittiturs are favored by the courts.¹ However, the offer of the successful party to remit a portion of an excessive verdict, will not deprive the other party of a new trial.² A remittitur will cure a verdict greater than the amount claimed in the pleadings.³

It is within the province of an appellate court to order a remittitur.⁴

Where it appears that the verdict is the result of passion or prejudice on the part of the jury, a remittitur will not be allowed to cure the verdict. International etc. R. Co. v. Wilkes, 68 Tex. 617.

In an action to recover damages for a personal injury, the trial court concluded that the verdict of the jury was excessive, and ordered the plaintiff to enter a remittitur of $3,000 as a condition to its overruling the motion for a new trial. The appellate court said, "If the judge was of opinion the verdict was excessive, he should have granted a new trial." The damages are assessed by the jury, if the verdict was excessive, the judge in actions like this, had no measure by which to determine how much it is excessive. His attempt to do so is an invasion of the rights of the jury. Gulf etc. R. Co. v. Coon, 69 Tex. 730.

Where it is impossible to determine what the jury acted upon, or how they made up their verdict under the charge of the court, so as to correct the error and arrive at the amount they should have given, a remittitur will not cure the verdict. Smith v. Dukes, 5 Minn. 373; Orange etc. R. Co. v. Fulvey, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 366; Lambert v. Craig, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 199; 2 Sutherland Dam. 812 (ed. 1883); Hodapp v. Sharp, 40 Cal. 69; *Sourwine v. IX. NEW TRIAL AS OF RIGHT.—In actions of ejectment it was formerly held in England that new trials would not be awarded, for the reason that the judgment was not conclusive.¹ In 1768, it was held otherwise, on the ground that, though a second ejectment might be instituted, a change of possession would be effected under the first judgment to the injury of the defeated party.² It is now well settled that, at common law, in ejectments, as in civil actions generally, new trials may be awarded for such legal causes as ordinarily constitute grounds for new trials.³ And, in fact, it may be said that, irrespective of statutes, new trials are granted more freely in ejectment suits than in other civil actions.⁴

As the judgment, in the common-law action of ejectment, conferred no additional title upon the successful party, but merely gave him the possession, and was not final, nor evidence in a subsequent action brought by or against the same parties, and did not preclude the losing party from bringing another action, there was no limit to the number of trials which might be had, unless the court of equity interfered by injunction to prevent what, in effect, was continuous litigation.⁵

Of recent years, the statutes of many of the States have provided for new trials as of right in actions of ejectment, or in the nature of ejectment.⁶ It may be said of these statutes that it was designed that they should be restrictive of the common-law right of the defeated party, the number of new trials authorized usually being limited, and a conclusiveness as to the parties and the title attached to their result.⁷ In substance, these statutes are

5. See article EJECTMENT, 6 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law 195, 245u.

6. Reason for these statutes may be found, to use the language of MILLER, J., in Equator Co. v. Hall, 106 U. S. 87, in the fact that "A title to real estate has, under the traditions of the common law, been held, in all the States where that law prevailed, to be too important, we might almost say, too sacred to be concluded forever by the result of one action between the contesting parties.

Hence those States which, by abolishing the fictions of the action at the common law, and substituting a direct suit between the parties actually claiming under conflicting titles, which, according to the nature of this new proceeding, would end in a judgment concluding both parties, have found it necessary to provide for new trials to such extent as each State legislature has thought sound policy to require. These provisions for new trials in actions of ejectment are not the same in all the States, but it is believed that almost all of them which have abolished the common law action have made provision for one or more new trials as a matter of right." See also Miles v. Caldwell, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 35; Spence v. McGowan, 53 Tex. 30; Gregory v. Lincoln, 13 Neb. 352; People v. Genesee Circuit Judge, 37 Mich. 281; *Beckman v. similar, though in detail and in the procedure under them, they vary with the different jurisdictions. The remedy afforded by them, it is apparent, is independent of that afforded by the ordinary motion for a new trial on grounds common to civil actions generally.¹ The tendency of the courts of the different States of late years has been to construe these statutes strictly, though here the decisions are not harmonious, a greater liberality being allowed for their scope in some jurisdictions than in others.²

It has been held that these statutes do not embrace actions of forcible entry or detainer, or actions to recover possession of land because of non-payment of rent;³ nor actions to set aside deeds for fraud,⁴ though such a statute has been held to embrace a suit to revest title in one whose land was taken from him by fraud, and conveyed afterward to a fraudulent grantee;⁵ nor actions to enforce liens;⁶ nor partition suits, where neither title nor right of

The right to a new trial as of right is not lost by the fact that new trials have been granted previously for cause. Emons v. Bishop, 14 Ill. 152.

2. For example: In Texas, it was said in Spence v. McGowan, 53 Tex. 30, that the statute (now repealed) constituted an exception to an almost universal rule founded on the wisest public policy, and should be strictly construed; while in Illinois it was held that the statute should receive a liberal construction. Chamberlin v. McCarty, 63 Ill. 262; Myers v. Phillips, 68 Ill. 269.

In Bay v. Gage, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 447, it was held that an amendatory act, under which new trials as of right were demandable more freely than before, should not be construed retroactively so as to bring within the scope of the amendment an action in which judgment had been rendered prior to the enactment of the amendatory act. And see Jackson v. Coe, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 101; Singer v. Belt, 8 Ohio St. 291, where it was held that the statute providing for a new trial in actions for the recovery of real property, did not apply to actions of ejectment which were pending when the act took effect.

3. Whitaker v. McClung, 14 Minn. 170. But it has been held in Minnesota that, while this is so, there may be a new trial as of right where the forcible entry proceeding is in effect an ejectment, as under the somewhat novel practice in that State it may be. Ferguson v. Kumler, 25 Minn. 183.

The New York Code of Civ. Proc., § 1528, has excepted actions of ejectment founded upon an allegation of rent in arrear from the operation of the statutes. See, as to the law prior to the enactment of the Code, Christie v. Bloomingdale, 18 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 12, which held that ejectments between landlord and tenant for non-payment of rent were not within the statute, and Reed v. Loucks, 61 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 434, contra.

A tenant holding over against his landlord, or the grantee of the landlord, is not entitled to a new trial as of right in an action begun before a justice, and on appeal to the circuit court decided in the landlord's favor. Over v. Moss, 41 Ind. 463.

In Campbell v. Hunt, 104 Ind. 210, it was adjudged that a leasehold interest for a term of years was a "valid, subsisting interest in real property," within Indiana Rev. St., § 1050, such as entitled the lessee, in an action to recover the possession, to a new trial as of right under § 1064.

4. A new trial as of right is not allowable in a suit to have a deed adjudged a mortgage and to procure its cancellation, as satisfied, even though the complaint also prays for a quieting of title. Voss v. Eller, 109 Ind. 260. See also Warburton v. Crouch, 108 Ind. 83, and cases cited; Bradford v. School Town of Marion, 107 Ind. 280.

Nor is a new trial as of right allowable in an ordinary suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance. Warburton v. Crouch, 108 Ind. 83; Somerville v. Donaldson, 26 Minn. 75.

5. Warburton v. Crouch, 108 Ind. 83; Voss v. Eller, 109 Ind. 260; Adams v. Wilson, 60 Ind. 560; Physio-Medical College v. Wilkinson, 89 Ind. 23; McKittrick v. Glenn, 116 Ind. 27.

Co., 105 Ind. 420; Jenkins v. Corwin, 55 Ind. 21; Butler University v. Conard, 94 Ind. 353.

1. Gullett v. Miller, 106 Ind. 75; Pipes v. Hobbs, 83 Ind. 45; Hawkins v. Heinzman (Ind. 1890), 25 N. E. Rep. 708. So in McFerran v. McFerran, 69 Ind. 29, though the action was one of partition, the answer and cross complaint were in the nature of an action for specific performance, and it was held that a new trial was not grantable as of right.

2. Kreitline v. Franz, 106 Ind. 359. And see Campbell v. Hunt, 104 Ind. 210.

In Bucher v. Carroll, 19 Hun (N. Y.) 618, a new trial under the statute was allowed where, on the whole, the action was, in effect, one of ejectment, though the complaint also stated facts in relation to the assessment of damages, contained averments sufficient to warrant an application for a receiver, and prayed for an injunction.

In Cheesebrough v. Parker, 25 Kan. 566, it was held that a case fell within the statute, though the answer set forth an equitable defence and the petition prayed for mesne profits, the action being in form one for the recovery of real property.

In Houston etc. R. Co. v. McGehee, 49 Tex. 481, it was adjudged that the plaintiff was entitled to a new trial as of right, though the judgment in the first action contained a superfluous provision that the defendant be quieted in his possession of the land. And see Blessing v. Edmonson, 49 Tex. 333.

In Indiana the statute is deemed to apply where the statute is one to quiet title as well as where it is for the recovery of possession. Shuman v. Gavin, 15 Ind. 93; Galletley v. Williams, 15 Ind. 468; Wills v. Dillinger, 17 Ind. 253; Schucraft v. Davidson, 19 Ind. 98; Zimmerman v. Marchland, 23 Ind. 474; Truitt v. Truitt, 37 Ind. 514; Physio-Medical College v. Wilkinson, 89 Ind. 23.

In Butterfield v. Walsh, 25 Iowa 263, it was held that there was a right to a new trial, though the defence was an equitable one.

But in Russell v. Nelson, 32 Iowa 215, it was held that the Iowa statute did not apply to the equitable action to quiet title, but only to the action for the recovery of the land; and in Black- ford v. Loveridge, 10 Kan. 101, it was held that the statute did not embrace the case of an action to compel the specific performance of a contract for the sale and conveyance of land, and to quiet the title.

It has been held in South Carolina, that the defendant could not, after a recovery against him in an action of trespass to try title, himself maintain an action to try the title to the same land. Thomas v. Geiger, 2 Nott & M. L. (S. Car.) 528.

Where the action, though in form trespass to try title, in fact covered the issue of a disputed boundary only, the statute has been held not to apply. Bird v. Montgomery, 34 Tex. 713. And see Spence v. McGowan, 53 Tex. 30; San Patrico v. Mathis, 58 Tex. 242; Barbee v. Stinnett, 60 Tex. 167; Russell v. Senior 118 Ind. 520.

The Kansas statute has been deemed not to extend to an action brought by one in possession to determine conflicting claims to the land. Northrup v. Romary, 6 Kan. 240. And see Swartzell v. Rogers, 3 Kan. 374. The same doctrine was held in New York prior to the enactment of the existing Code of Civil Procedure, § 1646. Malin v. Rose, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 258.

In Edgar v. Galveston City Co., 46 Tex. 421, it was adjudged that a new trial was demandable as of right, though the judgment in the first case was rendered on demurrer instead of on a verdict; while in People v. St. Claire Circuit Judge, 37 Mich. 131, it was held that an actual trial in the first action was necessary to bring the case within the statute, and that a judgment of a nonsuit was not sufficient.

See also, as bearing upon the scope of these statutes, Eastman v. Linn, 20 Minn. 433; Magee v. Chadoin, 44 Tex. 488.

It was held in Cooke v. Passage, 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 360, and in Rogers v. Wing, 5 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 50, that the provisions of the Revised Statutes of that State, authorizing new trials in actions of ejectment, embraced actions brought under the Code to recover the possession of real property. It has been held that the New York statute did not embrace equitable actions. Shumway v. Shumway, 42 N. Y. 143, nor to actions to set aside a conveyance.

procure a sale of land of the intestate for the payment of debts;¹ nor suits to foreclose mortgages;² nor an action brought by a judgment creditor, to subject to the judgment lien land conveyed by the debtor;³ nor a suit to enjoin a railroad company from appropriating land for a right of way and to recover damages for such appropriation;⁴ nor a suit to enjoin the obstruction of a right of way and for damages;⁵ nor an action of tort to recover damages for the removal of a building from the plaintiff's land;⁶ nor a suit to redeem and procure the cancellation of a mortgage, even though the complaint also prays for the quieting of the plaintiff's title;⁷ nor a suit to compel the conveyance of land charged with a trust in the plaintiff's favor, this not being an action for the recovery of real property;⁸ nor a proceeding instituted by an heir to test the validity of a devise.⁹ Sometimes the statute grants the right to a new trial to the defendant only.¹⁰ Again, only a party concluded by the judgment, or his heirs, assignees, or personal representatives is entitled to a new trial.¹¹ Again, it has been held that a mortgagee was entitled to a new trial as of right of an action of ejectment, to which he was not a party and wherein judgment had been entered by default against a purchaser from the mortgagor.¹² Generally speaking, there must have been a judgment before a new trial can be demanded as of McConnell v. McCullough, 14 N. Y. St. Rep. 621.

It has been held that these statutes do not extend to suits for the specific performance of a contract. Benner v. Benner, 10 Ind. 256; Allen v. Davidson, 16 Ind. 416; Walker v. Cox, 25 Ind. 271. Nor to actions for damages for obstructing an easement. Larrimore v. Williams, 30 Ind. 18.

Where, pending an action to recover land, rents and profits, the defendant abandoned the property and plaintiff dismissed pro tanto and proceeded with the action as one for rents and profits only, and prevailed, it was held that the defendant was not entitled to a new trial as of right. 10. As in Minnesota. See Howes v. Gillett, 10 Minn. 397.

In Wisconsin, the statute is construed not to grant one new trial to each party, but one new trial only. Boland v. Gillett, 44 Wis. 329. And so in Indiana. Ewing v. Gray, 12 Ind. 64; Crews v. Ross, 44 Ind. 481. While in Illinois, each party is entitled to a new trial as a matter of right, if applied for within the time specified. Chamberlin v. McCarty, 63 Ill. 263; Emmons v. Bishop, 14 Ill. 152.

In Pennsylvania it has been held that a second action may be brought by the prevailing party before taking possession under the first verdict. Ross v. Pleasants, 19 Pa. St. 157.

11. Forsyth v. Van Winkle, 9 Fed. Rep. 247, in which case the question turned upon the construction of the Indiana statute.

12. Howell v. Leavitt, 90 N. Y. 238.

Where, under the statute, as in Michigan, a judgment in ejectment may be set aside within three years on motion, the purchaser at an execution sale thereunder takes the title with notice of such right, even though the time for redemption from the execution sale has expired. Cook v. Judge of Kent Circuit Court, 70 Mich. 94.

right.¹ That the new trial is demandable as of right does not do away with the necessity for a demand.² Notice, however, is not necessarily required.³ It is usually required that the costs of the preceding action must be paid,⁴ and sometimes that the damages awarded by the first verdict shall be paid also.⁵ But, beyond

1. Under the Michigan statute, the right to a new trial does not exist where there has been a nonsuit merely. People v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 37 Mich. 131. Nor under the Kansas statute, where neither appearance, answer nor demurrer has been filed. Hall v. Sanders, 25 Kan. 538. Nor under the New York statute, where judgment was entered pursuant to a stipulation that judgment absolute should be entered against the appellant, if the order of the general term in granting a new trial should be affirmed. Roberts v. Baumgarten, 10 N. Y. Supp. 519; 11 N. Y. Supp. 699.

In Indiana etc. R. Co. v. McBroom, 103 Ind. 310, it was held that an undisposed-of appeal did not preclude the right to a new trial, but that the appeal should be dismissed on the vacating of the judgment and the granting of a new trial.

Where the action embraces one cause of action wherein a new trial is demandable as of right, and another cause of action where it is not, a new trial is not demandable as of right. Butler University v. Conard, 24 Ind. 353; Bradford v. School Town of Marion, 107 Ind. 280; Wilson v. Brookshire (Ind. 1890), 25 N. E. Rep. 131.

In Miller v. Evansville Nat. Bank, 99 Ind. 272, and in Hammann v. Mink, 99 Ind. 279, the correctness of this rule was recognized, but it was held that where two causes were properly joined, as, for example, the foreclosure of a mortgage and a proceeding to recover possession of the land, there might be a new trial as of right, and that such a case was distinguishable from the cases aforesaid.

In Schmitt v. Schmitt, 32 Minn. 130, it was held that where, in an action for divorce, there were also issues involving the title and the right to possession of land, a second trial as of right was demandable as to these issues.

2. Anderson v. Kent, 14 Kan. 207; West v. Cameron, 39 Kan. 136.

Where the new trial was granted without a written motion and an appearance was entered, and no objection to the order granting the new trial made for four years, it was held that there was a waiver of the right to object to the want of a written motion. Marsh v. Elliott, 51 Ind. 547. And see Harvey v. Fink, 111 Ind. 249.

3. It is not necessary that the party applying for a new trial, as of right, should notify the opposite party of his intention so to do. If the party against whom a judgment has been rendered pays the costs of the former trial, and applies for and obtains the order of the court vacating the judgment and ordering a new trial at the same term of court that the judgment is rendered, then the opposite party is required to take notice of the order vacating the judgment and ordering the new trial; but if the new trial is applied for and obtained at a subsequent term, then the party obtaining such new trial is required to notify the other party or parties that he has so obtained a new trial, and this notice must be served ten days before the first day of the term at which the action stands for trial. Whitlock v. Vancleve, 39 Ind. 511. And see Stanley v. Holliday, 113 Ind. 525; People v. Genesee Circuit Judge, 37 Mich. 281; Doster v. Sterling, 33 Kan. 381.

4. Gilman v. Circuit Judge, 21 Mich. 373; Dennison v. Circuit Judge, 37 Mich. 281; Shaw v. McMaran, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 417; Oetgen v. Ross, 36 Ill. 335. It is not error to overrule a motion for a new trial as of right if no proof that the costs have been paid is presented to the court. McSheely v. Bentley, 31 Ind. 235.

Payment of the costs within the year is a condition precedent to the right to demand a new trial. Whitlock v. Vancleve, 39 Ind. 511. And see Davidson v. Lamprey, 16 Minn. 445; Dawson v. Shillock, 29 Minn. 189; Railsback v. Walke, 81 Ind. 409.

5. Golden v. Snellen, 54 Ind. 282, and cases cited in preceding note. It was held in Myers v. Phillips, 68 Ill. 269, that the right to the new trial was not lost by an omission to pay the damages of one cent, this being too small an amount for the court to concern itself about.

this, it may be stated, as a general rule, that the court is without power to impose conditions or to exercise a discretion.¹ The time within which the application must be made or the second action brought, is a matter of statutory regulation.² The second action must be brought in the same court as the first.³ All objections to granting a new trial as of right are waived by proceeding to try the case the second time.⁴

X. NEW TRIAL IN CRIMINAL CASES—1. In General; Felonies and Misdemeanors.—The principles underlying the rule that new trials in criminal cases cannot be had at the instance of the State, are not within the province of this article,⁵ which treats only of new

But in Pugh v. Reat, 107 Ill. 440, it was adjudged that the right to a new trial was lost by a failure to pay certain additional costs of one dollar.

Where the right to a new trial in ejectment depends on the payment of costs, the order granting the new trial may be vacated in the succeeding term if the costs are not paid. Setzke v. Setzke, 121 Ill. 30.

In Risley v. Rice, 11 Civ. Proc. R. 367, it was held that the terms to be imposed on granting a new trial did not include the payment of the sum awarded for mesne profits.

As to the bond required by the Indiana Rev. Stat. 1064, to pay costs and damages where a new trial as of right is awarded, see Stanley v. Dailey, 112 Ind. 489; Martin v. Martin, 118 Ind. 227.

1. McManamy v. Ewing, McCahon (Kan.) 171; Bellinger v. Martindale, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 113; Marrietta v. Emerson, 5 Ohio St. 288; Rogers v. Wing, 5 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 50; Heseltine v. Simpson, 61 Wis. 427. See also Schrodt v. Bradley, 29 Ind. 352, where it was held that the right, on payment of costs, was absolute and unaffected by a failure of the applicant to comply with an unauthorized condition imposed by the court, such as that the costs should be paid within a certain number of days. And see Scranton v. Stewart, 52 Ind. 68.

An order granting a statutory new trial in ejectment, which recites that it appears that the defeated party has paid all the costs, is a final judgment, and cannot be set aside at a subsequent term. Cook Co. v. Calumet etc. Dock Co., 131 Ill. 305.

2. Under the Michigan statute, the time begins to run from the perfecting of the judgment. People v. Judge of Kent Co. Circuit Ct., 34 Mich. 62.

In South Carolina, the second action must have been brought within two years. Henderson v. Kenner, 1 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 474.

In Pugh v. Reat, 107 Ill. 440, it was held that the application came too late when made April 13th, 1883, judgment having been rendered April 12th, 1882, and the statute requiring the application to be made within one year. And see also Keener v. Union Pac. R. Co., 34 Fed. Rep. 871; Boyce v. Osceola Circuit Judge (Mich. 1890), 44 N. W. Rep. 343; Crews v. Ross, 44 Ind. 481; People v. Judge of Wayne Circuit Court, 24 Mich. 42.

Under the Texas statute (since repealed) a judgment against a plaintiff in an action for the possession of land was conclusive, unless the second action was commenced within the year. It was held that in an action commenced within the year by the former defendant against the grantees of the former plaintiff, the latter were not precluded by the judgment from setting up their claim to the land. Brownsville v. Cavazos, 100 U. S. 138.

Under that statute, the second action must have been brought within the year from the entry of the judgment in the first action, not within the year from the dismissal of an appeal. Martin v. Wayman, 38 Tex. 649.

3. Cunningham v. Milwaukee, 13 Wis. 120. So in Frazer v. Weller, 6 McLean (U. S.) 11, the federal court held that, the first action having been tried in the State court, the defeated party was not at liberty to resort to the federal court.

4. Hutchinson v. Leincke, 107 Ind. 121; Marsh v. Elliott, 51 Ind. 547; Vernia v. Lawson, 54 Ind. 485.

5. See JEOPARDY, 11 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law 926.

And, in support of the general rule trials granted at the instance of the accused. At common law, new trials were not granted in cases of felony, a recommendation to pardon affording the remedy for one whose conviction should not stand.¹ A venire de novo for an irregularity such as ordinarily called for the issue of this writ was grantable in cases of felony.² The English doctrine refusing new trials in felony cases, is at present nowhere followed in the United States,³ though it was recognized in New York no longer ago than in 1832;⁴ in Massachusetts in 1822⁵ it was argued that the English rule was applicable, but the court refused to follow it. In misdemeanors, the English rule has been to grant a new trial instead of recommending a pardon.⁶ In the United States no distinction is now made between felonies and misdemeanors as to granting a new trial, further than that, where the offence is a felony, a new trial is granted the more readily, for the reason that the consequences of a refusal are the greater.⁷

7. 1 Bishop on Crim. Proc., § 1273.

2. Effect on Rights of Accused.—By asking for a new trial, the accused waives his constitutional right to object to being placed in jeopardy the second time. It would seem, on principle, that if he is found guilty of a part of that charged in the indictment and not guilty as to another part, the waiver should be pro tanto and not go to the whole indictment, and, according to the weight of authority, this is so.¹

1. Bishop on Crim. Law, § 1004.

See Campbell v. State, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 333; State v. Kittle, 2 Tyler (Vt.) 471; Esmon v. State, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 14; State v. Kattlemann, 35 Mo. 105; State v. Dark, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 526, to the point that where there is a conviction on one count and an acquittal on the other, there cannot be a conviction on the second trial of that covered by the acquittal on the first trial. And see Slaughter v. State, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 410; Livingston's Case, 14 Gratt. (Va.) 592; State v. Flannigan, 6 Md. 167; State v. Tweedy, 11 Iowa 350, to the point that where there is but one count in an indictment for murder, and the verdict is guilty of manslaughter and not guilty of murder, there cannot be a conviction of murder on the second trial. And see further, as tending to support the same general doctrine, Lithgow v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 297; People v. Gilmore, 4 Cal. 376; Major v. State, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 597; State v. Malling, 11 Iowa 239.

It has been held, however, in Ohio, that where the same offence is charged in different forms in separate counts, and the verdict is guilty on some of the counts, and not guilty on others, everything is opened on the new trial. Jarvis v. State, 19 Ohio St. 585; Lesslie v. State, 18 Ohio St. 390; and State v. Behimer, 20 Ohio St. 572, where the indictment in one count charged murder in the first degree, and it was found that the accused was not guilty of murder in the first degree, but was guilty of murder in the second degree, it was held that the new trial should be had on the original issues. The court said: "If the finding as to the main fact be set aside, the finding as to the circumstances necessarily goes with it;" and "we are of opinion that the verdict is severable only when there is a conviction or an acquittal on different counts for separate and distinct offences, or where there are several defendants; but that, where there is but one defendant, and, in fact, but one offence, the verdict is entire." To the same effect are Bailey v. State, 26 Ga. 579; Mitchell v. State, 8 Yerg. (Tenn.) 514; State v. Commissioners, Riley (S. Car.) 273.

Formerly this was the law in Missouri. State v. Ross, 29 Mo. 32; State v. Smith, 53 Mo. 139. But the Missouri constitution of 1875 abrogated the rule.

In Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 221, it was held by the United States supreme court (reversing the decision of the State courts) that the constitutional provision was an ex post facto law as applied to the case of one convicted before the adoption of the constitution and whose new trial occurred afterwards.

In People v. Palmer, 109 N. Y. 413, it was held that the provisions of the N. Y. Code of Crim. Proc., §§ 464, 543, that "The granting of a new trial places the parties in the same position as if no trial had been had," authorized a trial for an assault in the first degree, where the conviction on the first trial was of an assault in the third degree, and a reversal had followed the defendant's appeal, and that, so construed, the provisions of the Code were constitutional.

In Wisconsin, however, it has been held otherwise, and that under similar circumstances there could not on the second trial be a conviction of murder in the first degree. State v. Martin, 30 Wis. 216; State v. Belden, 33 Wis. 120. In the latter case the authorities are reviewed, and in support of the Wisconsin doctrine, the court cites State v. Kittle, 2 Tyler (Vt.) 471; Campbell v. State, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 334; Esmon v. State, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 14; Jordan v. State, 22 Ga. 546; State v. Tweedy, 11 Iowa 352; *Morris v. 3. Grounds ; Rules Governing Application.—There is no considerable difference between the rules applied to applications for new trials in criminal cases and in civil cases. The difference, so far as any exists, is thus stated by an eminent text writer: "It is in numerous cases rather assumed than decided, that the question whether a new trial shall be granted or not depends on the same rules in criminal causes as in civil. And, justly, it does as to a part of the rules. But we have seen that the burden of proof is in a degree different; and very different is the weight of evidence, which, in a criminal cause, requires the jury to be satisfied of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Therefore, and because by the entire spirit of the criminal law the prisoner is under a protection from the judge, which a party in a civil suit is not, many deem, and it is believed rightly, that new trials should be awarded more freely in criminal causes than in civil, and in criminal the more freely in proportion to the gravity of the punishment."¹ If it is perceived that the evidence was inadequate to support the conviction, or did not cover every element of the offence, a new trial will be rest is not mentioned in the verdict, the authorities are at variance. It has been held in such cases that the verdict was too incomplete to sustain any judgment. State v. Sutton, 4 Gill (Md.) 492. Contra, Brooks v. State, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 25; Stoltz v. People, 5 Ill. 168; it has been held that such a verdict is equivalent to an acquittal of that part of the charge as to which the verdict is silent. Brooks v. State, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 25; Weinzorpflin v. State, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 186; Kirk's Case, 9 Leigh (Va.) 627; Morris v. State, 8 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 762; People v. Dowling, 84 N. Y. 478; State v. State, 13 Tex. 168. Contra, United States v. Keen, 1 McLean (U. S.) 429. It has been held that the prosecuting officer in such case might nol. pros. the part of the charge not responded to. United States v. Keen, 1 McLean (U. S.) 429; Commonwealth v. Stedman, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 444. And it has been held that the part of the charge not responded to might be disregarded altogether, and that judgment might be rendered on the rest. State v. Coleman, 3 Ala. 14; Nabors v. State, 6

Ala. 200; Swinney v. State, 8 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 576; Weinzorpflin v. State, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 188. In 1 Bishop on Crim. Law, § 1006, it is said: "There seems to be no objection, in principle, to permitting the prosecuting officer to claim judgment on so much of the verdict as is distinct; and, when he does, the defendant, who has been in jeopardy on the whole, is protected by the constitution from any further prosecution for the rest of the charge. But this is where there is no waiver of the constitutional provision by a proceeding for a new trial. If the defendant has a new trial after the imperfect finding and without the nol. pros., he seems in principle to stand, in respect to those parts of the allegation on which the jury were silent, in the same position as if the verdict were too defective in form to sustain any judgment, liable to be retried on the whole. But the authorities are not uniform to the latter effect: the greater number of cases seem to favor the extending of the new trial only to those parts of the indictment found expressly against the defendant."

charge to the jury in the absence of the prisoner's counsel. But in State v. Paylor, 89 N. Car. 539, it was held that the defendant's absence during the argument of counsel was not ground for a new trial, no injury appearing; and in State v. Jones, 91 N. Car. 654, it was held that one could not as of right demand a new trial on the ground of the absence of his counsel from the court room when the verdict was rendered.

In Hair v. State, 16 Neb. 601, it was held that the voluntary absence of the accused during the examination of a witness, who was re-examined after the return of the accused, the trial being stopped as soon as his absence was ascertained, afforded no ground for a new trial.

Both at common law and under the Texas Code, the absence of the defendant in a felony case, during the hearing and determination of his motion for a new trial, is a ground for a new trial. Gibson v. State, 3 Tex. App. 437.

In Griffin v. State, 34 Ohio St. 299, it was held, however, that an objection that a motion for a new trial was made, argued and overruled in the absence of the prisoner, came too late when made in the first instance after sentence.

The refusal of motions in the absence of the prisoner, as it does not preclude the renewal of them at the trial, is no ground of exception to the verdict. Kelly v. State, 3 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 518.

But in People v. McGeery, 6 Park.

Cr. (N. Y.) 653, it was held that this would be presumed by the appellate court in support of the verdict, the record being silent upon the point.

5. State v. Taylor, 37 La. An. 40; Price v. State, 67 Ga. 723; State v. Duestoe, 1 Bay (S. Car.) 377.

It was adjudged in People v. Moran, 48 Mich. 639, that the endorsement upon an information, after the beginning of the trial, of the names of additional witnesses, in disregard of the statute and without leave of the court, was ground for a new trial.

In Ray v. State, 1 Greene (Iowa) 316, and in Skipworth v. State, 8 Tex. App. 135, it was held that this afforded no ground for a new trial if not objected to on the trial.

While the text statement is an accurate statement of the general rule, in some jurisdictions error is deemed ground for a new trial irrespective of the question of apparent injury done. In Kentucky, for example, it was held in Cornelius v. Com., 15 B. Mon. (Ky.) 539, that for error in refusing to admit competent evidence a new trial should be granted, though on the whole the verdict seemed to be right. And so in Tennessee. Peck v. State, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 78; Morehead v. State, 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 635; and in Texas, Draper v. State, 22 Tex. 400. And, to the same point, see Gillespie v. Gillespie, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 89; Gaines v. Buford, 1 Dana (Ky.) 481; People v. Williams, 18 Cal. 187; Frain v. State, 40 Ga. 529; Wardell v. Hughes, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 418.

1. The fact that a prisoner was arraigned after the panel of jurors had been called and put upon him, and that, after the arraignment, the court allowed the panel to be put upon the prisoner again, is no ground for a new trial. Hester v. State, 17 Ga. 130.

Where the defendant in a criminal trial has been acquitted by the court on agreed facts, a new trial will not be granted because the court failed to sign each day's proceedings. State v. Newkirk, 80 Ind. 131.

Although the statute provides that two judges shall be a quorum, if an opinion sustaining a demurrer, assented to by both, is delivered by one sitting alone, and both sit at the trial, there is no irregularity requiring a new trial. State v. Congdon, 14 R. I. 458.

A new trial of a criminal case will not be granted because the presiding judge, upon an adjournment for dinner, inadvertently neglected to admonish the jury not to converse about the case until its final submission to them. People v. Draper, 28 Hun (N. Y.) 1.

It has been held that the court did not err in refusing to set aside a verdict on the ground that the jury were empanelled and sworn before the defendant was required to plead to the indictment. State v. Cole, 19 Wis. 129.

In State v. Camp, 23 Vt. 551, it was held that a new trial was properly refused in a misdemeanor case, though a State's witness testified to material facts without being sworn, it not appearing that the accused or his counsel were ignorant of the irregularity until after the verdict, that the testimony was untrue, or that the accused sustained injury.

In Thomas v. State, 27 Ga. 287, it was held not to be ground for a new trial that a State's witness, who had testified, told a witness who had not yet been examined what had been testified to.

In People v. Ah Who, 49 Cal. 32, it was held that the exercise of the discretion of the trial court in refusing a new trial would not be revised, the point taken being that a witness, who on cross-examination testified that he was in jail, was asked whether he was not in jail charged with a certain offence.

In Jackson v. State, 39 Ohio St. 37, it was adjudged that no ground for a new trial appeared in the fact that the State concealed from its witness the accused has concealed himself, having run away on learning of the verdict.¹ On the second trial a second arraignment is not necessary;² nor a second indictment, the original not having been adjudged insufficient.³

XI. PROCEDURE ON THE APPLICATION FOR NEW TRIAL—1. In What Proceedings Made.—The remedy supplied by a motion for a new trial is, as a general rule, applicable only to actions and not to special proceedings,⁴ and is designed to enable the court to correct such errors occurring during the progress of the trial as do not appear on the face of the record.⁵ Motions upon the pleadings, and other fact that he was under indictment for harboring the accused.

In Keithler v. State, 10 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 192, it was held that a new trial was not required for the reason that an accessory was found guilty on the testimony of the principal alone, though such testimony was somewhat contradictory and inconsistent.

In Bacon v. State, 22 Fla. 52, it was held that it was not necessarily ground for a new trial that a codefendant tried at the same time and acquitted was a material witness for the defendant convicted.

In People v. Graham, 21 Cal. 261, it was held not to be ground for a new trial that a child was withdrawn after being sworn and without testifying, it appearing that it was too young, the ground of the motion being that the child's appearance on the stand was calculated to excite the sympathies of the jury.

In Walker v. State, 39 Ark. 221, it was held that one convicted was not entitled as of right to a new trial on a discovery after verdict that a material witness was incompetent because of a conviction of felony.

In Brown v. State, 60 Ga. 210, it was held a new trial should not be granted on the ground that a witness had perjured himself until there had been a conviction for the perjury.

In Parham v. State, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 498, it was held that a new trial should not be granted upon affidavits aimed merely at an incidental statement of a State's witness.

1. State v. Rippon, 2 Bay (S. Car.) 99.

2. Byrd v. State, 1 How. (Miss.) 247.

3. State v. Hughes, 2 Ala. 102.

Where a new trial in a criminal case has been ordered because the court improperly refused a change of venue, the defendant, at the new trial, must file new affidavits showing that the cause for the change still continues. State v. Nash, 7 Iowa 347.

The provisions of the New York Rev. Stat. and Code of Civ. Proc. do not apply to a judgment rendered upon a voluntary submission. Lang v. Ropke, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 701. And a judgment on the pleadings is not a trial or verdict requiring that a motion for a new trial or for an arrest of judgment be filed within four days under the Missouri Rev. Stat., § 3707. Todd v. Missouri R. Co., 33 Mo. App. 110.

A motion for a new trial is, as a general rule, necessary to correct such errors as do not appear upon the record, consisting of the summons or writ, and the pleadings, verdict and judgment. Such errors are deemed to have been waived, and the appellate court will refuse to review them if the proper foundation for such review has not been laid by a motion for a new trial. Ford v. Clark, 12 Ark. 99; Danley v. Robbins, 3 Ark. 144; Berry v. Singer, 10 Ark. 483; McClurkin v. Ewing, 42 Ill. 283; Daniels v. Shields, 38 Ill. 197; *Pottle v. matters arising before the trial is actually entered upon, furnish no basis for the motion,¹ but where the case is regularly called for trial, upon the day set for hearing, upon issues made by the pleadings, the trial then commences, in a sense authorizing an application for a new trial, even though all evidence on the part of the prejudiced party was excluded, and judgment rendered against him on motion.² Under the statutes of some of the States, however, a motion for a new trial can be made only when Stone, 6 Neb. 378; Horbach v. Miller, 4 Neb. 31; Joiner v. Van Alstyne, 20 Neb. 578; Cropsey v. Wiggenhorn, 3 Neb. 108; State v. Phares, 24 W. Va. 657; Danks v. Rodeheaver, 26 W. Va. 274; Riddle v. Core, 21 W. Va. 530; Shrewsbury v. Miller, 10 W. Va. 115; Vineyard v. Matney, 68 Mo. 105; Wetherall v. Harris, 51 Mo. 65; Kauffman v. Harrington, 23 Mo. App. 573; Exchange Nat. Bank v. Allen, 68 Mo. 474; Hatcher v. Moore, 51 Mo. 115; Pogue v. State, 13 Mo. 444; Gruen v. Bamberger, 25 Mo. App. 89. Contra, Fine v. Rogers, 15 Mo. 315; Hill v. Alexander, 77 Mo. 296.

Upon a trial by the court without a jury, the general rule is that an appellate court will not review a case on the ground of insufficiency of evidence, unless the question is first presented to the trial court in a motion for a new trial. Bills v. Stanton, 69 Ill. 51, 55; Helm v. Coffey, 80 Ky. 176; Seibel v. Vaughan, 69 Ill. 257, 260; Snell v. Trustees M. E. Church, 58 Ill. 290; Barnes v. Barber, 69 Ill. 401; Reichwald v. Gaylord, 73 Ill. 503; Choate v. Hathaway, 73 Ill. 518; Nimmo v. Kuykendall, 85 Ill. 476; Obermier v. Core, 25 Ark. 562.

But it is held in some States that proper exceptions to the findings and judgment will raise the question on an appeal or writ of error of the sufficiency of the evidence. Village of Hyde Park v. Cornell, 4 Ill. App. 602; Metcalf v. Fouts, 27 Ill. 110; Mahony v. Davis, 44 Ill. 291; Jones v. Buffum, 50 Ill. 277; Force Mfg. Co. v. Horton, 74 Ill. 310; Davis v. Scripps, 2 Mo. 187.

A new trial is unnecessary where all the facts had been found upon which to base a judgment, and a mere computation was required to ascertain the amount for which judgment should be entered. People v. Sierra etc. Min. Co., 39 Cal. 511.

A new trial is only a judicial re-examination of the issues of fact; not of questions presented in arriving at the issues, whether those questions were raised by demurrer to a pleading, or by a motion to strike out. Error of the court in ruling on a motion to strike out can only be reserved by bill of exceptions and is not a reason assignable for a new trial. Milliken v. Ham, 36 Ind. 166.

In a common-law action, where the law and the facts are submitted to the court, a motion and grounds for a new trial are necessary to obtain a review of the judgment. Helm v. Coffey, 80 Ky. 176.

In Georgia it has been held that a motion for a new trial is a part of the pleadings, and does not belong to a bill of exceptions. Cox v. Weems, 64 Ga. 165.

1. Powder River Cattle Co. v. Custer Co. (Mont. 1889), 22 Pac. Rep. 383; Scherrer v. Hale (Mont. 1889), 22 Pac. Rep. 151; Adams v. Howard, 14 Vt. 158.

A judgment rendered on default in pleading, will not support a motion for a new trial. Marion etc. R. Co. v. Lomax, 7 Ind. 406; Hallam v. Doyle, 35 Minn. 337.

But default in answering is not an admission of the plaintiff's case under Georgia practice, the defendant, therefore, in such a case may apply after judgment for a new trial. Hayden v. Johnson, 59 Ga. 104.

2. Moore v. Bates, 46 Cal. 30.

Under the Code of California, § 980, where a nonsuit has been granted on the trial of an appeal from a justice's court, the superior court has jurisdiction to grant a new trial. Massman v. San Francisco Superior Ct., 71 Cal. 582.

a verdict has been rendered in a jury trial,¹ or its equivalent, a decision and findings have been made upon a trial by the court.² And the fact that the verdict or the decision is not final, does not change the rule.³ Within these rules new trials may be had as a general proposition in all classes of actions and legal proceedings.⁴

A new trial, or a rehearing, as it is called in equity, may be granted in an equitable action at any time before final decree,⁵

After sustaining a demurrer to the evidence, a motion for a new trial is proper. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Goodrich, 38 Kan. 224.

Under Supp. Rev. N. J., p. 260, pl. 207, as amended by acts 1888, p. 470, giving the district court power to order a new trial where there has been a verdict, that court has no power to grant a rule setting down the cause for retrial after the jury have disagreed. Hartman v. Rose (N. J.), 20 Atl. 29.

It has been held in a New York case, however, that application for a new trial on the judge's minutes may be made, notwithstanding there was no verdict. Duden v. Waitzfelder, 2 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 295, citing McDonald v. Walter, 40 N. Y. 551; Algeo v. Duncan, 39 N. Y. 314.

And a plaintiff who has been nonsuited may move at special term for a new trial. He is not confined to taking an appeal after judgment entered upon the nonsuit. This was the former practice, and is not changed by New York Code. Moloney v. Dows, 9 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 86; 18 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 27. Compare Jackson v. Fassett, 9 Abb. Pr. 137; s. c., 17 How. The words, "motion for a new trial," as used in Massachusetts Stat., 1842, ch. 89, § 2, are intended to include all cases which are continued, on the motion of a dissatisfied party, with a view

In New York a new trial may be had in the appellate court on an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, where a judgment is demanded for a sum exceeding $50.00, but this does not apply to a proceeding to recover possession of real estate. *Brown v. A petition for a rehearing of a cause after final judgment under the Alabama Code, §§ 3161-6, must be presented to and the grounds upon which a rehearing may be had are as numerous and various as the cases themselves. Whenever the court is called upon to determine a question, either of law or of fact, the decision may be the subject of an application for a rehearing.¹ Where a court of chancery directs issues to be tried at law, to inform the conscience of the court, the verdict being designed merely for the advisement of the court, it will nicely balance the facts and the evidence on both sides, and if it thinks that injustice has been done, or that error has been committed, or if it is dissatisfied with the verdict, a new trial or rehearing will be ordered.² Subject to the above qualifications, the court will ordinarily be governed by the rules and principles applied to such motions in suits at law.³

the judge in person; filing with the clerk is insufficient. Ex parte Johnson, 60 Ala. 429.

The rulings of the court on exceptions of law to a master's report do not form grounds for a motion for new trial after verdict. Taylor v. Central R. & Banking Co., 67 Ga. 122.

New trials are peculiar to courts of common law where jury trials prevail, and a rehearing belongs to chancery jurisdiction, and as the probate court is not provided with a jury, and has no chancery jurisdiction, it cannot grant a new trial or rehearing after deciding a contested election for justice of the peace under the statute. Arellano v. Chacon, 1 N. Mex. 269.

An erroneous decree upon a correct verdict is to be corrected by exceptions made at the time, and not by a motion for a new trial. Greer v. Willis, 67 Ga. 43; Taylor v. Central R. & Banking Co., 67 Ga. 122.

A new trial involving the right of a receiver to fees allowed him should not, ordinarily, be granted after his death, his character being put in issue. Morgan v. Hardee, 71 Ga. 736.

A rehearing and new trial will not be allowed in Alabama for other grounds than those mentioned in the Revised Code, 1871. Lawson v. Moore, 45 Ala. 519.

But where, in an equity action, specific questions of fact are ordered to be tried by jury, and their verdict is produced and used upon the trial of the action, no application having been made to set it aside, the general term has no authority to set it aside and order a new trial, on appeal from the judgment. *Jackson v. And in ejectment, where the answer set up, with other defences, was an equitable counter-claim which was dismissed, on trial of the issue thereon at an equity term of the court, and the other issues were tried afterwards, and a verdict for plaintiff was had, the defendant was entitled to a new trial of the other issues, but not to a new trial of the equitable issue. *Post v. 2. Who May Apply.—It is a rule of general application that a party to the action or proceeding, only, may make an application for a new trial.¹ Where a stranger, who is not a party to the record, becomes a purchaser of, or otherwise interested in, the interest of one of the litigants, he cannot on that ground make the application;² he must first procure his substitution as a party in the place of the person whose interest he purchased.³ A motion for a new trial may be prosecuted by the representative of a deceased party, where the motion was made by the party before his death,⁴ and this rule applies in actions which do not survive, if the motion is made by the representative of a defendant who has died since the judgment was rendered.⁵

On application by petition after the expiration of the term of court at which the judgment was rendered, all persons should be made parties who were parties to the original action.⁶ Under stat-

The question, whether a new trial should be granted in a chancery suit, on the ground that by reason of newly discovered evidence a further hearing would be equitable, is a question of fact to be decided at the trial term. Brooks v. Howard, 58 N. H. 91.

A motion for a new trial of an equity cause, as well as an action at law, on the ground that the verdict did not cover the issues, must specify wherein. Bessman v. Girardey, 66 Ga. 18.

In an action against defendant, in which judgment is recovered for a tort committed by him as agent for another, it is error to grant a new trial on an application made by the principal in defendant's name, but against his will. Rogers v. Hoenig, 46 Wis. 361.

In New York judgment in ejectment may be vacated and a new trial ordered "upon the application of the party against whom it was rendered, his heir, devisee, or assignee." Howell v. Leavitt, 50 N. Y. 238.

Application by Agent.—A demand for a second trial in an action for the recovery of real property may be made by the party himself, and a notice embodying such demand, made in his name by an agent authorized by him to make such demand, if seasonably served, is sufficient. West v. St. Paul R. Co., 40 Minn. 189. And see Sacia v. O'Connor, 58 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 420.

Bond.—Where the applicant for a new trial has filed the bond prescribed by law, a substituted plaintiff need give no new bond, but the order granting the new trial and the filing of the bond enure to the benefit of the new plaintiff. Brown v. Cody, 115 Ind. 484.

4. Gates v. Treat, 25 Conn. 71. And see Turner v. Booker, 2 Dana (Ky.) 334.

In Gates v. Treat, 25 Conn. 71, the court said, "According to the rules of practice which prevail in the superior court, that is the only mode in which he can revise the proceedings on the trial of the case. To refuse to allow him to prosecute this motion would, therefore, be to establish the principal with the creditors and heirs of the deceased person, and those otherwise interested in his estate would be remediless against errors which may have intervened on the trial, a doctrine which would be palpable and most unjust and opposed to the principles of the given law by which, in all personal actions, an erroneous judgment may be reversed by the representatives of either party who is prejudiced by it."

Entering Judgment Nunc Pro Tunc.—Where the entry of judgment has been delayed by a motion for a new trial, and during the pendency of such motion the plaintiff dies, and afterwards the motion is denied, the judgment may be entered nunc pro tunc as of the time when the trial terminated. Fitzgerald v. Stewart, 53 Pa. St. 347.

utes conferring the right to move for a new trial upon "the party aggrieved," a person not a party to the action cannot, in a legal sense, be considered as a "party aggrieved,"¹ and the question, Is there a judgment against him? is usually the test as to whether or not a party is aggrieved;² but a party may be aggrieved by a judgment though it is in his favor, if it is inadequate to furnish the proper relief, or if based on erroneous conclusions.³

A joint motion for a new trial by several parties can be made only when each and all of them are entitled to make it,⁴ and such a motion may be denied if the verdict is justified as to either or any of the defendants.⁵ But though the judgment or verdict is joint, either may make the motion without joining the other.⁶ This rule applies also to a motion by the defendants in actions

Where two or more parties are sued jointly, and a verdict and judgment rendered against them, either defendant desiring to raise a question peculiar to himself in the motion for a new trial against two or more joint tortfeasors,¹ and a verdict may be set aside as to one and judgment entered against the other.²

Both at common law and under the systems of practice in use in most of the States, the court may, upon its own motion, in a proper case, direct a new trial in the exercise of its inherent power to correct errors which may have been committed to the prejudice of either party.³

3. To What Court.—The power to entertain a motion for and to grant a new trial, is a judicial function not possessed by legislative bodies,⁴ though where final judgment has been rendered in favor of a State, its legislature may waive the benefit of such judgment and permit the adverse party to retry the action.⁵

The power of courts of general jurisdiction to entertain motions

In State v. McCrea (La. 1888), 3 So. Rep. 380, the court held that a justice of the peace had power to grant a new trial upon his own motion, inferring by its decision that there was no limit upon the exercise of such power. The court said it was discretionary with the justice, as with all judges, to set aside his previous proceedings, if he thought them erroneous, and to rehear the case.

In State v. Adams, 84 Mo. 310; s. c., 12 Mo. App. 436, the court limits its right to set aside a verdict and grant a new trial, upon its own motion, to cases in which the triers of fact have erred in a matter of law or have been guilty of misbehavior, basing their decision upon a statute providing that only one new trial shall be allowed to either party, except (1) Where the triers of the fact shall have erred in a matter of law. (2) Where the jury shall be guilty of misbehavior.

In Lloyd v. Brink, 35 Tex. 1, the court held that where a jury renders a verdict in proper form and responsive to the issues presented to them, by the court, no discretionary power is vested in the court to set the verdict aside upon its own motion, notwithstanding the verdict may be against the weight of evidence or in disregard of the instructions of the court. See also Bartling v. Jamison, 44 Mo. 141; State v. Rombauer, 44 Mo. 595.

for new trials existed at common law, and is inherent in them.¹ And a statutory provision with reference to new trials should be considered rather as a limitation upon than a grant of power in the premises.² Courts of inferior or limited jurisdiction, however, cannot, in the absence of statutory provision, thus control their verdicts or judgments,³ but power to grant new trials has been conferred by statute on probate courts in many of the States,⁴ as well as upon justices of the peace,⁵ though that conferred upon justices of the peace is usually limited to nonsuits and judgments by default.⁶

The courts of common pleas, in New Jersey, since the act of 1846, "constituting courts for the trial of small causes," cannot grant a new trial in cases of appeal to them; and this applies to appeals pending at the time the statute passed, inasmuch as the general repealing act of that year did not apply to this act, it being merely a restraining act on the previous powers of the courts of common pleas. *Cortleyou v. But it is not in every case that the defendant will be entitled to demand and obtain a new trial in the appellate court by virtue of such demand, and an improper pleading cannot be made the

In the absence of statutory regulations, the general rule is that an application for a new trial must be addressed to the court in which the cause was tried,¹ and, under circumstances rendering it necessary, it may be made to the judge who presided at the trial, during vacation.² This rule is particularly applicable, and of nearly universal application in case of motions for new trial for errors of fact.³ Where a judge dies or goes out of office, however, his successor may entertain the motion,⁴ and where a cause has been transferred from one district to another by a change of lines or otherwise, such a motion may be heard by the proper tribunal in the new

Though the regular term of court is being held by a special judge on account of disability of the regular judge as to certain cases, the latter may, at the same time, and in any room of the court house which his discretion approves, hear and dispose of a motion for a new trial of a case tried before him during that term. Niagara Ins. Co. v. Lee, 73 Tex. 641.

The responsibility of passing upon and deciding a motion for a new trial is upon the circuit judge before whom the case is tried, and should not be cast upon the appellate court in the first instance. The practice of overruling such a motion pro forma is anomalous, and should not be indulged. Penn v. Oglesby, 89 Ill. 110; State v. Summers (Kan. 1890), 24 Pac. Rep. 1099. A motion for new trial is more properly considered by the judge before whom the trial was had; but a judge sitting subsequently at the same term is not precluded from considering such motion. Malone v. Eastin, 2 Port. (Ala.) 182.

A subsequent judge may hear and determine a motion to set aside a verdict of a jury and grant a new trial, where such motion was made before a district,¹ while power to entertain such motions has been conferred by statute in many and perhaps all of the States upon courts other than those in which the trial took place, in cases and under circumstances and conditions differing greatly in the different States.² Where two courts have concurrent jurisdiction to enter-

A new trial, in Georgia, may be granted by a judge who did not preside at the first trial; but the brief of the testimony should be presented to the judge who presided, unless prevented by some providential cause. Field v. Thornton, 1 Ga. 306. And where, in the District of Columbia, issues are sent by the orphans' court to the special term, to be tried by a jury, and a verdict thereon rendered, a motion for a new trial on a bill of exceptions will be heard in the supreme court of the District, at general term in the first instance. Coughlan v. Poulson, 2 MacArthur (D. C.) 208.

In Rhode Island, the supreme court has power to entertain a petition of a party erroneously nonsuited by the court of common pleas, filed within one year of the nonsuit, when he had a right to the judgment of the jury on his case, not having had "a full, fair and impartial trial," in the sense of the statute. Thurston v. Schroeder, 6 R. I. 272.

In New York, a motion for a new trial may be made at a special term upon any of the grounds for which a motion for a new trial may be entertained. See Lusk v. Lusk, 4 How. Pr. (N. A motion for a new trial on the ground of surprise and newly discovered evidence must, under New York Code, § 1002, be made at a special term. And jurisdiction to hear such motion is not conferred upon the trial judge simply by the appearance of the parties before him, and by the argument of the motion on the merits alone. Newhall v. Appleton, 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. 6.

So under §§ 2548, 2588 a motion for a new trial, on the question of undue influence as invalidating a will, where the surrogate's decree sustaining the will has been reversed at the general term of the supreme court, must be made at the special term. Re Clark, 40 Hun (N. Y.) 233.

But where the motion is founded upon an allegation of error in a finding of fact or ruling upon the law made by the judge upon the trial, it cannot be heard at a special term held by another judge, unless the judge who presided at the trial is dead, or his term of office has expired, or he specifically directs the motion to be heard before another judge. See Giraudat v. Korn, 8 Daly (N. Y.) 406.

A motion for a new trial may be made upon the judge's minutes at the term during which the cause was tried, tain motions for a new trial, after a refusal in one, an application cannot be made in the other.¹

Where it would have been proper for a court of law to grant a new trial if the application had been made while the court had the power, it is equally proper for a court of equity to do so if the application is made when the court of law has no means of granting it.² But courts of equity have always evinced great hesitation about interfering with the determinations of courts of law, to the end that litigation should upon exceptions taken or because the verdict is excessive, inadequate, contrary to the law, or contrary to evidence. See Moore v. New York El. R. Co., 24 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 77; s. c., 18 Civ. Proc. Rep. 146.

And a trial court may make an order directing a hearing in a motion for a new trial upon exceptions in cases of jury trials to be had at the general term in the first instance. See McNaughton v. Osgood, 114 N. Y. 574; Snell v. Loucks, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 385; Rogers v. Goodwin, 64 N. Car. 278. But a mere motion for a new trial, on exceptions cannot be heard at general term, when judgment has been already rendered and no appeal has been taken. Merchants' Bank v. Scott, 59 Barb. (N. Y.) 641.

An order at circuit, directing a case and exceptions to be heard in the first instance at general term, may be vacated at special term, and permission be given to move for a new trial upon the case and exceptions at special term. Post v. Hathorn, 54 N. Y. 147. And such an order will be deemed waived by proceeding at special term. Ely v. McNight, 30 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 97.

It seems that the general term of the supreme court can, at its discretion, grant a new trial, although no exceptions were taken on the trial. Standard Oil Co. v. Amazon Ins. Co., 79 N. Y. 506. But the judge who tries a cause is not authorized to entertain a motion made upon his minutes to set aside a verdict as contrary to the instructions of the court. Tinson v. Welch, 51 N. Y. 244.

In the District of Columbia the legal effect of an order that a motion for a new trial, in the supreme court, be heard at the general term in the first instance, is equivalent to a refusal of the presiding justice to entertain the motion upon his minutes of the trial; and the case can then only be heard at the general term upon a bill of exceptions to be settled by the justice. Doddridge v. Gaines, 1 MacArthur (D. C.) 335.

The federal courts follow the State courts, and all motions in a suit at common law, which are required by the practice of the State courts to be made at a special term of a State court, may be made at a stated term of a federal court. Emma Silver Min. Co. v. Park, 14 Blatchf. (U. S.) 411.

1. Newby v. Territory, 1 Oreg. 163.

Where the judge who presided at a trial in the circuit court refused a motion for a new trial, based upon the ground of excessive damages, and an appeal was taken to the supreme court, and dismissed for want of jurisdiction, another judge of the circuit court has no power to grant an application for a new trial upon a case settled, but based upon the same grounds as the former motion. Steele v. Charlotte etc. R. Co., 14 S. Car. 324.

2. Colyer v. Langford, 1 A. K. Marsh (Ky.) 237; Deputy v. Tobias, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 311; s. c., 12 Am. Dec. 243; Ballance v. Loomis, 22 Ill. 82; Hoskins v. Hattenbach, 14 Iowa 319; *Horn v. When a judge of a circuit court is disabled by sudden sickness from disposing of a motion for a new trial during the term at which the judgment was rendered, the party filing the motion may, upon showing the facts in his complaint, and that he was guilty of no negligence and had a meritorious defence or cause of action, obtain relief in equity. Leigh v. Armor 35 Ark. 123.

In Georgia, whenever a court of be ended,¹ and they will do so only where a party is deprived of the means of defence by circumstances beyond his control,² and then only when it is made to appear that at the trial of the cause injustice was done,³ and that the applicant has been guilty of no laches, and has done everything that could reasonably be required of him in order to obtain relief at law.⁴ Where such a motion has been made at law, and denied, it will not be entertained by a court of equity.⁵ The court of equity does not in direct terms grant a new trial, but compels the party in whose favor the decision was rendered to submit to a new trial, or be perpetually enjoined from proceeding on his victory.⁶ This jurisdiction of equity has gone largely into disuse, courts of law having been equity has power to grant a new trial, such new trial can be granted on the common law side of the superior court, upon precisely the same principles. Eufaula etc. Ins. Co. v. Plant, 37 Ga. 672.

In order to relief in equity for a refusal to grant a new trial at law on the ground of accident or newly discovered evidence, three elements must concur: That the complainant made every effort in his power to discover the evidence and failed; that such evidence, if seasonably known, would probably have produced a different result; and that the judgment is unjust. Brown v. Luehrs, 95 Ill. 195.

A court of equity will not grant a new trial in a case at law, on ground of newly discovered evidence, for the purpose of impeaching witnesses. Woodside v. Morgan, 92 Ill. 273.

Equity will not order a new trial of a cause at law solely upon the ground of error in the judgment, and that the law court adjourned before a motion for a new trial could be made and disposed of there. Johnson v. Branch, 48 Ark. 535.

On a bill in equity for relief against a judgment at law, and a new trial on account of newly discovered evidence, the complainant will not be entitled to relief unless such evidence is incontrovertible and conclusive. Buckelew v. Chipman, 5 Cal. 399.

The New Trial.—Where a judgment has been recovered at law, and there has been an injunction from proceeding thereon, and a new trial has been or-authorized by statute to grant new trials in all but very extraordinary and unusual cases.¹

4. When the Application May be Made.—At common law and in courts of chancery, no positive time was fixed within which an application for a new trial must be made; and where the court had no rule on the subject it was left largely to the discretion of the judge to whom the application was made.² Statutory provisions have been made, however, in nearly if not all the States, a large number of which provide that the motion must be made at the same term of court during which the cause was tried,³ while others declare that the motion must be brought on or dered, the new trial may be had in chancery or at law, at the discretion of the chancellor, and unless the party who recovered judgment consents to such new trial, he will be perpetually enjoined from enforcing his judgment. Cairo etc. R. Co. v. Titus, 35 N. J. Eq. 384.

The statute giving the right to make a motion for a new trial not fixing any limit of time within which it must be made, it may be made after judgment, although that could not be done at common law, if there was no reasonable opportunity to make it before, and if the party uses due diligence to make it as soon afterwards as possible. Kimball v. Palmerlee, 29 Minn. 302.

Applications for new trials being always addressed to the discretion of the court, such an application was refused after the lapse of eleven years. M'Daniel v. Will, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 550.

Where an act of the legislature giving a new trial provides for new entry of the action, without naming at what term, it shall be intended as restricted to the next term of the court at which an entry is admissible. Pearl v. Allen, 2 Tyler (Vt.) 325.

The fact that the trial court has adjourned on the last day of the term, and is only waiting to sign the minutes of the term and the record of the case last tried, does not render it too late to present affidavits showing that the verdict in that case is a gambling verdict, and to have it set aside, although a motion for a new trial has been made and overruled, where the facts showing the character of the verdict were not discovered until the motion had been made. East Tennessee etc. R. Co. v. Winters, 85 Tenn. 240.

Where judgment was rendered in favor of the defendant, upon his demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence, on May 22nd, and the next day the court adjourned to June 20th, a motion for a new trial, filed on the latter day, was made too late. Pratt v. Kelley, 24 Kan. 111.

Under the New York Code of Procedure, a motion may be made at special term for a new trial, after entry or judgment upon the verdict, on the ground that the verdict is against the weight of evidence, or of surprise or newly discovered evidence, or misconduct of the jury. *Tracey v. Although the language of the statute is that, in certain cases, "the court must make an order for a new trial," the right to insist upon the order being made may be lost by laches. Fleet v. Kulbfleisch, 43 Hun (N. Y.) 443.

Presumption of Laches.—Where the record showed no date when the motion for a new trial was filed, but the hearing thereon was thirteen days after judgment, it will be presumed that the motion was not filed in time. Hover v. Tenney, 27 Kan. 133.

Notice of Decision.—Where, after a decision rendered by the court, the party against whom decision is made applies for time to file a motion and statement for a new trial, such application is not a waiver of the notice of decision under Laws Utah 1884, § 536, which provides that the party moving for a new trial must, within ten days after notice of decision by the court, serve on the opposite party notice of his motion. Burlock v. Shupe (Utah 1888), 17 Pac. Rep. 19.

Notice Actual Knowledge.—A notice of intention to move for a new trial, filed and served fourteen years after entry of judgment, is not given in time, though the moving party had no formal notice of the judgment; the record showing that he had actual knowledge of it at or about the time it was rendered. *Gray v. When no notice of intention to move for a new trial is made within two days of the rendition of judgment, the court, by adjourning in the meantime, loses jurisdiction of the case, and has no authority subsequently to grant leave to give the notice nunc pro tunc. Killip v. Empire Mill etc. Co., 2 Nev. 34.

Judicial acts by a judge after the expiration of his term are absolutely void; thus a motion for a new trial, granted by a circuit judge in vacation after the four months allowed by statute, is void; nor will the consent of parties be effectual to confer the power derived by statute, so that the appearance by a party defending the suit gives no validity to the trial, and judgment will be entered by this court on the verdict irrespective of the order for the new trial. Coopwood v. Prewett, 30 Miss. 206.

Provisions which define the time for

Under the New York Code Civ. Proc., § 1005, however, providing that entry, collection, or other enforcement of a judgment does not prejudice a subsequent motion for a new trial, such a motion does not come too late, where the judgment is entered on the 29th day of June, the case is settled and filed and notice of the motion served in the following September, and the motion is heard on the 1st of October. *Holmes v. In Nebraska a new trial can only be granted after judgment for specific causes, which must be assigned in the motion therefor. Spencer v. Thistle, 13 Neb. 227.

In Indiana under the revised statutes of 1881, § 561, declaring that a motion for a new trial may be made either before or after judgment, provided it be made and filed at the term at which the verdict or "decision" is rendered, it is proper practice to move for a new trial immediately after a finding of facts by the court. Herkimer v. McGregor (Ind. 1890), 26 N. E. Rep. 44.

A motion for a new trial may be filed after judgment has been entered, and the court is not bound to delay the entry of a judgment until it has been filed. Cox v. Baker, 113 Ind. 612.

Judgment as Security.—Plaintiff hav-

These statutory provisions are usually held to be mandatory,¹ and if a motion is made or filed after the prescribed time, it is of no avail,² and must be overruled unless it is established by the applicant that he was unavoidably prevented from making the motion in season.³ The stringency of this rule is not relieved by the fact that the verdict was a special one, and that the entry of judgment was delayed by the court.⁴ But the rights of ing recovered a verdict, defendant was allowed time to make a case, with the privilege to plaintiff to enter his judgment as security. This did not deprive defendant of the right to move for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against evidence. Benedict v. Caffé, 3 Duer (N. Y.) 669.

A motion for a new trial, made after the term at which judgment was entered, cannot be reviewed on appeal from such judgment. Leary v. Leary, 68 Wis. 662.

In Nebraska error lies to the district court for granting a new trial on a petition filed after the adjournment of the term, on the ground of newly discovered evidence. Kruger v. Adams etc. Harvester Co., 9 Neb. 526.

Conversely, after a new trial has been granted, it is too late to object that the motion therefor was not made in time. Geiss v. Franklin Ins. Co. (Ind. 1890), 24 N. E. Rep. 99.

The proper practice, where a motion for a new trial is not made in time, is to move for its dismissal on its hearing, not to move to dismiss a writ of error to the refusal of a new trial. Cook v. Cook, 67 Ga. 381.

But a court may vary its own rule of practice in permitting a motion for a new trial to be filed nunc pro tunc within the term after the time required by the standing rule. Lance v. Bonnell, 105 Pa. St. 46.

3. Nearly all the statutes prescribing the time within which the application must be made, contain in words or in substance the proviso "unless the party is unavoidably prevented." See Campbell v. Conover, 26 Ill. 64; Patterson v. Jack, 59 Iowa 632; Clinton Nat. Bank v. Graves, 48 Iowa 228; Boardman v. Beckwith, 18 Iowa 292; Soper v. Medberry, 24 Kan. 128; McDonald v. Cooper, 32 Kan. 60; Osborne v. Hamilton, 29 Kan. 1; Mitchell v. Milhoan, 11 Kan. 617; United States v. Simmonds, 14 Blatchf. (U. S.) 473; Imperial Fire Ins. Co. v. Kiernan, 83 Ky. 468; McLaughlin v. Upton, 2 Wyo. 27; Buckner v. Conly, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 3.

Where a rule of a federal court requiring notice of motion for a new trial, with the grounds thereof, to be "filed with the clerk, and served on the opposite party within two days after the rendition of the verdict, unless the time be enlarged by the court," is not complied with because of counsel's belief that the practice of the court conforms to that of the State courts, the time for filing such motion will be enlarged, even after the expiration of such two days, when the same can be done at the term at which the verdict was rendered. Henning v. Western Union Tel. Co., 41 Fed. Rep. 884.

In extraordinary cases, where the cause is still under the power of the court which tried it, if the justice of the case requires it, the court may grant a new trial after the expiration of the term at which it was tried. Candler v. Hammond, 23 Ga. 493.

Where the time within which a motion is to be made is not otherwise provided for it is sometimes held in analogy to appeals, that it may be made at any time within which an appeal could be taken. See Kimball v. Palmerlee, 29 Minn. 302; Cochrane v. Halsey, 25 Minn. 52; Groh v. Bassett, 7 Minn. 325. This is statutory in some States.

4. Imperial Fire Ins. Co. v. Kiernan, 83 Ky. 468.

a party who applies for a new trial within the prescribed time are not affected by delay on the part of the court,¹ and where a verdict is clearly void, the application to vacate it need not necessarily be made at the term at which it was rendered.² Where the application has been made in due season, the court may allow additional grounds to be afterwards filed, in its discretion.³

(a) ERRORS UNKNOWN AT THE TIME OF TRIAL.—Where the errors for which a new trial is desired do not appear upon the record, and the grounds could not with reasonable diligence have been discovered before the expiration of the prescribed time for application, such grounds may be presented by petition after discovery.⁴ And in some States this may be done even after the affirmance of the judgment on appeal.⁵ Such an application,

1. Keener v. Union Pac. R. Co., 34 Fed. Rep. 871; Gomer v. Chaffe, 5 Colo. 383; Rodman v. Reynolds, 114 Ind. 148.

A consent order was taken that the judge should take with him the motion for new trial and pass upon it "within the next thirty days in vacation." It was held that the failure of the judge to decide the motion within thirty days should not prejudice the moving party, he being in no way chargeable with the failure. Johnston v. Simmons, 77 Ga. 298.

After the term when rendered, a judgment cannot be vacated for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against law and evidence—where the order to show cause why the same should not be vacated was issued at the last day of the term, and the motion therefor, by consent of parties, set for hearing at a day fixed of the next term. Gans v. Harmison, 44 Wis. 323.

Under the Indiana Stat., § 561, providing that "the application for a new trial may be made at any time during the term, . . ." and § 562, providing that "the application must be made by motion upon written cause filed at the time of making the motion," it is not sufficient to merely file with the clerk during the term a motion for a new trial. Emison v. Shepard, 121 Ind. 184.

The mere procurement of permission to move for a new trial is not making the motion, and if the motion does not follow in the prescribed season, it cannot be entertained. Whipley v. Dewey, 17 Cal. 314.

In South Carolina it is held that a motion on the minutes for a new trial, made at the same term with the trial, must be heard and decided at that term under the provisions of the code. Hinson v. Catoe, 10 S. Car. 311.

2. Eason v. Miller, 18 S. Car. 381.

3. Houston v. Kidwell, 83 Ky. 301.

The right of a party to insist on the requirement as to the time of filing additional causes for a new trial, may be waived, as any other legal right. Northcutt v. Buckles, 60 Ind. 577. But a notice of intention to move for a new trial cannot be abandoned and a second notice served, after the time limited by statute. Cooney v. Furlong, 66 Cal. 520.

4. Darrance v. Preston, 18 Iowa 397; Dewes v. Hudgeons, 1 Tex. 192; Porter v. Dugat, 6 Martin (La.) 121; Burrough v. Hill, 15 R. I. 190; Anderson v. Meredith (Ky. 1888), 9 S. W. Rep. 407; Alger v. Merritt, 16 Iowa 121; Roush v. Layton, 51 Ind. 106; Bond v. Epley, 48 Iowa 600; Gray v. Coan, 48 Iowa 424; Eason v. Miller, 18 S. Car. 381; Smith v. Smith, 51 Wis. 665. And see Tuttle v. Stickney, 3 N. H. 319; Belloq v. United States, 13 Ct. of Cl. (U. S.) 195; Kurtz v. Craig, 53 Ind. 561. And see Riggs v. Savage, 7 Ill. 400; Davis v. Terry, 33 Tex. 426.

A motion for a new trial or rehearing, on the ground of newly discovered evidence, may now be made and granted after judgment is entered on the report of referees, though it was otherwise in New York before the Code of Procedure. Mersereau v. Pearsall, 6 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 293.

5. See Spanagel v. Dillinger, 38 Cal. 278; Sheffield v. Mullin, 28 Minn. 251; Johnston v. Paul, 23 Minn. 46; Tracy v. Altmayer, 46 N. Y. 598; Blydenburg v. Johnson, 9 Abb. Pr., N. S. (N. Y.) 459; Tucker v. White, 27 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 97.

After judgment upon a partial de-

however, must be made with due diligence after the discovery.¹ And many of the States have provided a limit of time by statute, beyond which, even in such cases, an application for a new trial will not be entertained.²

(b) WHEN UNAVOIDABLY PREVENTED FROM MOVING IN SEASON.—The qualification “unless unavoidably prevented,” or equivalent words, found in most of the statutory provisions prescribing the time within which to move, refers to circumstances beyond the control of the moving party, and does not excuse mere neglect.³ But when such circumstances appear, the usual practice is to permit the application to be made after the expiration fence, and an appeal therefrom, the defendants discovered facts making a complete and perfect defence. Held, notwithstanding the entry of the judgment and appeal, that a motion for a new trial might be granted more than a year after the party had notice of the judgment, the case being an equitable action. Nash v. Wetmore, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 155.

Hill*, 15 R. I. 190.

Where new evidence is discovered after the trial and during the term at which it took place, but so near the close of it that it was impossible to make the application for the new trial before adjournment, it may be made the basis of a petition for a new trial after adjournment. Alger v. Merritt, 16 Iowa 121.

If the materiality of absent evidence is first discovered during the trial, a continuance must be asked for, or a new trial, on the ground of newly discovered evidence, will be refused. Klockenbaum v. Pierson, 22 Cal. 160.

2. Within One Year.—See Roush v. Layton, 51 Ind. 106; Burrough v. Hill, 15 R. I. 190; Bond v. Epley, 48 Iowa 600; Gray v. Coan, 48 Iowa 424; Smith v. Smith, 51 Wis. 665; Deering v. Johnson, 33 Minn. 97; Kimball v. Palmerlee, 29 Minn. 302; Conklin v. Hinds, 16 Minn. 457.

Two Years.—See Bellocq v. United States, 13 Ct. of Cl. (U. S.) 195; Cut-singer v. Nebeker, 58 Ind. 401.

Three Years.—See Anderson v. Meredith (Ky. 1888), 9 S. W. Rep. 407; Tuttle v. Stickney, 3 N. H. 319.

In Kentucky, the motion must be made not later than the second term after discovery, and within three years. Anderson v. Meredith (Ky. 1888), 9 S. W. Rep. 407; Scott v. Scott, 82 Ky. 328.

3. Roggencamp v. Dobbs, 15 Neb. 620. See Henning v. Western Union Tel. Co., 41 Fed. Rep. 864; Nichols v. Shearon, 49 Ark. 75; Western etc. R. Co. v. Johnson, 59 Ga. 626; Odell v. Sargent, 3 Kan. 80.

In a petition for a new trial, where no motion therefor was filed at the term of court at which the adverse judgment was rendered, an allegation that petitioner's counsel and other attorneys whom he asked refused to file such motion, unsupported by an affidavit of neglect of duty by petitioner's counsel, is not a sufficient excuse for the delay. McGloin v. McGloin, 70 Tex. 634.

It is not an “extraordinary” ground for which, under Georgia Code, §§ 3719, 3721, a new trial should be granted, that the presiding judge absented himself from his court, whereby the term was terminated, so that the ordinary motion for a new trial could not be heard during the term. East Tennessee etc. R. Co. v. Whitlock, 75 Ga. 77.

Neither does the abandonment of the cause by the defendant's attorney because of the nonpayment of his fees constitute an extraordinary ground. Cobb v. State, 78 Ga. 801.

It is no excuse for not moving for a new trial that the party managing the cause was not present when the verdict was rendered, and the court adjourned of the prescribed time.¹ Some of the statutes requiring the motion to be made at the trial term, and within a specified time, however, have been construed to permit a motion after the expiration of such time, but not after the trial term.²

(c) COMPUTATION OF THE TIME.—A motion for a new trial before verdict, or the decision of the cause and filing of the findings is premature, and presents no question for consideration,³ but where the main issue is tried and decided, the time begins to run, although there may be incidental matters remaining to be disposed of,⁴ and when the computation is to be made from an

the next day; nor will the discovery of new testimony, which was known to one of the witnesses for the party seeking a new trial, entitle him to relief. Paul v. Williams, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 265.

In Georgia, where the mover establishes an "extraordinary case," and the court still has control of the cause, a rule nisi may be moved after the expiration of the term, but only one such motion should be allowed. Candler v. Hammond, 23 Ga. 493. In such a case the motion may be made before a judge in vacation. Spann v. Clark, 47 Ga. 369.

2. See State v. Dougherty, 70 Iowa 439; State v. Hughes, 35 Kan. 632; Com. v. Weymouth, 2 Allen (Mass.) 144; Ex parte Holmes, 21 Neb. 324.

3. Duff v. Duff, 71 Cal. 513; Hinds v. Gage, 56 Cal. 486; Careaga v. Fernald, 66 Cal. 351; Kird v. Beavus, 106 Ind. 483; Pence v. Garrison, 93 Ind. 345; Dominguez v. Mascotte, 74 Cal. 269.

A judgment on motion on the pleadings is not a trial or verdict requiring that a motion for a new trial, or in arrest, be filed within four days thereafter, as required by Missouri Rev. Stat., § 3707; and the unsuccessful party will not lose the benefit of his appeal by failure to file such motion, if the final action of the court be upon motion, and exceptions thereto be properly saved. Todd v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 33 Mo. App. 110.

In a probate proceeding, the court, of its own motion, submitted two issues of fact to a jury, empanelled for that purpose, which found on these issues, and was discharged. It was held that this was merely advisory to the judge; and a notice of intention to move for a new trial, and the presentation of the statement for settlement, were premature. James v. Superior Ct., 78 Cal. 107.

If for any reason the judgment is entered up before the findings are filed, it must be regarded as in the nature of a provisional action which only becomes perfected when the findings are completed. And the time for moving for a new trial should date from that time. People v. Kent Circuit Judge, 34 Mich. 62. And see Stansell v. Corning, 21 Mich. 242.

Under a statute requiring a motion for a new trial to be made during the term within which judgment is entered, the right is not lost by reason of a previous motion for judgment upon special findings of the jury, which judgment was reversed and judgment afterwards entered on a general verdict. The motion for a new trial is in time during the term of such last judgment. Chicago etc. R. Co. v. Dimick, 96 Ill. 42.

In a case tried without a jury, the decision of the court is distinct from the findings, and the time within which notice of intention to move for a new trial must be given begins to run from the announcement of the judgment. Robinson v. Benson, 19 Nev. 331. And see Crowther v. Rowlandson, 27 Cal. 376.

4. Ashton v. Thompson, 28 Minn. 330; Burrough v. Hill, 15 R. I. 100; Jacks v. Adair, 33 Ark. 161; Hazlett v. Simpson, 61 Wis. 427. And see Gray v. Coan, 48 Iowa 424.

Any party has the right, within three judicial days from the rendition of judgment, to move for a new trial, notwithstanding the judgment may have been prematurely signed, unless the court has sooner adjourned. McW. v. Perkins, 20 La. An. 168.

The constitution of Georgia requires two concurrent verdicts of special jury before a final and conclusive divorce can be decreed. This provision does act done, the day on which the act was done must be included, but when the computation is to be from the day on which the act was done, the rule is otherwise.¹ Neither a recess taken by the court during the term,² nor the time during which an appeal is pending is to be excluded,³ but in estimating statutory days, court days only are considered, Sundays not being included.⁴

(d) EXTENSION OF TIME.—The rule is adopted in many of the States that the statutes fixing the time within which a motion for a trial may be made are imperative, and that the court has no power to extend it,⁵ but in others it is considered as directory only, leaving it to the discretion of the court to extend not preclude the defendant from moving to set aside the first verdict before a second is rendered. Gholston v. Gholston, 31 Ga. 625.

The time within which notice of intention to move for a new trial must be given begins to run from the announcement of the judgment, where the trial was without a jury. A statement not served within the statutory time must be disregarded. Robinson v. Benson, 19 Nev. 331. But when the defeated party gives notice of his intention to move for a new trial, without waiting for the service on him of a notice of the decision, he waives such notice, and if the motion is denied, he cannot have recourse to a new motion. Thorne v. Finn, 69 Cal. 251.

Under a Vermont statute, requiring a petition for a new trial to be brought within two years next after the rendition of the original judgment, such time is to be reckoned from the last day of the term at which judgment is rendered. Bradish v. State, 35 Vt. 452. But not so under the Illinois statute. Emmons v. Bishop, 14 Ill. 152.

In Louisiana, the "three days," until after the lapse of which a judgment of the supreme court does not become final, are three judicial days. The last day to apply for a rehearing does not expire at 6:30 A. M. merely because the court adjourned sine die at that hour on that day. State v. Stillman, 31 La. An. 162.

In California, the time within which notice of intention to move for a new trial must be given begins to run from the expiration of the ten days allowed by the California statute, not from the time within that ten days when the judge grants the order extending the time beyond the statutory period. Emeric v. Alvarado, 64 Cal. 529.

The provision of the Kentucky Code, that a motion for a new trial must be made "within three days after the verdict or decision rendered," means three judicial days, and does not include Sundays, but the day of the decision and the day of the motion must both be computed. Long v. Hughes, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 387.

But when a trial is pending at the close of a term the court may progress with it until it is concluded, and the additional time thus required the time,¹ or open a default and entertain the motion after the expiration of the statutory period.² Some of the authorities, while they hold to the doctrine, that the court can neither extend the time nor open a default, assert that the court may, of its own motion, grant a motion for a new trial after the expiration of the prescribed time, if justice requires it.³ The parties are as a general rule permitted to extend the time to move for a new trial by agreement,⁴ but in such case time is of the essence of the will be held to be within the legal term. Krutz v. Craig, 53 Ind. 571.

When the application for a recordari is for the purpose of obtaining a new trial, it is in the nature of an extension of the power of appeal. The application must be made speedily, and any delay after the earliest time in the power of the party to apply must be accounted for. Webb v. Durham, 7 Ired. (N. Car.) 130.

Leitch*, 43 Cal. 320; Gomer v. Chaffe, 5 Colo. 383. The power is expressly conferred upon the courts in some of the States by statute.

Rules of practice fixing the time of motions for new trials merely import a matter of right, unless specifically expressed as intended to interfere with the common-law discretion of the court to extend or shorten the time. People v. Judge of Wayne Circuit Court, 20 Mich. 220.

An order granted by the court, on motion of a party, that he be allowed until a named day to perfect and file a motion for a new trial, does not import any stipulation with the opposite party (whose consent was not invoked to the passage of the order) that a motion will not be made after that day. It is no obstacle to moving for a new trial on any day during the term. De Pauw v. Kaiser, 77 Ga. 176.

A verbal order of the judge, extending the time for filing a statement on motion for a new trial, is not good, although the omission to have the order entered of record was an oversight. Campbell v. Jones, 41 Cal. 515. And an order extending the time for giving notice of a motion for a new trial, made after the time for giving notice has expired, is in excess of jurisdiction and is void. Clark v. Crane, 57 Cal. 629.

The application must be made at the term at which the verdict or decision is rendered, except it be for cause discovered afterwards; and the court cannot, without the agreement or waiver of the parties, grant time beyond the term to make the application, for a cause other than one discovered afterwards. Krutz v. Craig, 53 Ind. 561.

Under the Nebraska Code, § 316, providing that a motion for a new trial must be made during the term a verdict is rendered, and within three days thereafter, unless unavoidably prevented, the supplemental motion, being filed within three days after the rendition of the verdict, is an amended motion, and a substitute for the one filed on the day previous, and it is unnecessary to obtain leave of court to file it. Lincoln v. Beckman, 23 Neb. 677.

Under the New York Code, § 990, a motion for a new trial, made on the judge's minutes, can only be made before him at the same term at which the trial was had. An omission so to move cannot be cured by a subsequent direction that the motion be made at the special term on the judge's minutes. Thayer Mfg. Co. v. Steinau, 58 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 315.

Opens All Questions.—The consent agreement, and any excuse for not conforming to it must be on the grounds of overpowering necessity.¹ Where leave to file a motion for a new trial is granted after the expiration of the prescribed time, upon the appearance of the parties without objection, the restrictions with reference to time are waived.²

(e) WHEN MADE IN CRIMINAL PRACTICE.—The period within which a motion for a new trial must be made in criminal actions, like that in civil actions, is usually, if not always, fixed by statute. And while the two classes of actions are usually provided for by different statutes, there is a substantial similarity between them, and the courts uniformly apply the same principles of construction,³ except that in criminal cases the power to grant new trials for good cause shown after judgment and conviction is more generally conceded than in civil cases.⁴

entered of record extending the time for filing a motion for a new trial, in the absence of any stipulation as to what causes shall be included in the motion, has the effect to extend the time for filing a motion for all the causes for which, at any time, a motion may be filed. Eckel v. Walker, 48 Iowa 225.

Where a trial was had at one term of court, and a motion for a new trial was made and the motion continued until the next term, at the instance of the mover, and at such term the motion was withdrawn, it was held that the adverse party might then move for a new trial; the case having been continued for the benefit of the former mover, it remained open for the benefit of both. *Constantine v. Four Days.—See Brooks v. Missouri, 124 U. S. 394.

Other periods are fixed by the statutes of different States ranging from those above stated to one year from the rendition of the verdict.

As to defendant being unavoidably prevented from presenting his application in the prescribed time, see Ex parte Holmes, 21 Neb. 324.

In Illinois, application for a new trial in a criminal case should be made at the first opportunity. Where there is an unreasonable delay, the cause of the delay should be distinctly stated in the affidavits upon which the application is founded. Cochlin v. People, 93 Ill. 410.

Extension of Time.—If a defendant convicted of crime desires extension of time in which to prepare and present a motion for a new trial, he must show reasonable grounds; facts should be stated showing the necessity for the delay. Bullner v. People, 95 Ill. 394. And see generally Ross v. State, 65 Ga. 127.

In England, as in some of the American States, the rule is that after the expiration of the time allowed for making it, no motion for a new trial can be entertained, but that where justice requires it, the court may, upon its own motion, grant a new trial to the defendant. Rex v. Atkinson, 5 T. R. (Eng.) 437; King v. Holt, 5 T. R. (Eng.) 446.

In Pennsylvania, in a criminal case, a new trial must be moved for at once. Defendant has not four days within which to move. Com. v. Cannon, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 456. And in Virginia, on conviction for a misdemeanor, a new trial was granted, although the motion was not made until the second term after the verdict was rendered. Com. v. Crump, 1 Va. Cas. 172.

5. What to be Included in the Motion.—A motion for a new trial should be directed, not against the judgment, but against the decision;¹ and ordinarily the application must be made as to the whole case.² So, all known errors should be included as grounds for the motion,³ for after the court has once heard and decided a motion for a new trial, it is res adjudicata, and the parties have no right to file a new motion.⁴ And where the trial judge has denied a motion, it cannot be granted or heard on affidavits by

Circuit courts of the United States have power to grant a new trial, after conviction, for good cause shown, both in misdemeanors and felonies. United States v. Williams, 1 Cliff. (U. S.) 5.

A new trial may be granted in a capital case, after issuance of the governor's warrant for execution of the sentence. Com. v. McElhaney, 111 Mass. 439. But see United States v. Simmons, 14 Blatchf. (U. S.) 473.

Under Texas Code, as a general rule, a new trial must be applied for within two days after the conviction; but in cases of felony the court, for good cause shown, may allow the application to be made at any time before the adjournment of the court for the term. Bullock v. State, 12 Tex. App. 42.

The procedure, on a motion for a new trial, generally, is governed by the same rules in criminal as in civil cases. Grayson v. Com., 6 Gratt. (Va.) 712; Hilliard on New Trials (2nd ed.) 114, § 2.

Where a litigation proceeds to judgment on any substantive cause of action in which a new trial as of right is not allowable, though it embraces other causes in which a new trial as of right is allowable, a new trial as of right is not proper. Bradford v. School Town of Marion, 107 Ind. 208.

An action to recover possession of land cannot properly be joined with an action to foreclose a mortgage thereon, and if such actions are improperly joined a new trial as of right ought to be granted, even where the misjoinder has not been objected to, and, if granted, the order granting it should be vacated and such new trial refused. Butler University v. Conard, 94 Ind. 353.

In Iowa, while as a general rule a new trial when granted is awarded for the entire case, yet when not attended by confusion, and when it will not result in prejudice to the rights of the parties, it may be granted as to one or more causes of action set up in a petition, and refused as to the others. Woodward v. Horst, 10 Iowa 120. See also Bond v. Wabash etc. R. Co., 67 Iowa 713.

In an action for divorce, where the issues involved the title to real estate in which the judgment adjudges title to one of the parties, the other is entitled to move for a new trial upon this issue, but not upon the divorce issue. Schmitt v. Schmitt, 32 Minn. 130. And see Lake v. Bender, 18 Nev. 361.

3. Moon v. Jennings, 119 Ind. 130.

4. People v. Center, 61 Cal. 191; Thompson v. Lynch, 43 Cal. 482; Coombs v. Hibberd, 43 Cal. 453; Wright v. Boynton, 40 N. H. 353; Branger v. Buttrick, 28 Wis. 450; Moll v. Benckler, 28 Wis. 611; Rodgers v. Hoenig, 46 Wis. 361; Kabe v. Eagle, 25 Wis. 108; Cothren v. Connaughton, 24 Wis. 134.

But a provision to the effect that the determination is without prejudice to a new application may be inserted in the order, which will entitle the party to a reargument on the same grounds. Branger v. Buttrick, 28 Wis. 450.

A motion to set aside a verdict for misconduct of the sheriff in respect to the jury, having been denied, because no proof of misconduct was offered, a subsequent motion for leave to file affidavits in regard to the same at any time during the term nunc pro tunc, was also properly denied. Cross v. State, 55 Wis. 261.

another judge.¹ But the denial of a motion for a new trial is no cause for a refusal to listen to a second motion, if made on different grounds, which were unknown and unknowable at the time of the former motion,² or where good reasons are shown for not having incorporated both grounds in the first motion.³

6. Waiver of Right to Apply.—A party may waive a future contingent right as well as one which he presently has, and effect will therefore be given to a stipulation waiving the right to a new trial.⁴ So the right to move may be waived or lost by the acts or neglect of the party aggrieved,⁵ the principle being applicable to criminal cases as well as to civil,⁶ but the person who claims

After the court has heard and denied a motion for a new trial in a suit at law, and a judgment has been rendered and paid, and satisfied, it has no power to grant leave to reargue the motion for a new trial. Smith v. Town of Ontario, 17 Blatchf. (U. S.) 240.

But a judge may entertain a formal motion for a new trial, although he has denied a motion upon his minutes, from which order of denial an appeal is pending. Schmidt v. Cohn, 12 Daly (N. Y.) 134.

1. Reich v. McCrea, 7 N. Y. Supp. 600; Knapp v. Post, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 35.

In Knapp v. Post, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 35, the court said: "It was nothing more than a retrial of the cause upon affidavits. If the practice here pursued should be authoritatively established, few verdicts would stand. It costs defeated parties little effort to show by ex parte affidavits that their defeat was attributable to error and manifest injustice, rather than their own neglect and mistakes, and it is far easier to get rid of a verdict and judgment in that way than by appeal. The law does not allow such a practice."

Although, after a final judgment has been entered, and an application for a new trial overruled, it is irregular to entertain a second motion for that object, yet, after the court has granted such new trial, the plaintiff, by appearing and amending his declaration, waives the irregularity. Powers v. Bridges, 1 Greene (Iowa) 235.

2. White v. Perkins, 16 Ind. 358; Hughes v. McGee, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 28; Malone v. Hopkins, 49 Ga. 221; Bryorly v. Clark, 48 Tex. 345.

The court should not allow a second motion for a new trial in the same case for the same cause or causes; but for a cause which the party, though using due diligence, had failed to discover until his original motion was determined, a second or even a third motion may be properly allowed. White v. Perkins, 16 Ind. 358; Hayes v. Kenyon, 7 R. I. 531.

3. Hughes v. McGee, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 28. And see Graham & W. on New Trials 537.

In Scull v. Daniel, 3 N. J. L. 431, however, the court refused to hear the application upon the preliminary objection that a rule had been formerly taken for the same purpose.

4. Ladd v. Hildebrand, 27 Wis. 135; McClellan v. Hurd, 11 Colo. 126.

Waiver by Attorney.—Under the Minnesota statutes authorizing an attorney to bind his client in any of the proceedings in an action or special proceeding, an attorney for defendant, in ejectment, may bind his client by a stipulation to dismiss a demand by defendant, under the statute, for a second trial. Bray v. Doheny, 39 Minn. 355.

Waiver by Client.—A client has a right to waive errors and exceptions, and to waive the right to move for a new trial, and he will be bound by such waiver unless it is made invalid by some cause pertaining to the client, it cannot be set aside by any one else. Hackley v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 58 Mich. 454.

5. See Emmerich v. Hefferan, 33 Hun (N. Y.) 54; Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc. v. Moore, 68 Cal. 156; Kent v. Lawson, 12 Ind. 675; Fountain Co. v. Bilsland, 12 Ind. 668; Ellsassar v. Hunter, 26 Cal. 279.

When a motion for a new trial has been granted, the moving party may waive his right under the order without prejudice to his right to appeal from the judgment afterwards entered. Gutwillig v. Stumes, 47 Wis. 428.

the benefit of a waiver is required to establish it beyond question.¹ Thus a question of law available but not raised, by an exception duly taken to the ruling, at the time of the trial, is waived and cannot be raised for the first time on motion for a new trial.² So, the attention of the court must be called to improper conduct of the jury at the time of discovery, or as soon as there is an opportunity, in order to make it an available ground for a motion for a new trial, unless it is of such a character that it could not be obviated by the action of the court.³ The failure to move or to take any of the necessary steps in the proceeding is a waiver.⁴ It has been held that errors in the admission or exclu-

The facts that material witnesses discovered before trial were absent at the trial, and that there was not time after such discovery to take their testimony by interrogatories, are not ground for new trial, where a continuance was not applied for on account of such absence. Crawford v. Georgia Pac. R. Co. (Ga.), 12 S. E. Rep. 176.

The refusal of the court below to allow a question to be put to a witness, is not ground for granting a new trial upon motion, unless the offer was made in such a manner as to enable the judge to see the materiality of the evidence. Pratt v. Strong, 3 Abb. App. Dec. 620.

But when the rule of damages adopted on the trial is fundamentally erroneous the verdict may, in some cases, be set aside, although no objection was made to the introduction of the evidence on which such rule was founded. Hatfield v. Central R. Co., 33 N. J. L. 251. And the court will, notwithstanding defendant's counsel omitted to make the request at the trial, look into the whole case, and may, in furtherance of substantial justice, set aside the verdict and grant a new trial, although objection cannot be taken, on appeal from the judgment, that the court erred in directing a verdict, unless a request is made at the trial to submit a question of fact to the jury. *Lennox v. sion of evidence are waived as a ground for a motion for a new trial, by demurring to them,¹ but this rule is not believed to be general.² So, error in any ruling or order of the court can be taken advantage of only when prompt objections or exceptions were taken.³

(a) WAIVER BY INCONSISTENT STEPS.—It is a general, though not a universal rule, that a motion for a new trial and an appeal from the judgment in the same action are inconsistent with each other, and that the appeal is a waiver of the right to present the application for a new trial.⁴ And as a general rule, a motion for

One who excepts to conclusions of law does not thereby preclude himself from moving for a new trial. Bertelson v. Bower, 81 Ind. 512.

The right to move, on the judge's minutes, to set aside the verdict for insufficiency of evidence, is not waived by failure, during the trial, to make any motion on that ground, such as a motion for nonsuit. Shearman v. Henderson, 12 Hun (N. Y.) 170.

If a motion to dismiss the complaint is refused, and the refusal duly excepted to, the defendant does not lose his right to demand a new trial by omitting to except to a direction of a verdict for the plaintiff. Durant v. Aberdnoth, 44 N. Y. Super. Ct. 463.

Appellants failed, at the time it was made, to except to an order, upon an oral motion, granting a new trial.

Held, that they thereby waived their right to object to it. Cox v. Dill, 85 Ind. 334.

If an order granting a new trial is reviewable upon appeal from the final judgment (a question not decided in Wisconsin), still, if the party excepting to such order afterwards notices the cause for trial, accepts costs awarded him as terms of granting a change of venue, and goes to trial without objection, in the court to which the cause is removed, these acts are a waiver of his exception to the order for new trial. Maxwell v. Kennedy, 50 Wis. 645.

The defendant, by taking out a stay of execution, waives his right to apply for a new trial. Banks v. Hitchcock, 20 Neb. 315.

On decision of a case, made after judgment, for review upon the facts, a new trial cannot be awarded; the facts are supposed to be all before the court, and the decision upon them disposes of the case. Barman v. Carhartt, 10 Mich. 338.

After verdict, and before judgment, the court in which an action was pending was abolished, and the business transferred to an appellate court, by which the appeal was lost. It was held that the court had no power to set aside the verdict to give another trial. Cummings v. White Mountains R. Co., 43 N. H. 114.

But when a writ of error is dismissed without a hearing on the merits, the plaintiff in error is not precluded from moving, in the court below, for a new trial on any sufficient ground not specified in the original bill of ex-

a new trial cannot be made after a motion in arrest of judgment;¹ but it has been held that the two motions may be pending at the same time,² and that it will be presumed that they were disposed of in their proper order.³ Where, by any process, a judgment of an inferior court has become a judgment of a superior, the right to move for a new trial of the cause in the former court is lost.⁴ The rule has been laid down, however, that a motion for a new trial, and a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, are ceptions. Perry v. Gunley, 42 Ga. 41.

In Texas, it is error to refuse to entertain a motion for a new trial in a criminal cause, because a motion in arrest had been previously made and overruled. Mathews v. State, 33 Tex. 102.

In Georgia, where objections arising upon the face of the verdict are urged against the making of a decree, and are overruled, the same matters, if appropriate to a motion for a new trial, may be included, with others, in such motion subsequently made during the term. The prior decision on the objections will be considered as rendered subject to a more formal and regular examination of the several matters by motion for a new trial. Lake v. Hardee, 55 Ga. 667.

After the conviction of a defendant in a circuit court of the United States, he moved in arrest of judgment, and the case went to the supreme court on a certificate of a division of opinion. After a decision by that court, the defendant moved in the circuit court for a new trial. Held, that it was too late to make such a motion. United States v. Simmons, 14 Blatchf. (U. S.) 473.

In England, whether a motion for a new trial can be made after an unsuccessful motion in arrest of judgment is more a matter of practice than a legal rule, the practice being different in different courts. Candler v. Hammond, 23 Ga. 493. And see Lane v. Crockett, 7 Price (Eng.) 556; 1 Selon's Pr. 497; Tidd's Pr. 913.

Where a judgment of the court below should have been arrested for error, the record showing that a motion in arrest of judgment had been filed, and afterwards, on the same day, a motion for a new trial had been filed; inasmuch as the motions were disposed of in their logical order, the fact that they had been filed in the inverse order was not open to objection on appeal, and that the motion for a new trial had not been waived. Farmers' Bank v. Bayliss, 41 Mo. 274.

New Trial as to Portion of Defendants.—Under an order, on a motion by defendant for a new trial, directing a new trial of the action, unless plaintiff should elect to take judgment against three of the defendants for a specified sum, and against another of them for a specified part of that sum, plaintiff cannot take judgment against the three as specified in it, and have a new trial as to the other. First Nat. Bank v. Lincoln, 39 Minn. 473.

Motion Pending Reference.—A motion for a new trial should not be made while proceedings are pending before a referee, to whom the case has been referred, after certain findings by the court, to take and state an account. Crowther v. Rowlandson, 27 Cal. 376.

not inconsistent,¹ and a motion for a new trial is not waived by a motion for judgment on special findings non obstante veredicto.² So, where a party excepts to conclusions of law, in a special finding or an interlocutory judgment, he is not thereby concluded from controverting the facts stated therein, and he is not bound to abstain from taking such steps as will protect his interests and secure a favorable final judgment.³

7. Effect of the Application.—At common law a motion for a new trial suspended the judgment and all its effects until the motion was disposed of,⁴ and the same rule has been adopted by a few of the States,⁵ but in a large majority of them it has been superseded by statutory provisions, under which the courts are usually empowered to temporarily stay the operation of the judgment, to the end that justice may be attained.⁶ A motion for a new trial operates as a waiver of all objections made and exceptions taken previous to the motion, and not embodied in it;⁷ and

Downey*, 49 Iowa 166; but this case was distinguished in Stone v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 68 Iowa 737, holding that the reason for the ruling in the former case was that the two motions were filed at the same time, and were therefore regarded as inconsistent, but that in the latter case the motion for a new trial was made after the motion for judgment had been overruled, and was at that time proper.

A motion for a venire de novo is not a waiver of a motion for a new trial. Jenkins v. Parkhill, 25 Ind. 473.

If a party duly takes exception to the granting of a new trial, his appearance on the second trial does not amount to a waiver of his objections thereto. Gann v. Worman, 69 Ind. 458.

Where the defendant obtains a verdict and the trial judge awards a new trial, defendant, by entering upon the new trial, waives his right to appeal from the order. Grunberg v. Blumenlahl, 66 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 62.

A motion for a new trial does not, under the law and practice in Maryland, expire with the term of the court at which it is made; and, until such motion is disposed of, further proceedings in the case are suspended. Truett v. Legg, 32 Md. 147.

An unlimited motion for a new trial in some States a motion to have a verdict set aside, made and persisted in, is a waiver of exceptions to rulings of law taken in the progress of the trial.¹ Such a motion retains the cause in the trial court, and, while pending, prevents final judgment within the provisions regulating appeals.²

8. Manner of Making the Application.—By the practice of the various States, a motion for a new trial may be made by an ordinary motion upon the minutes of the court, upon affidavits, by bill of exceptions, or by a statement of the case.³ The common law method of presenting the application was by a motion for a rule to show cause why a new trial should not be granted,⁴ but in nearly all the States the practice is regulated by statutes differing in different States, the first step prescribed by these statutes being, in perhaps a majority of the States, the presentation of the motion to the trial court.⁵

(a) NOTICE OF APPLICATION.—No notice of motion is usually required when the application is made to the trial court, at the term during which the objectionable verdict or decision was rendered;⁶ but where the application is made at a different term, or to a different court, the opposing party is entitled to notice.⁷

A new trial will not be granted where the party has a right to a review, unless he will relinquish such right. Cogswell v. Brown, 1 Mass. 237; Byrnes v. Piper, 5 Mass. 363; Meeker v. Boylan, 27 N. J. L. 262.

Pending a motion for a new trial, if a party tender a bill of exceptions he must elect whether he will waive his motion so far as it is based on questions of law that might be embodied in a bill of exceptions, but the presenting of the bill does not itself waive motion. Preble v. Bates, 37 Fed. Rep. 772.

The motion, in order to have this effect, must have been filed in season. If filed late it cannot carry the case over to the next term. Taylor v. Genail, 10 Mo. App. 250.

A motion for leave to make a motion for a new trial is a nullity, no leave being necessary to do that which the mover has a clear and undoubted legal right to do. Odell v. Sargent, 3 Kan. 80.

6. Ryerson v. Grover, 1 N. J. L. 392; Werner v. Edmiston, 24 Kan. 147; Murray v. Kelly, 27 Ind. 42.

In New York, notice of motion for a new trial, accompanied by a judge's certificate, was substituted for the former practice of a rule to show cause. If the party neglects to obtain a certificate, and a judgment is consequently duly entered up, the court will not then hear an argument to set the verdict aside. Case v. Shepherd, Col. & C. Cas. (N. Y.) 94.

New Trial as a Matter of Right.—It has been held that applications for new

And notice is usually required, in an action before a justice of the peace, in those jurisdictions in which he is empowered to grant new trials.¹ Such notice of application may be waived by appearance, or otherwise.² When a notice is necessary, it is usually required to set forth the grounds upon which the motion is to be made.³

(1) Notice of Intention.—The statutes of a number of the States require the applicant to file and serve upon the opposite party a notice of intention to move for a new trial.⁴ This notice should designate the grounds upon which the motion is to be made,⁵ trial as of right, after the close of the term at which judgment is rendered, under Indiana Rev. Stat., 1881, § 1065, do not require any prior notice to the adverse party. Stanley v. Holliday, 113 Ind. 525; Brown v. Cody, 115 Ind. 484. But the better rule probably is that the rules stated in the text are applicable also to that class of cases. See Stanley v. Holliday, 113 Ind. 525; Nitche v. Earle, 117 Ind. 270; Callanan v. Lewis (Iowa, 1890), 44 N. W. Rep. 892. And see cases above cited.

Service by Mail.—Where a notice of motion for a new trial was filed in the clerk's office on the eleventh day after the notice of decision was served by mail, and the record showed that the distance between the place of deposit and place of address of the notice of decision was over 70 miles, under the California Code Civil Proc., giving an extension of time in certain cases of service by mail, the notice of motion was filed in time. Sullivan v. Wallace, 73 Cal. 307.

In Wisconsin, the adverse party must be served with the motion together with the papers upon which it is founded, to give him opportunity to present affidavits or other evidence against the motion. McWilliams v. Baumstor, 42 Wis. 301.

In Pennsylvania, notice of motion for a new trial must be given in writing. Galloway v. Negle, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 103.

Where an action is continued by consent to a certain day, but, through the mistake of the justice, taken advantage of by the plaintiff, is tried, and judgment rendered against defendant in his absence, and after judgment has been rendered, and before the hour to which the case had been continued, the attorney for the defendant told an attorney for plaintiff that he would be at the justice's court at that hour, and does go there, makes a motion to vacate the said judgment, and for a new trial; and, while so doing, the partner of one of the attorneys for plaintiff comes to the justice's office, and is notified what is being done, this was a reasonable notice to plaintiff of the motion for a new trial. Barons v. Anderson, 37 Kan. 399.

Filing a counter statement is a waiver of want of notice of the motion. Williams v. Gregory, 9 Cal. 76.

If the parties to a suit stipulate in writing that the statement on motion for a new trial, and the judgment roll are correct, and may be used as such without further certificate or identification, it will be held that notice of motion for a new trial was regularly served, and that all technical objections to the statement are waived. *Godchaux v. A notice of intention to move for a new trial need not state that the party moving will ask that the verdict or deand a failure to file and serve such notice within the time prescribed by statute, will be deemed a waiver of the right to move.¹ The court has power to extend the time,² but no power to open a default,³ and in an action tried by the court or a referee the time begins to run from the announcement of the decision or judgment.⁴ The notice of intention must be in writing, or given in open court, and entered upon the minutes.⁵ It need not state that the mover will ask that the verdict or decision be vacated: that follows as a matter of course.⁶ And it is not objectionable cision be vacated. Heinlen v. Heilbron, 71 Cal. 557. And it need not in terms state an intention to move that the judgment be vacated. That follows as of course. Bauder v. Tyrrel, 59 Cal. 99.

An objection to notice of intention to move for a new trial is waived by a failure to object on admitting service. Schieffery v. Tapia, 68 Cal. 184.

1. Caney v. Silverthorne, 9 Cal. 67; White v. Superior Ct. (Cal.), 14 Pac. Rep. 87; Coveny v. Hale, 49 Cal. 552; Powell v. Howell, 21 Ga. 214.

Appellant gave notice of intention to move for a new trial on the 4th of May. On the 11th of the same month he gave new but like notice, and on the 16th filed his statement. On a motion to strike out the statement, it was held that, having elected to give notice on the 4th, he was bound by it; that he could not give a second notice and file his statement within five days from the second notice, but more than five days from the first. Le Roy v. Rasette, 32 Cal. 171.

Presumption of Regularity.—Where the order denying a new trial purports to be based on the ground that "a motion for a new trial is not the proper remedy," it will be presumed that the notice of intention to move for a new trial was in all respects regular, and that the motion was not denied on the ground that such notice was not given in time or not at all. Bank of Healdsburg v. Hitchcock (Cal.), 18 Pac. Rep. 648.

2. Harper v. Minor, 27 Cal. 108; Pickett v. Wallace, 54 Cal. 148; Sullivan v. Wallace, 73 Cal. 307.

In Clark v. Crane, 57 Cal. 629, however, the court held that the time ends with the period which the law allows for giving such notice, and when such time ends, to hold that the court or judge can extend it would be to affirm that the court or judge can dispense with the requirements of the statutes.

An order of the court directing a stay of execution on the judgment in the case, to a period beyond the time within which notice of intention to move for a new trial should be given, is not an order extending the time for giving such notice. Stevens v. North Western Stage Co., 1 Idaho, N. S. 604.

If an inferior court insists upon hearing a motion for a new trial, when no notice of intention to move has been filed, the superior court will issue a writ of prohibition to prevent it. White v. Superior Ct., 72 Cal. 475.

4. Robinson v. Benson, 19 Nev. 331; Biagi v. Howes, 66 Cal. 649; Emeric v. Alvarado, 64 Cal. 529; Chase v. Evoy, 50 Cal. 348; Burnett v. Stearns, 33 Cal. 468; Roussin v. Stewart, 33 Cal. 208.

In a case tried as in equity, and submitted to the jury on special issues, notice of an intention to move for a new trial, filed and served by plaintiff within ten days after the decision of the court, was in time, though nearly nine months after the verdict of the jury was filed, as the verdict of the jury in such a case is not a "decision." Bell v. Marsh, 80 Cal. 411.

Applying for time in which to file notice of intention to move and statement of ground, is not a waiver of notice of decision. Burlock v. Shupe (Utah, 1888), 7 Pac. Rep. 19.

5. Killip v. Empire Mill Co., 2 Nev. 34; Bear River etc. Co. v. Boles, 24 Cal. 354; Borland v. Thornton, 12 Cal. 440.

In Indiana, by express provision of section 652, Rev. Stat. 1881, an application for a new trial must be "by motion upon written causes, filed at the time of making the motion." La Follette v. Higgins, 109 Ind. 241.

because it states more than one of the statutory methods, as the manner in which the motion is to be made,¹ but where a certain method is designated it cannot be so amended as to designate another and different method.²

(b) STATEMENT OF GROUNDS.—A motion for a new trial must, as a general rule, be in writing,³ or, if made orally, it must be entered upon the minutes of the court;⁴ and it should partic-

Under a provision that "the party intending to move for a new trial must serve upon the adverse party a notice of his intention, designating the statutory grounds upon which the motion will be made, and whether the same will be made upon affidavits, or the minutes of the court or bill of exceptions, or a statement of the case," a notice that motion for new trial would be made "on the minutes of the court and a bill of exceptions" is not uncertain as to the mode of making the motion, and a refusal to dismiss it on that ground is proper. Hall v. Harris (S. Dak. 1890), 46 N. W. Rep. 931.

2. See Cooney v. Furlong, 66 Cal. 520; Clark v. Crane, 57 Cal. 630; Thomson v. Lynch, 43 Cal. 482; Le Roy v. Russette, 32 Cal. 171; Ellsassar v. Hunter, 26 Cal. 279; Bear River etc. Co. v. Boles, 24 Cal. 354; People v. Hill, 16 Cal. 113.

A notice of intention to vacate a judgment cannot be made the basis of an amendment transforming it into a notice of intention to move for a new trial, after the time for giving such notice has passed. Little v. Jacks, 67 Cal. 165.

Neglect to Prosecute.—A notice of intention to move for a new trial cannot be stricken out for want of diligence in prosecuting the motion. Heilbron v. Heinlen, 70 Cal. 482.

Where a proper notice has been filed within ten days, an additional notice and affidavit specifying the further ground of newly discovered evidence cannot be served and filed after the expiration of the ten days. Sullivan v. Helena (Mont. 1890), 25 Pac. Rep. 94.

Unless the record shows that the motion for a new trial was in writing, the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict is not available as error in the supreme court. Stevens v. Nevitt, 15 Ind. 224.

An oral motion for a new trial, or one in writing in which no cause or causes for a new trial are assigned, will not justify the granting of a new trial; nor will the overruling of such a motion be sufficient to present errors of law to either the trial or reviewing court. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Readinger (Neb. 1890), 44 N. W. Rep. 864.

New Trial as a Matter of Right.—In Indiana a motion for a new trial, in an action to recover possession of real property, need not be in writing. Zimmerman v. Marchland, 23 Ind. 474.

In California, in criminal cases, the statute does not require nor contemplate the making of the motion in writing, the grounds for the motion must be embodied in a bill of exceptions and can be reviewed in no other way. People v. Ah Sam, 41 Cal. 645. And neither a statement or brief of evidence, nor the reporter's notes need be filed; it may be heard without a bill of exceptions. People v. Keyser, 53 Cal. 183; People v. Fisher, 51 Cal. 319.

4. See Bear River etc. Co. v. Boles, 24 Cal. 354; Borland v. Thornton, 12 Cal. 440.

A recital in a record that "thereupon the defendant filed his motion for a new trial, as follows," which is followed ularly specify the grounds or reasons upon which it is made, with a view to direct the attention of the court, as well as of opposing counsel to the precise error complained of.¹ The grounds must be set forth with such certainty that it may be known by a person of good understanding what is relied upon,² but the words of

by a full and formal motion, including the style of the case in which it was filed, the grounds upon which it was based, and purporting to be signed by counsel, fairly implies that the motion was in writing, and should be so treated when its sufficiency is challenged in this court. *Osborne v. 447. But if a notice of a motion is insufficient in failing to state the grounds, the defect is cured by a stipulation that a statement of the case may be used on the motion. Rutherford v. Talent, 6 Mont. 112.

Mere statements in a motion for a new trial, that certain rulings were made by the court and excepted to by a party, amount to nothing, unless it is shown by the bill of exceptions that such rulings were made and excepted to. It is the office of a motion for a new trial to show the grounds on which the new trial is asked, but such grounds are not to be taken as true unless shown to be so by the bill of exceptions. Seifarth v. State, 35 Ark. 412.

Where a party made a motion, calling it a motion for an arrest of judgment, but assigned only causes proper in support of a motion for a new trial, which in substance and effect it was, the motion must be considered as for the latter purpose. Salinas v. Wright, 11 Tex. 572. But the statute requiring that a demand for a new trial should appear on the record, is not satisfied by the record of intention to appeal in a case where there might be a new trial, but could be no appeal. Huber v. Cherry, 17 Ohio St 562.

Must be Certified.—Where the grounds of a motion for a new trial are not certified by the presiding judge, they cannot be considered. Puffer v. Peabody, 59 Ca. 295.

In Missouri a motion for a new trial need not be accompanied by a written specification of the reasons upon which it is founded, under Rev. Code 1855. 1026. State v. Marshall, 36 Mo. 400.

The statutes of Arizona, Missouri, Oregon and Texas, and perhaps other States, declare that no grounds other than those specified shall be considered upon the motion. And see to the same effect, Shipley v. Elswald, 54 Ga. 520; Spurrier v. Briggs, 17 Ind. 529.

2. Louisville etc. R. Co. v. McCoy, 81 Ky. 403; Irwin v. Smith, 72 Ind. 482. And see Kimball v. Whitney, 15 Ind. 280; Burt v. Hoettinger, 28 Ind. 214; Harnett v. Central Pac. R. Co., 78 Cal. 31; Brumagim v. Bradshaw, 39

the statute need not be followed, if the statement substantially complies with its requirements.¹ Thus, a specification of "errors of law occurring at the trial and excepted at the time" is too vague and indefinite.² So, "irregularities in the proceedings of the court,"³ or "that the judgment of the court was contrary to law," or "against the law,"⁴ is not a sufficient specification. "That the damages are excessive is a sufficient specification

Cal. 24; Jones v. Layman, 123 Ind. 569; Butterfield v. Central Pac. R. Co., 37 Cal. 381.

And the court is not bound to help it out by any favorable construction or supposition. Hoey v. Hoey, 36 Conn. 386; Rooney v. Crant, 40 Ga. 191; Bartlett v. Lewis, 58 Me. 350.

Although a specification of error upon an application for a new trial is insufficient under the subdivision where placed, if it is sufficient under another subdivision this is enough. Jones v. Adams, 17 Neb. 84.

Where there are two verdicts, and a motion for a new trial, "because the verdict," etc., the court will not refuse to reverse because the application is in the singular. Lyon v. Stewart, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 676.

A motion for a new trial for cause, regularly filed by the losing party after verdict and before entry of judgment against him on the verdict, is a sufficient demand of another trial and compliance with the statute requiring notice on the journal. Marietta v. Emerson, 5 Ohio St. 288.

1. Humphries v. Marshall, 12 Ind. 609.

In Kentucky and Montana specifications in the language of the statute are held to be insufficient. Ohio Valley R. etc. Co. v. Kuhn (Ky. 1887), 5 S. W. Rep. 419; Dawson v. Baum (Wash. 1888), 19 Pac. Rep. 46. But this is probably not the general rule in cases in which apt words describing the grounds have been used. See Walrath v. State, 8 Neb. 88; Moore v. State, 114 Ind. 414; Lake Erie etc. R. Co. v. Acres, 108 Ind. 548. And see cases above cited.

2. Elliott v. Woodward, 18 Ind. 183; Snodgrass v. Hunt, 15 Ind. 274; Bernard v. Graham, 14 Ind. 322; Meaux v. Meaux, 81 Ky. 475. See Reed v. Gallagher, 34 Conn. 498.

On a motion for a new trial, an assignment of error, in form, the statement "the court erred in overruling defendant's motion for a new trial and to modify and amend the decree," is not sufficiently specific. Patterson v. Jack, 59 Iowa 632. But a motion for a new trial, based upon the absolute refusal of the court to permit a person called as a witness to testify need not specify what fact was proposed to be proved by him. If, on appeal, it appears that the witness was competent to testify generally in the cause, the judgment may be reversed. Sutherland v. Hankins, 56 Ind. 343.

Where the court, in admitting certain evidence, notified the parties that it would be withdrawn from the jury if it should, on further examination, conclude that it was not admissible, and after the evidence was all in, the court said to the jury that it had concluded that the testimony so admitted was inadmissible, that the same was withdrawn, and they should not consider it; this was not an instruction, but simply a ruling of the court, withdrawing the evidence in question from the jury, and was properly referred to as such in the motion for a new trial. Lawler v. McPheeters, 73 Ind. 577.

3. Gomer v. Densmore, 8 Neb. 384; Lowrie v. France, 7 Neb. 192.

But a specification that the finding of the court is contrary to law, will be enough to present the question that the trial was had without arraignment or plea when this fact appears on the record. Bowen v. State, 108 Ind. 411; Shoffner v. State, 93 Ind. 519; Tindall v. State, 71 Ind. 314.

4. Howcott v. Kilbourn, 44 Ark. 213; Ferguson v. Ehrenberg, 39 Ark. 420; Gilbertson v. Miller Min. etc. Co., 4 Utah 46.

That "the court erred in its judgment" is not good. Rohrer v. Brockhage, 15 Mo. App. 16.

That the verdict was contrary to law and evidence is a sufficiently specific assignment of error on a motion for a new trial; but under such assignment the evidence in the case must be taken and considered as a whole; if it was intended to insist on any particular defect of proof, such defect ought to be specially assigned. Hillebrant v. Brewer, 5 Tex. 566.

where that ground is relied on,"¹ and where the ground is that the verdict is against evidence, the statement must specify the particulars wherein it is claimed that the evidence is insufficient.² An assignment of "error of law in admitting illegal evidence" or "in excluding competent evidence," is not sufficiently definite.³

"Error in the assessment of the amount of the recovery" is a proper statement in a contract action. Lake Erie etc. R. Co. v. Acres, 108 Ind. 548. See also Mazhewitz v. Pimental, 83 Cal. 450; Allgro v. Duncan, 24 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 210.

That the court erred in assessing any amount is not a proper assignment. McGrimes v. State, 30 Ind. 140.

On motion for a new trial of an action upon a sheriff's bond, for breach of official duty in making an execution sale, where the fifth statutory cause for a new trial is not assigned, namely, "error in the assessment of the amount of recovery, where the action is upon contract," the fourth statutory cause, which is assigned, viz, "excessive damages," does not call in question the assessment of the amount of recovery, as the action is upon contract. Moore v. State, 114 Ind. 414.

In an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff, a specification of errors in the statement on a motion for a new trial, to the effect that the injuries of plaintiff were very serious, and that the sum found by the verdict was unreasonably and grossly inadequate, is a sufficient specification. Bennett v. Hobro, 72 Cal. 178.

The ground of "excessive damages" as a cause for a new trial is not embraced in the assignment that the verdict "is not sustained by sufficient evidence, or is contrary to law." Spurrer v. Briggs, 17 Ind. 529. And the ground of "errors of law occurring at the trial," does not cover the erroneous admission of testimony; but, on an assignment of excessive damages, the question of improper testimony will be examined. Oiler v. Bodkey, 17 Ind. 600.

2. Coleman v. Gilmore, 49 Cal. 340; Carlton v. Townsend, 28 Cal. 219; Parker v. Reay, 76 Cal. 103; Eddelbuttel v. Durrell, 55 Cal. 277; School District

An assignment as error that the finding of the jury is "against the weight of the evidence," affords no ground for reversing the judgment. It is implied by this form of the reason, that there was some evidence on which the jury might have found as they did. Wagoner v. Liston, 37 Ind. 357. And in an application, on the ground that the evidence does not justify the decision, a specification that the evidence is insufficient to justify the judgment is not sufficient. Kelly v. Mack, 49 Cal. 524.

A paper headed "motion for new trial," containing a notice that a new trial would be moved for on a specified day, and that the motion would be founded on certain grounds, viz, that the evidence is insufficient, etc., and comprising a statement that certain writings, notices, etc., would be relied on in support of the motion, was held a sufficient statement to support the motion, although informal. Van Valkenburg v. Huff, 1 Nev. 142.

A motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was rendered without sufficient evidence, and against the law, sufficiently refers the court to the exceptions previously taken, and renders them available for the purposes of the motion in the trial court, and, on error, in the upper court. Granger v. Lewis, 2 Wyo. 228.

In Indiana, it is held that the statement "that the decision is contrary to," or "not sustained by the evidence" is sufficiently definite. Collins v. McGhee, 32 Ind. 268; Weston v. Johnson, 48 Ind. 1; Edmonds v. State, 34 Ark. 720.

it should indicate specifically the evidence thus improperly admitted or excluded,¹ which may be done by a direct reference to a bill of exceptions, properly prepared and filed, setting forth the objections relied on.² A specification for alleged error in giving or refusing instructions, must specifically point out the instructions claimed to have been erroneously given, or refused,³ but this may be done by designating them by number, or by any other appropriate method of certain identification.⁴ A mere statement that the instructions were contrary to law, or that the charge was erroneous, or that error of law occurred upon the trial of the cause, will raise no question,⁵ unless errors appear in the bill of exceptions.⁶ In cases in which the motion must be made on affidavits,

But a motion for a new trial, which refers to the evidence as contained in a bill of exceptions not yet filed, presents no question. Harvey v. Huston, 94 Ind. 527; Cain v. Goda, 94 Ind. 555; Arbuckle v. Biederman, 94 Ind. 168; Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Hazelett, 105 Ind. 212. And the statement, in a motion for a new trial, of an objection made to evidence admitted, or of an exception taken to a ruling admitting evidence over objection, cannot be taken as true, though such motion is contained in a bill of exceptions. Wiler v. Mauley, 51 Ind. 169.

3. Alley v. Gavin, 40 Ind. 446; Jeffersonville etc. R. Co. v. Bowen, 40 Ind. 545; Estep v. Larsh, 21 Ind. 183; Beal v. Stone, 22 Iowa 447.

A specification, as ground for a new trial, that the court erred in refusing to submit the questions propounded by defendant's counsel, and in its instructions, is sufficiently explicit. Louisville etc.

R. Co. v. McCoy, 81 Ky. 403. But a motion for a new trial below, or an assignment of error in this court, on the ground that "the court erred in all the instructions it gave, and in refusing instructions asked for by the appellant," is insufficient, for not pointing out, with reasonable certainty, the particular instructions in which the court is supposed to have erred. Peck v. Hensley, 21 Ind. 344. To allege that the court erred in giving or refusing to give charges to the jury, or in receiving or rejecting evidence is not a sufficiently definite assignment of reasons for a new trial. Waggoner v. Liston, 37 Ind. 357.

4. Wofsinger v. Reynolds, 52 Ind. 218; Grant v. Westfall, 57 Ind. 121; Douglass v. Blankenship, 50 Ind. 160; Reeves v. Plough, 41 Ind. 204; Weir v. Burlington etc. R. Co., 19 Neb. 212; Ellis v. Central Pac. R. Co., 5 Nev. 255.

But see Horne v. Williams, 23 Ind. 37; Elliott v. Woodward, 18 Ind. 183; Snodgrass v. Hunt, 15 Ind. 274; Robinson v. Hadley, 14 Ind. 417; Darnell v. State, 15 Tex. App. 70.

A motion for a new trial, on the ground of error in refusing or giving instructions, must specify the instructions alleged to have been given, which were incorrect, and those refused, which should have been given. So also a motion for a new trial on the ground of the improper admission of evidence, must point out the evidence improperly admitted. Reeves v. Plough, 41 Ind. 204; Marley v. Noblett, 42 Ind. 85; Holding v. Smith, 42 Ind. 536.

the same rules apply as to the sufficiency of the specifications as those applicable to ordinary motions upon the record.¹

(1) Filing and Service of Statement.—A party moving for a new trial must, as a general rule, file his statement of grounds within a specified time after verdict or decision,² and in some States it is required to be served upon the opposite party.³

9. The Motion Papers.—If a motion is founded upon a question of law, it is presented by a bill of exceptions; if founded upon the facts, it is presented as a case, or it may be made upon both, in which case it should be presented by a case and exceptions.⁴ Where the grounds for the motion are dehors the record, they must be established by extrinsic proof.⁵ Where errors occurring upon the trial are relied upon, each error must be specifically ming, 40 Ohio St. 52; Baker v. Pendergast, 32 Ohio St. 494.

The motion for a new trial must specifically indicate the evidence offered and excluded, and the bill of exceptions must show that the evidence offered was that indicated by the motion. Sertel v. Graeter, 112 Ind. 117.

1. Thomp. on Trials, § 2759.

On application for a new trial, the affidavits of the parties are admissible to show the grounds on which it is made. Sherrard v. Olden, 6 N. J. L. 344.

Where an assignment of error in the action of the circuit court is that it has overruled a motion for a new trial, the bill of exceptions presented to the appellate court need not show that the party who made the motion has filed in writing any points specifying the grounds of his motion for a new trial. Ottawa etc. R. Co. v. McMath, 91 Ill. 104.

Misconduct.—A motion to set aside a verdict for misconduct of jurors, must specify their names and the nature of the alleged communications to them. Lennox v. Knox etc. R. Co., 62 Me. 322.

Absence of Counsel.—A motion for a new trial in an action to remove a cloud from title, on the ground of the absence of plaintiff's counsel from the trial on account of sickness, and of the plaintiff's having a good cause of action, is defective in not setting out the chain of title relied on by plaintiff. Montgomery v. Carlton, 56 Tex. 431.

2. Adams v. Oakland, 8 Cal. 510; Stevens v. North Western Stage Co., 1 Idaho, N. S. 604.

An order for a new trial will be set aside where the "statement of the grounds on which a party moves for a new trial" was not filed. Hill v. White, 2 Cal. 306.

Computation of Time.—When leave is granted to file a statement of the grounds of a motion for a new trial within 20 days, the time runs from the date of the order, and not from the time of giving notice of the motion. Easterby v. Larco, 24 Cal. 179; Jenkins v. Frink, 27 Cal. 337.

3. In California, omission to serve the statement on a motion for a new trial, upon the adverse party, may be ground for denying the motion, but cannot warrant an order striking the statement from the files. Calderwood v. Peyser, 42 Cal. 110.

When there has been no legal notice of a motion for a new trial, the statement cannot be made the foundation of such a motion, nor annexed to the record of the judgment or order from which the party may appeal. Flateau v. Lubeck, 24 Cal. 364.

It is not necessary, in New Jersey, for the party making a motion for a new trial to give notice of it to the opposite party, or to file the reasons for the application. Ryerson v. Grover, 1 N. J. L. 392.

4. 1 Burr. Pr. 261, 469.

5. Cochrane v. Knowles, 3 Greene (Iowa) 115; Wheeler v. Schilds, 3 Ill. 348; State v. Camp, 23 Vt. 551.

Where a party applies for a new trial because the court refused to give him time to prepare a showing in reference to any matter, he should support his application by proof that he could have made a good showing by affidavit or otherwise. Davis v. Hardy, 76 Ind. 272.

In Vermont, on a petition for a new trial, the supreme court will not proceed to the hearing upon the merits, presented to the court,¹ and when such errors are not apparent upon the face of the record proper, consisting of the petition, summons or writ, and the other pleadings in the action or proceeding, including the verdict, or decision and judgment, they must be incorporated into it by a bill of exceptions, or a brief, or statement of evidence.² So, except in motions made upon the minutes of the court, if the motion is made for reasons which do not appear either upon the record proper or as made up by a bill of exceptions, or a brief, or statement of evidence, the general practice is to require such grounds to be set forth in affidavits in until furnished with a properly authenticated copy of the minutes of the judge who tried the case in the county court, or evidence showing that such copy has been applied for and could not be obtained, in which case only the court will dispense with such copy, and admit the affidavits of the attorneys as to what passed at the trial. Durkee v. Marshall, 14 Vt. 559.

Where defendant in execution interposes a claim as executor, and his counsel thereafter withdraws it, and, damages having been given against him for the delay, he moves for a new trial, but produces no affidavits as to the reason of his absence when damages were given, nor as to the merits of the claim, nor his reasons for filing it, the motion should be refused. National Exch. Bank v. Walker (Ga.), 4 S. E. Rep. 763.

Compulsory Execution of Affidavits.—Upon proper application by a party, the court will compel a refractory person to make his affidavit as to facts within his knowledge, in support of a motion for a new trial, assigning such facts as cause. The court has the same power to compel such a person's attendance, and to require him to make his affidavit, as it has to compel the attendance of a witness, and to require him to testify orally. Huston v. Vail, 51 Ind. 299.

But, in Louisiana, it is held that the accused is not entitled to compulsory process to obtain witnesses in support of a motion for a new trial. State v. Gauthreaux, 38 La. An. 608.

The proper procedure, in Rhode Island, to obtain a new trial on the ground of erroneous rulings and because the verdict is contrary to the evidence, is by petition, alleging each as a separate ground, with a report of the evidence. Eddy v. Wilkinson (R. I. 1889), 18 Atl. Rep. 202.

2. Bateson v. Clark, 37 Mo. 31; Lenox v. Pike, 2 Ark. 14; Cole v. Driskill, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 16; Freshour v. Logansport etc. Co., 104 Ind. 463; Jones v. Evans, 28 Wis. 168; Brush v. Kohn, 14 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 51. And see Kesler v. Meyers, 41 Ind. 543; Miles v. Buchanan, 36 Ind. 490; Cochnowar v. Cochnowar, 27 Ind. 253; Ewing v. Ewing, 24 Ind. 468; Hays v. McKee, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 11; Shields v. Cunningham, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 86; Gist v. Higgins, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 303; Whitmore v. Shiverick, 3 Nev. 288.

In the supreme court the statement of facts in a motion for a new trial is not regarded as true unless its truth is shown by bill of exceptions. Bake v. Smiley, 84 Ind. 212. And the motion cannot supply facts omitted from the bill of exceptions. Carroll v. Bowler, 40 Ark. 168.

Instructions copied into a motion for a new trial are not a part of the record. Clafin v. Cottman, 77 Ind. 58. And that an affidavit to support a motion for a new trial is copied into the record, does not make it a part of the record; to make it such it must be incorporated into a bill of exceptions. Saunders v. M'Collins, 5 Ill. 419. Where, on a motion for a new trial, leave is denied to file certain affidavits, but their contents are substantially embodied in the bill of exceptions, there is no error. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Connell, 127 Ill. 419.

A new trial will not be ordered by the Supreme Court of New Mexico on the application of a plaintiff in error, on the ground that by the resignation of the judge before whom the cause was tried he has lost his right to have the judgment reviewed, when both the record and bill of exceptions have been struck from the files of the supreme court for not being signed and sealed support of the motion,¹ and in some cases the motion may be made simply upon affidavits, without either bill of exceptions or statement of evidence.² The effect of a failure to incorporate errors occurring upon the trial into the record, by neglecting to properly make and file a bill of exceptions, or a statement of evidence, is to confine the motion to a consideration of such errors as appear in the judgment roll, and such exceptions as are contained in it only.³

by the judge who tried the cause. Wheeler v. Fick, 4 N. Mex. 149.

Thompson*, 30 Fed. Rep. 38; 3 Estes Pl. (3rd ed.), § 4854; Whittmore v. Shiverick, 3 Nev. 288; North Chicago City R. Co. v. Gastka, 27 Ill. App. 518; Campbell v. Buller, 33 Mo. App. 646.

There being no Missouri statute regulating affidavits in support of motions for new trials, the matter is one of practice. They may be filed without leave of court. The court, in its discretion, may grant a continuance, even at the hearing, to enable them to be prepared, and the affidavit of one of defendants sued jointly may be sufficient. Howland v. Reeves, 25 Mo. App. 458.

An affidavit of merits is required to support a motion for a new trial. Burnham v. Smith, 11 Wis. 258; Elliott v. Leak, 4 Mo. 540; O'Keefe v. Tempest, 35 Minn. 237.

But the court will not set aside a regular verdict on a mere affidavit of merits. Gilliland v. Morrell, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 154.

2. State v. Stanley, 4 Nev. 71; Ewing v. Price, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 520.

In New York, when the motion is made upon the ground of irregularity or surprise, it is not necessary to make a case, but the party making the motion is at liberty to make one if he sees fit to do so. Paulitsch v. New York etc. R. Co., 50 N. Y. Super. Ct. 241. But if the motion is made before a judge, who did not preside on the trial of the case, it is better to make a case so that whatever occurred upon the trial may be presented in that way. Nesmith v. Clinton F. Ins. Co., 8 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 141.

In Nevada, when the trial has been had in the absence of the defendant, if the indictment be for felony, or when the jury has received evidence out of court other than that resulting from a view, or when the jury had separated without leave of the court, after retiring to deliberate on their verdict, or have been guilty of any misconduct tending to prevent a fair and due consideration of the case, or when the verdict has been decided by lot, or by any means other than a fair expression of opinion on the part of all the jurors, or where the court has misdirected the jury in a matter of law, or where a verdict is contrary to law or evidence, a motion for a new trial may be made upon affidavits without either a bill of exceptions or a statement of evidence. State v. Stanley, 4 Nev. 71.

In Wisconsin the practice of moving for a new trial for causes stated in affidavits accompanying the motion, and a term subsequent to the one at which the verdict was rendered, without first settling a case, is irregular; and if proper objection is taken an order granting such motion will be reversed. But the requirements of the rule in this respect may be waived, and the irregularity cured, by the failure of the opposite party to object in the circuit court to proceeding upon the motion, and by procuring a case to be afterwards settled. Jones v. Evans, 28 Wis. 168.

3. Berger v. Dubernet, 7 Robt. (N. Y.) 1; McLean v. Cole, 13 Hun (N. Y.) 300; Brown v. Grupp, 10 N. Y. Wk. Dig. 357; Schwarz v. Weber, 103 N. Y. 658; Laferty v. Brownlee, 11 Cal. 132; Danley v. Robbins, 3 Ark. 147.

Testimony not minuted by the judge on a trial cannot be used on a motion for a new trial, nor to take off a nonsuit. Bee v. Fisher, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 339.

When an attorney fails to promptly present a statement for a new trial to the judge before whom the case was tried, and it is not signed and filed in time by reason of a delay in the mail to which he has entrusted it, he cannot

(a) BILLS OF EXCEPTIONS.¹—See, ante, BILL OF EXCEPTIONS, 2 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law 223.

(b) STATEMENT OR BRIEF OF EVIDENCE.—The statement or brief of evidence is usually required to contain all the evidence necessary to explain the particular points specified as error, and to which objection is made;² and, ordinarily, only such as is obtain a new trial by original suit for that purpose, as ordinary prudence demanded, in such a case, that he should have presented the statement in person, or by attorney or messenger, and not trust to the uncertainties of the mail. Proctor v. Wilcox, 68 Tex. 219.

But a new trial may be granted when the exceptions, though disallowed by the judge, show sufficient cause. Fisk v. Steel, Brayt. (Vt.) 168. And where the judge of the superior court took a bill of exceptions, which had been agreed upon between the parties, for the purpose of examining it and making corrections, if necessary, and retained it, without returning it to the files for more than a year, and until after his resignation from office, the superior court had authority in its discretion to grant a new trial, notwithstanding the excepting party omitted to prove his exceptions. Borrowscale v. Bosworth, 98 Mass. 34.

1. A new trial may be properly refused, although the stenographer's notes of the evidence introduced on the first trial were burned before the preparation of the bill of exceptions, if, notwithstanding the loss, it is practicable, although with much labor, to prepare the bill from the judge's minutes, recollection of the testimony, and from other sources accessible. Golden Terra Min. Co. v. Smith, 2 Dak. 377.

Where there is a motion for a new trial, such previous exceptions as are not incorporated in the motion must be regarded as having been waived. Collier v. State, 20 Ark. 36.

A statement, upon a motion for a new trial, which sets forth none of the evidence, but simply refers to the reporter's notes, and directs that they shall be inserted in full, is not a proper statement, and will be disregarded by the court upon application for mandamus to compel its settlement. Frazer v. San Francisco Superior Court, 62 Cal. 49.

Presumption from Omission of Facts.—The facts, upon which a court exercised its discretion in discharging a jury, should be spread on the record on a motion for a new trial; if they are not, the supreme court will presume that the inferior court exercised its discretion in a proper manner. State v. Waterhouse, Mart. & Y. (Tenn.) 278; Patent Brick Co. v. Moore, 75 Cal. 205; Jackson v. Andrews, 59 N. Y. 244.

In Georgia, in an application for a new trial in the superior court, a brief of the testimony which refers to executions, judgments and interrogatories as being attached, when in fact no such papers are appended, is fatally defective; and the omission cannot be supplied by the certificate of the judge presiding, that he recognizes such documents as in court before him, on the final hearing of the motion. Tomlinson v. Cox, 8 Ga. 111.

In California, in a statement for a new trial, the evidence may simply be referred to, and need not be contained in the statement itself. Dickinson v. Van Horn, 9 Cal. 207.

In Massachusetts, it is a matter of discretion with the judge to report the evidence, so as to lay a foundation for material to the motion;¹ but where the ground that the verdict is contrary to, or against the weight of evidence, or that the damages are excessive, is relied upon, the case should contain all the testimony taken or offered on the trial.² This statement or brief of evidence must be served upon the opposite party within a time usually prescribed by statute.³ Amendments may be

In Nebraska, instructions of the court to the jury on a motion for a new trial, and all matters required by the Nebraska statutes to be filed with the clerk and entered upon the journal of the court, should not be embodied in the bill. Eaton v. Carruth, 11 Neb. 231.

Washington*, 33 Me. 584. And see Simpson v. Norton, 45 Me. 281; Lamance v. Byrnes, 17 Nev. 197; Mandlebaum v. Liebes, 17 Nev. 131; Hidden v. Jordan, 28 Cal. 301; Simpson v. Norton, 45 Me. 281; People v. Perdue, 49 Cal. 425.

In Connecticut, the court will not entertain a motion for a new trial, for a verdict against evidence, unless it contain a statement of the evidence reported by the judge. Hopson v. Doolittle, 13 Conn. 236.

To authorize a trial de novo by the supreme court, all the evidence offered, as well as that admitted on the trial below, must be before the court. Argall v. Pugh, 56 Iowa 308.

A judge's certificate that the record contained "all the evidence used on the trial," but failing to show that no other evidence was offered, is insufficient for a new trial. Hart v. Jackson, 57 Iowa 75. And see Roby v. Hall, 57 Iowa 213.

Presumed to Contain All.—In the absence of any showing to the contrary, the statement on the motion for a new trial will be presumed to contain all the testimony offered. Clark v. Gridley, 35 Cal. 398. And see Patent Brick Co. v. Moore, 75 Cal. 205; Jackson v. Andrews, 59 N. Y. 244; State v. Waterhouse, Mart. & Y. (Tenn.) 278.

The admission by the respondent's attorney, that a statement on motion for new trial is correct, does not admit such statement to contain all the evidence offered in the case, where the statement itself does not purport to contain it all. It can only be held to be an admission that, so far as the evidence is stated, it is stated correctly. Howard v. Winters, 3 Nev. 539.

The Only Question Submitted.—Where an allowed statement of evidence on a motion for a new trial, based on the ground that the verdict is against the evidence, sets out evidence which relates to but one question of fact in the case, the moving party may show that this was the only question submitted to the jury; and that on all other questions the court ruled as a matter of law in his favor. Chaffee v. Sprague, 15 R. I. 135.

3. See Honay v. Chesterman, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 22; French v. Powers, 80 N. Y. 146; Schwarz v. Weber, 103 N. Y. 658; Wulff v. Manuel (Mont. 1890), 23 Pac. Rep. 723.

Where a statement on motion for a new trial has been duly filed, and the moving party has given notice of the time and place of settlement of the statement, no further notice is necessary. The court, at the time and place appointed, may settle the statement in the absence of the other side. Barbaires v. Gregory, 64 Cal. 230.

Extension of Time.—When a motion for a new trial is made in term, and an order is taken, by consent of parties, to perfect the brief of evidence by a specified day in vacation, and to hear the motion on that day at chambers, the judge, sitting at chambers on and by successive adjournments after the appointed day, has full possession of the matter, and may, without consent, give further time to complete the brief and prepare for the hearing. Stone v. Taylor, 63 Ga. 309.

In California, the time for the preparation of the statement on motion for a new trial may be further extended by stipulation if the original time of extension has not expired. Curtis v. Superior Court, 70 Cal. 390.

proposed and served by the opponent to the motion,¹ and the statement, together with the amendments, settled, either by agreement of the parties or by the judge before whom the cause was tried, upon due notice.² Whereupon, it is usually required to be certified by the trial judge³ and filed with the clerk of the (N. Y.) 105; Wills v. Rhen Kong, 70 Cal. 548; Marshall v. Golden Fleece etc. Min. Co., 16 Nev. 156.

Where no amendments are proposed to the statement on motion for a new trial, within the time designated, it may be presented for settlement without notice to the adverse party, he cannot object that settlement was made without notice to him where he had offered no amendments. Wulff v. Manuel (Mont. 1890), 23 Pac. Rep. 723.

Where a statute provides that a statement on motion for a new trial shall be settled by the judge upon notice, if it is not agreed to by the adverse party, the adverse party need not be present at such settlement, if he had notice. Vilhac v. Biven, 28 Cal. 409. And see Wulff v. Manuel (Mont. 1890), 23 Pac. Rep. 723.

The rule of the superior court that an applicant for a new trial shall make out a brief of the oral and a copy of the written evidence may not be dispensed with by agreement of parties and an order of court that a part of the evidence may be omitted from the brief. Georgia R. Co. v. Mitchell, 75 Ga. 144.

The granting of a rule nisi, on a motion for a new trial, is an approval of the brief of evidence. Vanover v. Turner, 41 Ga. 577.

If the judge or referee before whom the case was tried is dead, the proper course is to apply to the court at special term on motion to have the case settled. Morse v. Evans, 6 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 445; People v. Hodgdon, 55 Cal. 72.

The California Code, § 659, does not limit the time within which the statement on motion for a new trial may be presented for settlement after amendment. Pendergrass v. Cross, 73 Cal. 475. See Mellor v. Crouch, 76 Cal. 549; Smith v. Stockton, 73 Cal. 204.

A motion to vacate the report of a referee, and for a new trial for errors of law committed during the trial, and for insufficiency of evidence, may be made on a case settled after the entry of judgment when the report has been made and filed, and judgment has been entered without notice, and when the party making the motion has been guilty of no laches or unreasonable delay in settling the case and making the motion. When, in such a case, a report is vacated, and a new trial is granted, the court may also set aside the judgment to give effectiveness to its decision. Cochrane v. Halsey, 25 Minn. 52.

3. See Adams v. Dohrmann, 63 Cal. 417; Simpson v. Norton, 45 Me. 281; Hyde v. Harkness, 1 Idaho, N. S. 623; Bliss v. Stevens, 13 Ga. 403; Snelling v. Darrell, 15 Ga. 507; Raymond v. Thexton, 7 Mont. 299. See Taliaferro v. Franklin, 1 Gratt. (Va.) 332.

A motion for a new trial submitted upon a statement certified by the attorneys of both parties to be correct, but not signed and certified by the judge as required by the code, must be disregarded. Schreiber v. Whitney, 60 Cal. 431.

A certificate of the clerk, to the effect that no amendments to the statement on motion for a new trial have been filed, is such an authentication as is required by Nev. Pr. Act, § 197. Borden v. Bender, 16 Nev. 49.

An endorsement by the judge on a brief of evidence that, six months having elapsed, he was unable to certify whether it was correct or not, though he recognized the correctness of portions of it, is not an "approval" within Georgia Super. Ct., rule 49, and a motion for a new trial is properly refused for laches in not sooner presenting the brief for approval. Brown v. Groover, 65 Ga. 238.

A certificate of a trial judge that the record in a case contained all the evidence "adduced" on the trial below, is court in which the trial was had.¹ A case properly settled and filed cannot be disregarded, though the court may be of the opinion that it does not correctly set forth the facts.² The rules with reference to the preparation and filing of a statement, or brief of evidence are statutory and usually analagous to those applicable to the preparation of a bill of exceptions.³

(c) AFFIDAVITS.—When the motion is made upon grounds which must be set forth by affidavits, they must clearly show the irregularity complained of.⁴ The facts must be stated; the bare assertion that the party has a good defence is insufficient.⁵

insufficient to authorize a trial de novo on appeal. Tuttle v. Story Co., 56 Iowa 316.

Denial Before Settlement.—Where a motion for a new trial is to be made on a statement of the case, an order denying the motion before the statement has been settled and certified by the court is erroneous. Stewart v. Taylor, 68 Cal. 5. And see Hart v. Burnett, 10 Cal. 64.

1. White v. Newton etc. Co., 38 Ga. 587; Bliss v. Stevens, 13 Ga. 403; Mills v. Dearborn, 82 Cal. 51.

The time of filing is prescribed by statute in some of the States. See Stevens v. North Western Stage Co., 1 Idaho, N. S. 604; Pease v. Pease, 66 Ga. 677; Turner v. Rawson, 5 Ga. 399; Petty v. Mahafy, 3 Ga. 217; Coughlin v. District of Columbia, 106 U. S. 7; Elder v. Feret, 18 Nev. 278; Collins v. Kay, 69 Tex. 365.

Extension of Time.—Good reasons appearing why the brief of the evidence had not been filed and approved by the court, a motion to dismiss the motion for a new trial on this ground is properly overruled. Williams v. Central R. Co., 77 Ga. 612. And see Hardin v. Inferior Court, 10 Ga. 93; Candler v. Hammond, 23 Ga. 493.

A motion to dismiss a pending motion for a new trial, on the ground that an approved brief of the evidence had not been seasonably filed, is properly refused where the delay was due to the illness of the judge and the inability of counsel to agree upon the brief. Crockett v. Roebuck, 77 Ga. 16.

Waiver.—The filing of a brief of evidence on a motion for a new trial is waived by the opposite party's appearance and argument of the motion. Goodwyn v. Hightower, 30 Ga. 249. And see Watts v. Kilburn, 7 Ga. 356; Moxley v. Kinlock, 80 Ga. 46.

4. Townsend v. State, 13 Ind. 357; Quinlan v. Stratton, 7 N. Y. Supp. 786; Brown v. Speyers, 20 Gratt. (Va.) 196.

Defendant's motion for a new trial, on the ground of surprise and newly discovered evidence, is properly overruled when the affidavit therefor fails to state that the verdict was unjust, and that defendant had a meritorious defence. Campbell v. Buller, 32 Mo. App. 646.

Statement that Defect Can be Supplied.—A new trial may be granted for the rejection of evidence, on affidavit that it was offered bona fide, and that its place can be supplied on a new trial. Holmes v. M'Kinney, 4 Mon. (Ky.) 4; Hunt v. Owings, 4 Mon. (Ky.) 20.

5. Hammond v. Kerner, 3 Harw. (Tenn.) 145; Ligon v. Taylor, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 498.

Form.—It is not error to exclude affidavits written in a foreign language, on a motion for a new trial. Spencer v. Doane, 23 Cal. 418.

A "statement" on a motion for a new trial which is not signed as required by statute, and which is served only by copy while thus unsigned, will be disregarded on the hearing of the motion. Snow v. Crowe, 3 Utah 172.

Where a cause is transferred from the county to the district court because the county judge was counsel in another suit growing out of the same cause of action, an unsworn statement by the county judge, offered in support of a motion for a new trial in the district court on the ground that the county judge was not in fact disqualified, but forming no part of the proceedings or of the record, need not be considered. Kahanek v. Galveston etc. R. Co., 72 Tex. 476.

Generally, affidavits made by the mover are all that is required,¹ but the court is not bound to receive an affidavit as true; it is open to the scrutiny of its judgment and reason, and corroborative affidavits may be required;² and in criminal cases the affidavit of the accused is received with caution, and when standing alone, is usually held to be insufficient.³ Affidavits of jurors will not be admitted to impeach their verdict,⁴ nor to show their reasons for their verdict, or the manner in which it was arrived at.⁵ But as a general rule, such affidavits are received to explain

Where a cestui que trust is better informed of the facts of a cause than the trustee, having had the management of it, he should make the moving affidavits. Finley v. Tyler, 3 Mon. (Ky.) 402.

When there are several parties joining in a motion for a new trial, one of whom has had exclusive management of the cause, affidavits by the others are insufficient. Dailey v. Gaines, 1 Dana (Ky.) 529.

Ex parte affidavits will be rejected where a rule of courts requires the motion to be made upon depositions taken on notice. Pemberton v. Johnson, 113 Ind. 538; Fowler v. Colton, 1 Pinn. (Wis.) 331.

Information and Belief.—An affidavit that alleges, upon information, without disclosing the sources of the information, that a judge had improperly received a communication from a jury, after charge and retirement, and had made answer to the same, and that said answer and communication were unlawful, and prejudicial to the interests of the defendants, etc., is not sufficient to authorize setting aside the verdict. Gilotte v. Jackson, 41 N. Y. Super. Ct. 308.

The court will not order a new trial on the unsupported affidavit of the defendant, when the plaintiff's claim was established on the trial by the testimony of a disinterested witness. Silkman v. Boiger, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 236. Nor upon the unsupported affidavit of defendant, that plaintiff swore falsely, and thereby surprised him. Iser v. Cohen, 1 Baxt. (Tenn.) 421.

The affidavit of plaintiff alone, that he had been informed since the trial, and believed that a juror was related to defendant, both by blood and by affinity, within the fourth degree, and failed to disclose the same on voir dire, but without stating what the relationship was, is insufficient. Shinn v. Tucker, 37 Ark. 580.

3. See Runnells v. State, 28 Ark. 121; Campbell v. State, 38 Ark. 498; Robinson v. State, 33 Ark. 180; Jackson v. State, 29 Ark. 62.

In Tennessee, the court may require the attendance of one who has made an affidavit in support of a motion for a new trial, for personal examination. Glidewell v. State, 15 Lea (Tenn.) 133.

In Illinois, the affidavit of a prisoner upon a motion for a new trial is prima facie evidence of the truth of the statements contained therein. Guykouski v. People, 2 Ill. 476.

A juror's affidavit that a juror stated that he had long known a witness whose credibility was under consideration, and that he would not swear to what was not true, are inadmissible on a motion for a new trial. Taylor v. Garnett, 110 Ind. 287. And see McMurdock v. Kimberlin, 23 Mo. App. 523.

Affidavits by Outside Parties.—An affidavit by an attorney, to support a motion for a new trial, as to what one of the jurors told him, is hearsay evidence and not to be considered. State v. Quinton, 59 Iowa 362.

In Kansas, it may be shown by the affidavit of a juror that the verdict was and uphold a verdict;¹ and any matter occurring during the trial, or in the jury room, not essentially inhering in the verdict itself may be shown.² Where misconduct of the jury is relied upon, the time, place and nature of the misconduct must be stated and the participants identified,³ and the mover must establish his ignorance of it at the time of the trial.⁴ When the motion is made for accident, mistake or surprise, the facts constituting such ground must be detailed,⁵ and the party must show that he was thereby deprived of an opportunity to properly defend the action.⁶ Where the absence of witnesses is relied upon, the facts which determined by lot. Perry v. Bailey, 12 Kan. 539.

An affidavit that, upon information and belief, the verdict of the jury was the result of chance, and not the deliberate judgment of the jury, by each putting down a certain sum and dividing the amount by 12, and which does not show any preliminary understanding that the result should be adopted as the verdict, is insufficient to impeach the verdict; and, in such case, the polling of the jury, and their separate answers, relieves it of all objection. Pekin v. Winkel, 77 Ill. 56.

2. Perry v. Bailey, 12 Kan. 539; Hix v. Drury, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 296; Whitney v. Whitman, 5 Mass. 405; State v. Hascall, 6 N. H. 352; Page v. Wheeler, 5 N. H. 91; Wright v. Illinois etc. Tel. Co., 20 Iowa 195.

That a juror was improperly approached by a party, his agent or attorney, may be shown. Perry v. Bailey, 12 Kan. 539.

The affidavit of a juror to prove discussions and votes in the jury room, is not received; not even to support the verdict. But such affidavit may be received to disprove allegations against a juror that he has made declarations outside the jury room, showing an improper bias. Woodward v. Leavitt, 107 Mass. 453.

Affidavit of Party.—An affidavit of a party to an action, stating what took place in a jury room while the jury were considering their verdict, without any statement therein, or proof that such party was present in the jury room, will not be received to impeach the verdict of a jury, for it cannot be presumed that such party was present in the jury room. Hoare v. Hindley, 49 Cal. 275.

Misconduct or Mistake of Officers of Court.—The affidavits of jurors are admissible to show the misconduct of a party, or of the officer having the jury in charge. Thomas v. Chapman, 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 98; Reynolds v. Champlain Transp. Co., 9 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 7; Wright v. Illinois etc. Tel. Co., 20 Iowa 195. Or to show that a wrong verdict was delivered by mistake. Cogan v. Ebdon, 1 Burr. Affidavits alleging irregularities and misconduct upon information and belief are insufficient; they must be positively and specifically stated. Stone v. State, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 27.

In New York, the motion must be heard either upon a case or upon affidavits, or both. Paulitsch v. New York etc. R. Co., 19 N. Y. Wk. Dig. 73; s. c., 50 N. Y. Super. Ct. 241; Nesmith v. Clinton F. Ins. Co., 8 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 141.

Where the ground is that the cause was unexpectedly called for trial, the affidavits must disclose an available defence. Embry v. Devinney, 8 Dana (Ky.) 203. And where the ground is a variance between pleading and proof the mover must show in what respect he was misled. Shelton v. Durham, 76 Mo. 434; s. c., 7 Mo. App. 585.

6. Richards v. Nuckolls, 19 Iowa 555. And see Hunt v. Owings, 4 Mon. (Ky.) 20.

Upon a motion for a new trial on the ground of the absence of witnesses who they would prove must be stated,¹ together with the reason for their nonappearance.² Where the motion is made upon the grounds of newly discovered evidence, it should be supported both by affidavits and a brief or statement of evidence,³ it being necessary that the evidence should be set out in full, in order to enable the court to determine that the newly discovered evidence is material, and not merely cumulative.⁴ The affidavits must affirmatively show that reasonable diligence has been exerted to procure such evidence at the time of the trial,⁵ and to do this the

had been subpoenaed, the failure of the affidavits of the moving party to state whether or not the witnesses absented themselves by his consent is good ground for denying the motion. North Chicago City R. Co. v. Gastka, 27 Ill. App. 518.

It must appear not only that the evidence was discovered too late to have been used on the trial, but that it was of such a nature or so concealed that it could not, by the use of reasonable diligence, have been obtained and used at the trial. Denny v. Wickliffe, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 224; Bronson v. Green, 2 Duv. (Ky.) 234.

use of the words "due diligence," or "reasonable diligence," or their equivalent, is not sufficient—they must set forth the particular efforts which have been made to discover and produce such evidence, the diligence being a question for the court, to be decided upon the facts submitted to it in support of the motion.¹ The affidavit of the moving party only, if nothing appears to discredit it, is sufficient to establish the discovery

In Champion v. Ulmer, 70 Ill. 322, it was held, that to show sufficient diligence, upon a motion for a new trial, upon the ground of newly discovered evidence, the affidavit must expressly negative every circumstance from which negligence may be inferred.

A general statement in a motion for new trial, that all possible diligence was used to obtain newly discovered evidence, may need reduction to particular acts; and affirming that enquiry was made of numerous persons, every person, etc., may not suffice, where no names of any persons are mentioned, and no reason assigned for the omission. Patterson v. Collier, 77 Ga. 292.

An affidavit that the party had made every effort to ascertain certain facts prior to the trial by enquiries of several persons, but which does not give the names of the persons of whom such enquiries were made, does not show sufficient diligence. Smith v. Wagaman, 58 Iowa 11.

Motions of this kind ought to be received with great caution, because there are few cases tried in which something new may not be hunted up, and because it tends very much to the introduction of perjury to admit new evidence after the party who has lost the verdict has had an opportunity of discovering points both of his adversary's strength and his own weakness. Moore v. Philadelphia Bank, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 42. See also Baker v. Joseph, 16 Cal. 173.

The law favors the diligent and punishes the sluggard; its policy is to compel parties to be ready for trial and to try their causes at the time appointed, and to so try them as that all the evidence they can procure shall be introduced, and the litigation finally terminated. A party who seeks to reopen litigation on the ground that he has discovered new evidence must have the reasons stated and be prepared to establish every essential element of such a case strongly, clearly and satisfactorily. Hines v. Driver, 100 Ind. 315.

In Nebraska and Nevada, it is held, sufficient to allege the grounds in the language of the statutes, and the facts constituting diligence need not be set out in the motion. Walrath v. State, 8 Neb. 88; Pinschower v. Hanks, 18 Nev. 99.

In Iowa, it is held, that what was done to produce the testimony at the trial is a matter of evidence, and may be stated in the accompanying affidavit. Woodman v. Dutton, 49 Iowa 398. But see Cohol v. Allen, 37 Iowa 449.

of the evidence in question since the trial of the cause,¹ but the ex parte affidavit of the applicant setting forth the newly discovered evidence, or stating what the new witnesses will testify to, is not sufficient.² The affidavits of the witnesses themselves, setting forth the evidence they will give, must be produced,³ or the absence of such proofs must be satisfactorily

A new trial will not be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence where there is no affidavit from the prisoner or his counsel that this evidence was unknown at the trial and when the new evidence is from a witness who was examined for the defence at the trial. Milner v. State, 30 Ga. 137. On a motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, if there is a doubt as to its being newly discovered, the court should allow the rule nisi, so as to give time for an additional affidavit. Sharman v. Morton, 13 Ga. 34.

It has been held that the affidavit of counsel alone to want of knowledge before trial is not sufficient unless it also appears that the party had no knowledge. Russell v. Oliver (Tex. 1890), 14 S. W. Rep. 264; Roziene v. Wolf, 43 Iowa 393; State v. McLaughlin, 27 Mo. 111.

See, however, Sterling v. Arnold, 54 Ga. 690, where it was held that, where the clients resided out of the county where the case was tried, and took no part in the preparation or trial of the cause, but left it all to their counsel, that the affidavit of the counsel that the evidence was newly discovered was sufficient.

In Kentucky, a party seeking a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence must not only produce the affidavit of the witness that he had not communicated the facts to him till after the trial, but must state in his own affidavit that the facts were unknown to him until after the jury retired. Bronson v. Green, 2 Duv. (Ky.) 234.

The ground of a motion for a new trial, on account of newly discovered evidence, is not sufficiently verified by an affidavit of defendant that he has been told by A, that A had been told by B, that B had heard a saying of C, which saying constitutes the newly discovered evidence. White v. Wallen, 17 Ga. 106.

An affidavit of the proposed new witness contradicting the alleged newly discovered evidence will defeat the motion for a new trial. Schultz v. Third Ave. R. Co., 47 N. Y. Super. Ct. 285. See also cases cited in the following note.

accounted for.¹ Where it is impossible or impracticable to obtain such affidavits, the affidavit of some one who has heard the statements of such witnesses,² together with a statement of their names,³ may be received in their stead. In States in which the time for filing affidavits is limited either by statute or by rule of court, they are properly disregarded, if not filed within the prescribed time;⁴ but where good reasons are given, the court may grant an extension of the time, and a consequent continuance of the hearing of the motion.⁵

(d) COUNTER AFFIDAVITS.—Counter affidavits are admissible, and may be presented on a motion for a new trial by the party

The affidavit of the witness himself is the best evidence of which the case is susceptible, and must, therefore, be produced, or its absence accounted for. Eddy v. Caldwell, 7 Minn. 225.

In Dunbar v. Hollingshead, 18 Wis. 505, the court said, "Affidavits are required as well, that the statement made may be with proper deliberation as that they may come supported by the solemn sanction of a judicial oath."

Where the affidavit of the mover states that the witness is out of the State, and that his affidavit cannot, therefore, be procured, it is a sufficient excuse. Smith v. Cushing, 18 Wis. 295. And see Helms v. Chadbourne, 48 Wis. 690. But lack of time to procure the necessary affidavits is no excuse for the want of them, when no motion was made to postpone the rule. Johnson v. Lovett, 31 Ga. 187.

2. 4 Min. Ins. 759; Eddy v. Caldwell, 7 Minn. 225.

An affidavit of a party, laying, as a ground for a new trial, that new evidence has been discovered, should be accompanied by some indifferent testimony, showing that the proof relied on can be had. Read v. Staton, 3 Hayw. (Tenn.) 164.

3. See Ewing v. McConnell, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 188; Adams v. Ashby, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 287; McCombs v. Chandler, 5 Harr. (Del.) 423; Sarah v. State,

But in Mann v. State, 34 Ga. 1, upon a motion for a new trial, on the ground of newly discovered evidence, that the applicant did not state the residence of the witness on whom he relied and whose affidavit he produced, and did not allege that he expected, or had reason to expect, the benefit of the witness's testimony at a future trial, or that the witness was within reach of process of the court, was held to be no ground for refusing to allow the motion.

But at the hearing of a motion for a new trial, it is error to refuse to allow the reading of an affidavit because it was not filed with the motion, but subsequent thereto. Werner v. Edmiston, 24 Kan. 147.

And where an affidavit was used at a hearing upon a motion for a new trial, without objection, and not filed until after the argument, held, that an objection that it should have been filed before being read to the court, was waived. Longfellow v. State, 10 Neb. 105.

The general practice probably is to file the affidavits at the time of the hearing of the motion. Thomp. on Trials, § 2760.

opposing the motion;¹ but, like affidavits in support of the motion, they are designed to enlighten but not to control the discretion of the court.²

10. Application by Petition or Complaint.—Where the application for a new-trial is not made until after the expiration of the statutory period, it is a new and independent proceeding, and must be instituted by petition or complaint, and the service of summons or notice, as in ordinary actions.³ The rules applicable to pleadings generally apply to the petition or complaint.⁴ It should be entitled as in the original case,⁵ and all persons should be made parties who were parties to the original action;⁶ and, besides the facts required to be stated in an application upon affidavits, it must show some good reason why the application was not made Upon motion for new trial, alleging the violation by opposing counsel of a verbal agreement not to try the case in the absence of the other, the motion being supported by affidavit, counter-affidavits are admissible. Davis v. Ransom, 57 Tex. 333.

Iowa Code, § 3268, does not contemplate a trial upon an application for a new trial made under its provisions, and it is not error to refuse to permit a party to answer and controvert such application. Buena Vista Co. v. Iowa Falls etc. R. Co., 55 Iowa 157.

2. Burlingame v. Cowee (R. I. 1887), 12 Atl. Rep. 234. And see Burr v. Palmer, 23 Vt. 244.

In McGavock v. Brown, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 251, the court said that there is no rule of law which will exclude cross-affidavits either in civil or criminal cases, though the practice of introducing them in civil cases ought not to be encouraged.

Extension of Time to File.—Where it appears, on a motion for a new trial, that a party has prepared counter-affidavits and served copies of them within the prescribed time, but inadvertently omitted to file them, he may file them after the expiration of the time prescribed. *Spottiswood v. Where a petition was filed in due time in a case contesting the validity of a will, and stated to be a petition for rehearing, but containing substantially the averments and prayer prescribed for a petition for a new trial, it should be received as a petition for a new trial, and defects of form may be amended. Myres v. Myres, 6 Ohio St. 221.

The fact that a cause is pending in the supreme court upon exceptions does not give that court jurisdiction to grant a new trial in the county court for causes not appearing upon the record, upon a motion for a new trial. The only proper proceeding to secure a new trial in such a case is an original one by the way of a petition under the statute. South Royalton Bank v. Colt, 31 Vt. 415.

In Vermont, if the recognizance taken for the prosecution of a petition for a new trial be defective, the petition will not, for that reason, be dismissed, but further security will be ordered. Houghton v. Slack, 10 Vt. 520.

4. Gottlieb v. Jasper, 27 Kan. 770; Blackburn v. Crowder, 110 Ind. 127. But a petition for a new trial, setting forth several grounds therefor, does not thereby state several causes of action. Gottlieb v. Jasper, 27 Kan. 770.

On a proceeding to set aside a default judgment, and for a new trial, the petition for new trial is not objectionable because it refers to the motion to set aside the default, and the affidavit supporting it, and makes them a part thereof. Wishard v. McNeil, 78 Iowa 40.

in season.¹ The testimony or its purport should be stated with such fulness as to call the attention of the court to such alleged errors as require correction,² and where the application is made upon the ground of newly discovered evidence, the issues and all the evidence in the former trial should be stated, together with the new evidence.³

1. See Burlington etc. R. Co. v. Dobson, 17 Neb. 450; Nordan v. Stough, 50 Ind. 280; Sutherland v. Hankins, 56 Ind. 343; Woodman v. Dutton, 49 Iowa 398; Axtell v. Kinnard, 12 Tex. 180.

Courts of equity will not decree a new trial at law upon a mere showing that the complainant had in reality a good cause and failed to make it out, and that on another trial he will be able to repair his injury; but it must appear that he was active and diligent, and that the judgment against him was the result of accident or fraud, and without laches or neglect on his part. Hiller v. Cotton, 48 Miss. 593.

That a motion has been made and denied is not enough, if the time for moving has not expired; for a second motion might be made on the new grounds. Bryorly v. Clark, 48 Tex. 345.

On a petition for a new trial, on the ground of misconduct of the jury, not filed for more than ten months after verdict and four months after judgment, it is not sufficient for petitioner to allege that he "could not, with reasonable diligence, have discovered or ascertained the misconduct sooner," without stating facts showing why. Burlington etc. R. Co. v. Dobson, 17 Neb. 450.

An averment in a petition to vacate a judgment, that certain glaring errors occurred at the trial, that the trial closed on the 3rd and the term of court on the 5th of the same month, and that owing to their press of business these errors were accidentally omitted by counsel from the motion for a new trial, does not disclose any "unavoidable casualty or misfortune," within the meaning of the statute. Reed v. Wilson, 13 Kan. 153.

Section 356 of Indiana Code authorizes a new trial only for such causes as would have justified the granting of a new trial during the term, had those causes, which must then have existed, been then known. Nelson v. Johnson, 18 Ind. 329; Stanley v. Peeples, 13 Ind. 232; Glidewell v. Daggy, 21 Ind. 95.

The evidence given on the trial of the cause may be made an exhibit to the complaint for a new trial, but such an exhibit performs no other office than that of setting forth the evidence, and it cannot supply any averment essential to the validity of the complaint, for all such averments must be contained in the body of the pleading. Blackburn v. Crowder, 110 Ind. 127.

A petition for a new trial under Iowa Code, § 3154, on the ground of fraud practiced by the successful party, need not allege the fraud in terms, but is sufficient if it sets out facts which amount in law to a fraud. Lafever v. Stone, 55 Iowa 49.

A petition for a new trial in respect to the specific sum decreed to the petitioner instead of alimony, on the ground

It should be verified,¹ and if defective, may be taken advantage of by demurrer.² The facts stated in it are deemed to be denied without answer,³ and process is served in the same manner as in ordinary cases.⁴

11. Incidental Matters of Procedure—(a) AMENDMENTS.—When reasonable cause is shown, a motion for a new trial may be amended by the addition of new parties and of new counts or grounds;⁵ and this, even though the time for filing the statement has passed;⁶ but additional causes should not be added in such a manner as to surprise the opposite party.⁷ So, pending the motion, the court may allow the affidavits to be amended;⁸ and a brief or statement of evidence is amendable at, or at any time before, the hearing of the motion.⁹

of the discovery of new evidence, must state under oath the names of the witnesses and what each is expected to testify, and allege that the parties have not cohabited since the trial, and that neither of them has contracted a new marriage. Merrill v. Shattuck, 55 Me. 374.

An error in the date of the entry of the decision of a motion for a new trial is a matter for correction, not for reversal. Girardey v. Bessman, 62 Ga. 654.

In Nevada, however, the provision of Civil Prac. act, to the effect that the statement on a motion for a new trial must contain the specifications of error relied upon, is imperative; and, after the time allowed by statute for amendments has passed, it is not competent for the trial court to allow the paper filed as a statement to be amended by adding thereto specifications of error which had, as claimed in the affidavit in support of the motion, been inadvertently omitted. Earles v. Gilham (Nev. 1887), 14 Pac. Rep. 586.

But an amended petition for a new trial, filed after the original petition has been dismissed, has no standing in court, either as an amendment or as a petition, since the relief it seeks is res adjudicata by the judgment on the original petition. Houston v. Kidwell, 83 Ky. 301.

When a motion for a new trial is filed within the two days after verdict, as required by a rule of court, and before decision another motion is filed on the ground of evidence discovered after the expiration of the two days, the latter will be construed as an amendment or addition to the former motion, and both grounds will be considered. *Preble v. The statement on motion for a new trial may be amended within a reasonable time before its settlement by the insertion of a specification of essential particulars. Smith v. Stockton, 73 Cal. 204.

(b) WITHDRAWAL OR ABANDONMENT OF MOTION.—The mover has a right, by motion, to withdraw his application, or to abandon it by failure to prosecute at any time,¹ and if the application is not diligently prosecuted, it will be dismissed on motion,² but the question of lack of diligence in the prosecution of the motion is one resting wholly within the discretion of the trial court.³

(c) CONTINUANCE OR POSTPONEMENT.—Where a motion for a new trial is made within the time prescribed by statute, it may be continued and disposed of, as a general rule, at a succeeding term,⁴ either by agreement of counsel,⁵ or by order of the court

But in Georgia it is held that after a brief of the testimony has been filed, on a motion for a new trial, and approved by the presiding judge, a motion to amend the same, on the affidavit of a witness whose testimony has been incorporated therein, should not be allowed. Baker v. Wright, 37 Ga. 327.

He may do this either before or after the motion for a new trial is actually made. Stoyell v. Cole, 19 Cal. 602. And the fact that the opposite party has consented to the motion will not affect his right. McReynolds v. Baltimore etc. R. Co., 106 Ill. 152.

A refusal to argue a motion for a new trial does not act as an abandonment of it, when the statement sets forth specifically the grounds of the motion, and it has been duly made and submitted. Carder v. Baxter, 28 Cal. 99.

A motion for a new trial is not necessarily abandoned by the failure of the moving party to appear, present his statement and argue his motion. State v. Central Pac. R. Co., 17 Nev. 259.

Motions for a new trial must be disposed of at the term when made, or at the next ensuing term. They cannot be kept under advisement by the circuit judge, beyond the term succeeding that at which they were made. Scarborough v. Smith, 52 Miss. 517.

But they are embraced within the terms of the Code of 1874, § 668, by which it "stands-continued, of course," if not decided before the adjournment of the court. Vicksburg v. Hennessey, 52 Miss. 178.

Where a movant for a new trial is allowed until the next term to complete a brief of evidence, but he does not present it for the approval of the judge until the second term thereafter, the motion is properly dismissed, although the hearing of the motion is regularly continued until such second term. Milner v. Burrus (Ga. 1890), 11 S. E. Rep. 1029.

It is doubtful whether such an agreement would be binding unless in writing, or entered upon the minutes of the court. American White Bronze Co. v. Clark, 123 Ind. 230.

Where a motion for a new trial stood continued to the next term by agreement of counsel, and it was so stated to the court, which did not dissent, but no record of the continuance was made by the clerk, and the motion afterwards came up for a rehearing at the same term, and, in the absence of the plaintiff's counsel, was overruled, though the plaintiff's attorney was in fault, in that he did not see that the proper entry was made upon the record, yet it would be a fraud in the defendant to insist upon an advantage gained in this way; and a continuance was therefore entered nunc pro tunc, and the motion for a new trial allowed to come regularly to a hearing. Spalding v. Meier, 40 Mo. 176.

After verdict, motion was made for a new trial, and the action continued for advisement. Subsequently, at a on cause shown.¹ In some of the States, however, the rule is that the motion must be determined at the term in which it was made,² but in such States a party cannot be prejudiced by a continuance on motion of the court without his application.³ Where a continuance is granted, an order should be simultaneously made vacating or suspending the judgment.⁴

time when the court was not in session, an entry was made that the motion was overruled, and judgment entered upon the verdict. At a subsequent term, the court properly regarded this entry as a nullity, decided the motion and entered judgment on the verdict. Sheppard v. Wilson, 6 How. (U. S.) 260.

A motion for a new trial having been made during the term at which the case was tried, and an order passed that the motion be heard in vacation, the hearing may, by order of the presiding judge, be postponed from time to time, and the brief of evidence be approved at final hearing. Williams v. Central R., 77 Ga. 612.

Where a motion for a new trial is ordered in term to be heard at chambers on a certain day, and on such day the hearing is continued to the first day of an adjourned term of the court, the motion may be heard at any time during such adjourned term without any further continuance. Higginbotham v. Campbell (Ga. 1890), 11 S. E. Rep. 1027.

If a motion for a new trial is made at the trial term, and the court adjourn without disposing of the motion, the refusal of the judge, at the next term, to hear the motion, is not ground of reversal. The remedy is by mandamus. Bridges v. Miller, 3 Ala. 746.

A motion for a new trial made in term cannot be heard in vacation over the objection of either party, unless an order is taken for that purpose, or it is so directed in the rule nisi. Rust v. McLaren, 54 Ga. 111; Ferrill v. Marks, 76 Ga. 21.

Sufficient Cause.—It is no error to refuse to postpone a motion for a new trial for the purpose of procuring a witness, respecting the purport of whose testimony there was a misunderstanding between the attorneys of the parties. Miller v. Koger, 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 231.

But that some instructions have been lost is ground for suspending a motion for a new trial, until they can be found, or for granting it. Visher v. Webster, 13 Cal. 58.

If not so disposed of it will be regarded as denied or refused to be entertained. Doddridge v. Gains, 1 McArthur (D. C.) 335; Rupp v. Hand (Ariz. 1890), 24 Pac. Rep. 257.

In Mississippi, a circuit judge is authorized to take under advisement motions for new trials in vacation; and where one does so in a case, and returns his opinion in the manner and time prescribed by the statute, it is error for the judge sitting at the next term to strike the case from the docket. McClure v. Houston, 10 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 392.

Where, after verdict for plaintiff, defendant filed motions for a new trial and for judgment non obstante verdicto. The motions, together with a motion by plaintiff for judgment on the verdict, were afterwards argued, and a judgment non obstante rendered, without disposing of the other motions, but upon appeal such judgment was reversed, the motion for a new trial should be considered as still pending after remand, and could then be granted. Fisk v. Henarie, 14 Oreg. 29.

4. Doggett v. Jordan, 4 Fla. 121.

At common law the judgment was not entered or signed until after the motion for a new trial had been heard and determined. Under California

13. The Hearing.—On the hearing of the motion the counsel for the moving party opens the argument, the opposite counsel answers, and the counsel for the mover has the reply: one counsel only to be heard on each side,¹ and the court should be furnished with copies of the motion papers.² The parties are entitled to have the motion determined upon its merits,³ and the court may, in its discretion, hear affidavits for and against the truth of matters with respect to which the new trial is asked,⁴ but where the counsel for the moving party fails to appear when the motion is called in its regular order, the court may, nevertheless, proceed to dispose of the motion.⁵ Objections must be made at the hearing of the motion to any omission or irregularity in the proceedings prelim-practice the motion proceeds independent of the judgment, mainly upon a record of its own, and may be made before or after the entry of judgment or making up of the roll, and need not be made at the term at which the judgment was entered, and may likewise be made out of term. Spanagel v. Dellinger, 34 Cal. 476.

In Connecticut, a motion was made in court for a new trial at the same term the first trial was had, and was continued until the next term, that notice might be given, but the court refused to stay execution meanwhile. Sholes v. Stoddard, Kirby (Conn.) 163.

Notice of argument on a rule to show cause why a verdict should not be set aside, must be filed with the clerk in New Jersey. Earl v. Burr, 12 N. J. L. 321.

Although in strict practice a rule nisi for a new trial seems requisite, yet it need not be separate from the motion, nor be signed by the judge, if the judge on hearing the motion can and will recognize that rule which has been signed by counsel. More especially is this so where opposing counsel has also recognized it in his acknowledgment of service. If such irregular rule has not been entered on the minutes, it may, by order of the judge, be entered nunc pro tunc. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Usry, 82 Ga. 54.

2. Gardner v. Gardner, 2 Gray (Mass.) 434.

On the motion for a new trial, the granting of a rule nisi is presumptive of approval of the brief or the evidence, and a direct approval may be made at the hearing, though a different judge is presiding. Worsham v. Murchison, 66 Ga. 715.

3. Emery v. Emery, 54 Iowa 106; Cook v. Allen, 5 Hun (N. Y.) 561.

A rule of court, which requires that a party applying for a new trial shall make and argue the motion on the Saturday after the trial, is unconstitutional. Pawley v. M'Gimpsey, 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 502.

The court may dispose of the motion, although informed of an agreement between counsel to postpone the hearing until some time in vacation. Ford v. Holmes, 61 Ga. 419.

An order denying a motion for a new trial is not void because made in the absence of one attorney of record, where another was present, and the record shows no lack of authority to appeal on his part. Romine v. Cralle, 80 Cal. 626.

In criminal cases, however, a motion by the accused for a new trial should not be acted upon in his absence, but, if then overruled, may be reconsidered in his presence. Berkley v. State, 4 Tex. App. 122. And see Krautz v. State, 4 Tex. App. 534; Sweat v. State, 4 Tex. App. 617.

Where the defendant was convicted of murder in the second degree, and his attorneys, appointed by the court, filed a motion for a new trial, but on the next day were arrested by order of the court for an alleged contempt, and on a subsequent day were brought into court by the sheriff, and required by the court to argue the motion, it was held to be such a wanton trifling with inary to it.¹ (See also tit. MOTIONS; 15 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law 887.)

(a) REARGUMENT.—It is within the discretion of the court whether to receive and consider additional affidavits after the hearing is closed and the decision announced;² but where a long time has elapsed, and the position of the parties has changed, and new rights have accrued, a reargument must be refused.³ (See also tit. MOTIONS; subtit. RENEWAL OF MOTIONS, and REHEARING OR REARGUING MOTIONS, 15 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law 919, 924.)

(b) ORAL TESTIMONY ON HEARING.—While motions for a new trial are usually heard on affidavits, or on the record of the trial, or both, it is within the sound judicial discretion of the court to admit oral evidence on the questions at issue;⁴ and on an application, made after the expiration of the statutory time to the rights of the defendant as to require a new trial, irrespective of the merits of the case. Robertson v. State, 38 Tex. 187.

Where a motion for the reargument of a rule for a new trial is made on the same day on which the rule is discharged, it continues the rule, and the judgment cannot be entered on the verdict. Van Vliet v. Conrad, 95 Pa. St. 494.

When a motion was denied, on the ground that the question was res adjudicata, and afterwards the court of appeals reversed so much of the judgment as determined any question involved in the motion, the order denying the new trial, and the judgment entered thereon, should be set aside, and a reargument allowed. Gilchrist v. Comfort, 26 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 394.

3. See Rebhum v. Swartwout, 3 N. Y. Supp. 419.

But the entry of a final order granting a motion for a new trial on the minutes does not prevent the judge from listening upon the same papers to a rehearing on application of the defeated party, and making an order vacating the former final order, and deciding the motion the other way by denying it. Herzig v. Metzger, 62 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 355.

4. Gano v. Wells, 36 Kan. 688. And see Gottlieb v. Jasper, 27 Kan. 770; State v. Lloyd, 4 Cranch (C. C.) 472.

On a motion for a new trial on a case made, the court will receive documentary evidence which could not have been controverted at the trial to defeat the motion. Otherwise, where the motion is founded on a bill of exceptions. Hart v. Coltram, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 14.

Under rule twenty-one of the Massachusetts superior court, that "the court will not hear any motion grounded on facts, unless the facts are verified by affidavit, or are apparent from the record and from the papers on file in the case, or are agreed and stated in writing, signed by the parties or their attorneys," it is within the discretion of a single justice, on a motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, to admit oral evidence. Spaulding v. Knight, 118 Mass. 528.

In Texas there is no authority under which, after trial and judgment, the party moving for a new trial may propound, in support of his motion, interrogatories to the adverse party. A failure to answer such interrogatories cannot, therefore, be construed as an admission. Cleveland v. Sims, 69 Tex. 153. And it is irregular for the judge, in disposing of a motion for new trial, to examine a bailiff, on oath or otherwise, out of the presence of the parties or their counsel, with a view to aiding the judicial mind on a question of fact embraced in the motion. City Bank v. Kent, 57 Ga. 283.

When the judge who tried a cause has died, or is out of office, and a motion is made for a new trial, the judge to whom the application is made is required by the rules of court to ascertain the facts by the best means at his command. But this does not require move, it being an independent proceeding, both the mover and the contestant should introduce their evidence orally before the court;¹ but as it is not a trial of the issues of the action, neither party has a right to a trial by jury.²

13. Decision of the Motion.—A new trial cannot be granted on questions not raised by the pleadings,³ and the sufficiency of the pleadings and the jurisdiction of the court cannot be considered;⁴ the general rule being that such rulings as were made upon the trial, and then duly excepted to only, can be again considered by court.⁵ But if the question is one which could not have been

him to re-examine the witnesses, or to hear oral testimony as to what transpired at the trial. The party moving should present, in writing, a brief of the testimony and the history of the trial properly verified. McKendree v. Sikes, 40 Ga. 189.

On petition for a new trial filed under Iowa Code, § 3155, the court may, without jury, "first try and decide upon the grounds to vacate or modify the judgment." Carpenter v. Brown, 50 Iowa 451.

Testimony, by way of ex parte affidavits, to meet the testimony taken in support of a petition for a new trial, has always been regarded in Vermont as loose and unsatisfactory, and as not coming within any known rule of practice. Yet previous to the promulgation of the rule of court adopted in 1851, such testimony has been always received—giving to the other party an election to have his case continued, to rebut the evidence. Burr v. Palmer, 23 Vt. 244.

2. Houston v. Bruner, 59 Ind. 25.

3. Bullis v. Cheadle, 36 Minn. 164; Patent Brick Co. v. Moore, 75 Cal. 205.

Where there is not sufficient ground to set aside a verdict and grant a new trial, generally, it is error to set it aside to enable the defendant to withdraw his pleas and confess judgment for the purpose of proceeding in equity for relief against the judgment. Harnsbarger v. Kinney, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 287.

It may be shown that a certain question only was submitted to the jury. Chaffee v. Sprague, 15 R. I. 135.

4. State v. Cady, 47 Conn. 44.

The question whether an action is properly brought cannot be made on a motion for a new trial. Crowley v. Pendleton, 46 Conn. 62.

In New York, a judge has no authority to entertain a motion for a new trial on his minutes, when the complaint is dismissed upon the plaintiff's own showing. Dusenbury v. Dusenbury, 61 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 432. And see Healey v. Twenty-third Street R. Co., 11 Daly (N. Y.) 281.

Thus, error of law, occurring at the trial, is no ground for a new trial, unless excepted to by the party making the application. Darrance v. Preston, 18 Iowa 396; *Patent Brick Co. v. A defendant, raising a question upon the legal character of evidence for the first time on motion for a new trial, presents no point of law for adjudication, but only appeals to the discretion of the court for a favor; its refusal is not an error of law. Cheatham v. Roberts, 23 Ark. 651.

obviated, had it been raised at the trial¹, or if justice requires it,² it may be considered. In some of the States the rule has been adopted that an error, apparent on the record, cannot be considered on a motion for a new trial;³ and in some, making the motion is regarded as a waiver of such errors.⁴ The court will not re-examine a ruling made against the contestant of the motion, unless it is such that, when correctly determined, it would render a new trial useless.⁵ Where the motion is to set aside the verdict of a

Upon a motion for a new trial on the evidence, the fact that the party did not call the attention of the court to his claim that the weight of the evidence as a matter of law called for a verdict in his favor is sufficient cause for denying the motion. Pollock v. Brennan, 39 N. Y. Super. Ct. 477.

Where it appears from the statement of the case that there were no exceptions taken during the trial to any act of the court, the court is justified in refusing a new trial on the ground that the decision is against the law. Patent Brick Co. v. Moore, 75 Cal. 205.

Where, in case of a joint judgment against two defendants for breach of warranty of title in a deed, the evidence was insufficient as to one who, however, made no motion for a new trial, the judgment will not be disturbed. Real v. Hollister, 17 Neb. 661.

Under the New York Code, where the justice who tried a cause grants an order, sending the motion for a new trial, in the first instance, to be heard at the general term, the court here has power to decide questions of law as well as of fact. Fellows v. Emperor, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 92.

Where there has been a trial by jury without disposing of a general demurrer, which was overlooked, and a new trial granted, the court may then pass upon and decide the demurrer. Portis v. Cole, 11 Tex. 157.

Where a verdict, in an action on a contract, is in accordance with justice and the law of the State, a new trial will not be granted to give the party the benefit of the law of another State, not insisted on at the trial, though the contract was made and the parties resided in that State. Brush v. Scribner, 11 Conn. 388.

In a Connecticut case it has been held that a new trial will be granted in order to prevent inconsistency in the decision of the law on the same point. Edwards v. Lambert, 2 Root (Conn.) 430.

In Vermont, questions of law raised and decided on exceptions, by the supreme court, cannot be again presented on a motion for a new trial. M'Connell v. Strong, 11 Vt. 280; Beardsley v. Gordon, 3 Vt. 324.

The court trying the cause ought not to grant a new trial for the causes embraced by a bill of exceptions, unless the party submitting a motion distinctly waives the exception. West v. Cunningham, 9 Port. (Ala.) 104.

4. Minor v. Mead, 3 Conn. 289.

A motion was made to dismiss a suit, and denied, and a bill of exceptions taken pendente lite, the trial resulted in a mistrial, and at a second trial, before another judge, the motion was renewed. jury, all the testimony and all inferences from it, which might be drawn by a jury without error, that tend to sustain the verdict, must be accepted,¹ and where the error, or irregularity complained of is one which might have been prevented or obviated by the use of reasonable diligence, the motion will be denied.² Where the motion is made before a judge other than the trial judge, due allowance should be made for the superior advantages of the presiding judge;³ and the court should examine all grounds upon Consequence of Verdict.—The court, on motion for a new trial, do not enquire into the consequence of the verdict as relating to costs. Hagar v. Weston, 7 Mass. 110.

Veracity of Witnesses.—In case of a conflict in the affidavits on motion for a new trial, on the ground of misconduct of jurors, it is the duty of the court below to determine the question of veracity, and that its action in this respect would not, on the showing made, be disturbed. *State v. In passing upon the motion for a new trial, on the ground of a verdict against evidence, the court must consider all the evidence submitted to the jury, although part of it was improperly admitted. McCloud v. O'Neill, 16 Cal. 392.

On a motion for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, the court will not admit evidence tending to prove particular facts to be different from what they appeared at the trial. Mott v. Pettit, 1 N. J. L. 298. But record evidence of a fact improperly proved at a trial may be given in opposition to a motion for a new trial. Ritchie v. Putnam, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 524.

Amendment on Motion.—A verdict for plaintiffs, in a case in which one of them had no interest, there being no allegation or proof of an assignment to him by the others, cannot be sustained without an amendment, and this can only be had on motion at the trial or afterward. The court will not order the amendment on the argument for a new trial. Travis v. Tobias, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 333.

Competent Evidence Excluded.—In considering a ruling of the court below, setting aside a verdict, as against the evidence, the supreme court will look only at the evidence before the jury, and not at competent evidence offered and erroneously excluded. Tegarden v. Carpenter, 36 Miss. 404. And see Pierce v. Jackson, 21 Cal. 636; McCloud v. O'Neill, 16 Cal. 392.

Motion at General Term.—Where, after verdict, a motion for a new trial on exceptions is ordered to be heard at the general term in the first instance, the case cannot be reviewed on the ground that the verdict is against the weight of evidence. Hoxie v. Greene, 37 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 97.

2. See Sacia v. O'Connor, 79 N. Y. 260; Clark v. Blount, 3 Hawks (N. Car.) 208.

Where the grounds of a motion for a new trial are misconduct of the prevailing party, or accident or surprise which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against, and the facts, as claimed, are that the prevailing party testified incorrectly as to the contents of a letter, it is not error to overrule the motion when it does not appear that the prevailing party was guilty of wilful false swearing, nor that the losing party had used due diligence to have and produce the letter at the trial. Boyd v. Sanford, 14 Kan. 280.

Where it appears that the accused had sufficient time to have filed a motion containing all his grounds for a new trial, the refusal of the court below to permit additional grounds to be added on the trial of the motion, and to receive evidence in support of them, is not a sufficient ground for reversing the judgment. State v. Nolan, 13 La. An. 276.

3. Reynolds v. Reynolds, 44 Minn. 132.

Where, by a change in the lines of a district, a cause was transferred from one court to another pending a motion for a new trial, it is error in the new judge to refuse the motion, on the ground that he had not heard the cause. If in doubt as to the propriety of a new trial, which the motion is made,¹ and if they are not borne out by the facts of the case, the new trial should be denied.² A new trial should not be granted where the cause of action is trifling, and the suit is merely for the recovery of costs and for the purpose of vexation.³ And, as a general rule, where the defence set up is unconscionable, and the verdict has been found according to the justice, conscience and equity of the case, a verdict for the plaintiff will not be disturbed.⁴ (See also, ante, subtit. III, DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT IN GRANTING OR REFUSING NEW TRIAL.)

(a) INCIDENTAL RELIEF.—On granting a motion for a new trial, the court may also, in its discretion, give leave to amend the pleadings by adding new counts or otherwise, or grant such other incidental relief as the parties may appear to be entitled to, or as will best promote justice between the parties.⁵

he should have granted it. Woodfolk v. Tate, 25 Mo. 597.

2. Maynard v. Lawrence, 26 Ga. 411; Cannon v. Bullock, 26 Ga. 431.

But a motion for a new trial is not always necessarily to be decided on the grounds made by the party bringing up the case. See Ingraham v. South Carolina Ins. Co., 1 Treadw. Const. (S. Car.) 707; Cowan v. Green, 3 Murph. (N. Car.) 569.

Upon a motion for a new trial, the court may look into the evidence embodied in the statement, to ascertain whether the findings cover the material matters presented for consideration. Riley v. Heisch, 18 Cal. 198.

Uncertainty as to Facts.—Where the facts of a case are so meagre and uncertain that the supreme court cannot in justice to the parties pass upon the question raised in the pleadings, a new trial will be granted. Jones v. Shaw, 84 N. Car. 218.

Where the case below was not tried on its merits, by reason of uncertainty as to the proper mode of procedure, a new trial was granted, although the general decision below was approved, and the only error might have been remedied by a modification of the judgment. Speyer v. Ihmels, 21 Cal. 280. And see Woodfolk v. Tate, 25 Mo. 597.

An erroneous judgment in favor of the plaintiff carrying costs will not be set aside and a new trial ordered if the plaintiff will elect to discontinue without costs. Flemming v. Gilbert, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 528.

In action for penalties a new trial will not be granted on the ground that the verdict is against the weight of evidence when such verdict is in favor of the defendant. East River Bank v. Hoyt, 22 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 478.

Where the statement specifies many alleged errors, to the most of which no objection had been made or exception taken at the trial, and there is no merit in the rest, but does not contain any specifications of insufficiency of the evidence, or the bill of particulars, or the charge of the court, the motion is properly overruled. Paris v. Raynor, 76 Cal. 647.

Disposed of Before Appeal.—A motion for a new trial must be disposed of before the case can be settled for an appeal. Sinclair v. Washington etc. R. Co., 4 MacArthur (D. C.) 13.

5. Bradley v. Long, 2 Strobb. (S. Car.) 160.

Where, on a motion for a new trial by one of the defendants, it appeared, as a matter of law that no recovery could be had against such defendant, the verdict should be set aside, and a nonsuit directed as to such defendant. Fitzgerald v. Quann, 62 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 331; s. c., 10 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 28.

(b) THE IMPOSITION OF TERMS.—A court to which an application for a new trial is made has power to impose terms upon the party applying for it as a condition of granting it, or upon the opposite party as a condition of refusing it.¹ Where it is sought upon the ground of surprise, newly discovered evidence or other ground, that impliedly concedes that the trial already had was without error, and the opposing party without fault, the payment of the costs of the former trial is usually required as a condition of granting a new one.² The same terms are usually imposed where the motion is made upon the ground that the verdict is against evidence, or against the weight of evidence.³ But, as a

Neither erroneous rulings by a judge on a first trial of an indictment, nor unfavorable comments on the evidence, made in passing sentence, show prejudice in such sense as to require the supreme court, on granting a new trial, to direct a removal of the cause on the ground of prejudice. State v. Bohan, 19 Kan. 28.

In Iowa, the question of costs, on granting new trial, is in the discretion of the court. Wright v. Antrim, 1 Morr. (Iowa) 258.

If the court, in granting new trials, subject the party applying to more than the costs for that term, the grounds for so doing ought to be stated. Logan v. Gibbs, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 19.

Where a defendant obtained a new trial on payment of costs, and recovered judgment as in case of nonsuit, he was not entitled to costs on the application for a new trial. Slocum v. Lansing, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 259.

A case having been reversed and remanded, with an unconditional mandate for a new trial, it is clearly erroneous to give judgment against the party to whom it was granted, for the costs of the former trial. Garrison v. Singleton, 5 Dana (Ky.) 160.

2. See Golden v. Snellen, 54 Ind. 282; Rountree v. Talbot, 89 Ill. 246; Sitzke, 121 Ill. 30; Bonyngie v. Waterbury, 12 Hun (N. Y.) 534; Tyler v. Hoornbeck, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 197; Chamberlain v. Lindsay, 1 Hun (N. Y.) 231; Comstock

v. Dye, 13 Hun (N. Y.) 113; Siebrecht v. Webb, 47 N. Y. Super. Ct. 557; Bailey v. Park, 5 Hun (N. Y.) 41; Hoveley v. Colerick, 3 How. Pr., N. S. (N. Y.) 169; s. c., 9 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y.) 43; People v. Genesee Circuit Judge, 37 Mich. 281; Haseltine v. Metcalf, 66 Wis. 209.

New Trial as a Matter of Right.—The payment or tender of all the costs of the former trial is a peremptory and almost a universal condition of a motion for a new trial as a matter of right. Cook Co. v. Calumet & C. Canal & Dock Co. (Ill., 1888), 19 N. E. Rep. 46; Rountree v. Talbot, 89 Ill. 246; Goulden v. Snellen, 54 Ind. 282; Montgomery v. Hays, 44 Ind. 433; Crews v. Ross, 44 Ind. 481; People v. Genesee Circuit Judge, 37 Mich. 281; Haseltine v. Metcalf, 66 Wis. 209; Setzke v. Setzke, 121 Ill. 30. And an order granting a new trial may be vacated at a succeeding term if the costs are not paid. Setzke v. Setzke, 121 Ill. 30.

When a new trial has been granted as a matter of right, in a real action, and a second trial has been had, the supreme court will presume, where the record is silent on the subject, that the costs were paid before the granting of the new trial. Vanduyne v. Hepner, 45 Ind. 589.

A party in ejectment who petitions for vacation of a judgment and for a new trial, but who, for more than a year after the close of the term at which it was rendered, has failed to pay the costs, must show due diligence to sustain his excuse therefor, that the clerk had not computed the amount because of absence of the files in the hands of some unknown person. Aholtz v. Durfee, 21 Ill. App. 144.

3. Buck v. Webb, 11 N. Y. Supp. 617; Ward v. Woodburn, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 346; North v. Sargeant, 14 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 223; East River Bank v. Hoyt.

general rule, a party injured by an erroneous ruling, or instruction of the court is entitled to a new trial, leaving the costs to abide the event.¹ The practice most prevalent is to regard the requirement to pay costs by a party applying for a new trial as a condition precedent,² but the validity of the order is not conditional upon such payment; the order is absolute, and the collection of the costs may be enforced by execution;³ and nothing

On setting aside a report of a referee, on an appeal from a judgment entered thereon, or the verdict of a jury on an appeal from an order denying a new trial, in cases in which they are set aside as being clearly and palpably contrary to evidence, the party obtaining a new trial should not be required to pay more, in the first instance, than the costs of the former trial, and the costs of the appeal should be ordered to be costs in the cause and abide the event. Kennedy v. Harlem R. Co., 3 Duer (N. Y.) 659.

1. Fisher v. Bridges, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 518; Brown v. Bradshaw, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 199; Goodyear v. Ogden, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 104; Pennell v. Wilson, 2 Abb. Pr., N. S. (N. Y.) 466; *Wright v. Where a new trial has been granted to plaintiff for misconduct of a referee, partly caused by defendant, on condition that plaintiff shall pay the costs of the reference if finally successful, the condition will be stricken out as unreasonable. Clark v. Eldred, 7 N. Y. Supp. 95.

If the judgment awarding a new trial directs the payment of costs of the first trial, without saying that the costs shall be paid before the new trial is had, it will nevertheless be considered a precedent condition. Rixey v. Ward, 3 Rand. (Va.) 52.

In an action to quiet title, a party may have one new trial without showing cause, upon the payment of all costs and of the damages, if the court so direct; but the payment of costs is a condition precedent to a new trial, and the court has no power to order that they shall abide the event of the suit. Zimmerman v. Marchland, 23 Ind. 474.

But, in North Carolina, in Rogers v. Cherry, 7 Jones L. (N. Car.) 539, it was held where a judge, in the court below, made the following order: "Verdict set aside and new trial granted on paying the costs of this court," that paying the costs was not a condition precedent to the new trial, but that the failure of the court to revoke the order during the term and to give judgment on the verdict, gave a new trial irrevocably.

Costs, generally, mean the costs of the former trial. Carbon v. Stout, 7 Bush (Ky.) 609.

3. Heffner v. Scranton, 27 Ohio St. 579; Ex parte Beavers, 34 Ala. 71; Johnson v. Taylor, 3 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 92; Gaines v. Dailey, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 478.

The Texas statute provides that new trials may be granted "on such terms and conditions as the court shall direct." An order granting a new trial directed payment of witness fees "as a condition upon which" the new trial was granted. It was held, that the payment of the fees was the "terms" on which the order was made, and not a condition on performance of which it should take effect. Fenn v. Gulf etc. R. Co., 76 Tex. 380.

Where a new trial was granted, on condition of the payment of all costs, on or before the first day of the next term, the order being conditional, it is null and void, and the first judgment remains in full force and effect. Secrest

but absolute payment will suffice.¹ Taking an appeal or bringing a writ of error is a waiver of the order and a refusal to accept the terms.² In States in which the right to a new trial is considered as conditional, subject to the payment of the costs, they must be paid within the prescribed time, or, if no time is prescribed, within a reasonable time.³ Other terms and conditions may be imposed besides those relative to costs—thus, the court may impose upon the successful party the alternative of accepting a reduced amount, or of submitting to a new trial;⁴ or it may grant the new Defendant may enter rule granted to plaintiff for new trial, if plaintiff delays. Gale v. Hoysradt, 3 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 47.

1. Screws v. Upshaw, 34 Ala. 496.

The time of payment is usually fixed either by the order or by statute. See Myers v. Lummins, 80 Ky. 456; Ex parte Dillard, 68 Ala. 594; Garman v. McFarland, 13 Tex. 237. In case of the failure to pay within such time a subsequent payment will not revive the right to the new trial. Ex parte Dillard, 68 Ala. 594. But the time of payment may be enlarged or extended. Smith v. Grover, 74 Wis. 171.

But where the district court granted a plaintiff's motion for a new trial, upon the condition that he should pay the cost of the action within thirty days, which he failed to do, without any sufficient reason for his failure, it is error for the court to allow him further time in which to pay the costs. Adams Express Co. v. Gregg, 23 Kan. 376.

2. Stephens v. Broadnax, 5 Ala. 258; Edwards v. Lewis, 18 Ala. 494.

If the party in whose favor a new trial is granted upon the payment of costs is unwilling to accept the terms imposed, he should have an entry to that effect made on the minutes, or have the order annulled. Incorporating an exception to the grant of the new trial in the bill of exceptions is not a rejection of the terms imposed, but indicative rather of an intention to rely on the exception; and that failing, to comply with the order and claim the new trial under it. Tannenbaum v. Tankersly, 52 Ala. 489.

Waiver of Payment.—When the party who obtained the order paid a portion of the costs in time, but not all, but the other party, supposing that the costs had been fully paid, consented to a continuance, and also issued a subpoena for the second trial, these acts were not a waiver of the right to object to the nonpayment. Watts v. Green, 30 Ind. 98. And see Falls v. Hawthorn, Ind. 444.

But in New Jersey it is held that where a new trial has been granted to the plaintiff on the payment of costs, it is error for the court, at the next term, to non pros. the plaintiff because the costs have not been paid, and enter up judgment for the defendant on the verdict which has been set aside. Gilliland v. Rappleyea, 15 N. J. L. 139.

Gilienthal*, 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 224; Pendleton St. R. Co. v. Rahmann, 22 Ohio St. 446; Laney v. Bradford, 4 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 1; Holmes v. Misroon, 1 Treadw. Const. (S. Car.) 21. But see, to the contrary, Brown v. Morris, 3 Bush (Ky.) 51. And in Hallet v. Cotton, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 11. And in Shutter v. Hallett, Col. & C. Cas. (N. Y.) 330, it was held that the court would not compel the defendant to bring the amount of the verdict into court.

Where, pending defendant's motion for a new trial in an action of tort for personal injuries, plaintiff voluntarily writes off enough of the damages to bring them within the proofs, it is proper to refuse a new trial. Central R. Co. v. Crosby, 74 Ga. 737; Williams v. Baltimore etc. R. Co., 9 W. Va. 33.

But where the court charged the jury that it could not find more than nominal damages, and the jury found substantial damages, it was held that the court could not order judgment for a nominal sum, unless plaintiff should elect to take a new trial, and then grant a new trial on his election. Morlan v. Russell, 71 Iowa 214.

trial on condition that it be confined to a single issue,¹ or refuse it on condition of the release of one of several defendants.² But it has no power to require the new trial to be had either wholly or in part on the evidence given on the previous trial,³ the question apparently turning upon the reasonableness of the condition.⁴ After conditions which are imposed are complied with, the court cannot revoke the order imposing them.⁵

14. The Order.—The order of the court on the hearing of a motion for a new trial is final, and cannot be set aside on motion unless it was inadvertently made,⁶ and it should furnish a basis

On setting aside an inquest taken at the circuit, the Supreme Court of New York will not, in addition to the usual terms of relief, impose the condition that the defendant shall abandon the defence of usury, or the statute of limitations, if either of such defences has been interposed. Allen v. Mapes, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 633.

The Missouri statute, providing that a circuit court may, after final judgment, grant a new trial "on such terms as may be just," does not authorize that court to annex to an order granting to the defendant a new trial, a condition that he give bond for the payment of any judgment afterwards rendered against him in the cause. Dewey v. Leonhardt, 37 Mo. App. 517.

Time to Comply.—Where a judge ordered a new trial, unless upon renunciation by respondent of all title to the property in controversy within a certain time, and during that time the counsel of respondent filed such renunciation on behalf of his client, upon an order holding the renunciation bad, counsel should be allowed additional time in which to secure the personal renunciation of his client. *Hill v. In a case in the court of common pleas, in which, after verdict and before judgment, a motion was made for a new trial, the following minutes were made at different terms on the clerk's docket: "Verdict set aside and new trial granted," and "Judgment on the verdict." The court, at a subsequent term, on being satisfied by parol evidence that these minutes were erroneous and made by mistake, may cause them to be erased, and enter judgment on the verdict. Fay v. Wenzell, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 315.

Where a motion for a new trial has been made and refused, it is proper to refuse to entertain a similar motion afterwards made at the same term. Wimpy v. Gaskill, 76 Ga. 41.

How Attacked.—Where the jurisdiction over the subject matter and person is complete, an order erroneously granting a new trial is not void, but only voidable, and it cannot be attacked except by motion to set aside, or an appeal. State v. Templin, 122 Ind. 235.

Notice of Decision.—One does not waive his right to the statutory written notice of the decision by being in court when the decision is announced, and by requesting the adverse party to make the cost as light as possible in entering judgment. State v. Murphy, 19 Nev. 89. But an appearance will be considered a waiver of notice. Barr v. White, 2 Port. (Ala.) 342.

upon which to determine the rights of the parties in subsequent trials.¹

(a) ITS EFFECT.—An order granting a new trial, as a general rule, vacates a former judgment without any special order to set it aside,² and sweeps away the verdict and leaves the case as though no trial had been had.³ But where the new trial is granted conditionally, the judgment is not absolutely vacated until the conditions are performed;⁴ and that the prevailing party has, with-

Failure to give notice during the term, as required by the Indiana revised statutes providing that the party obtaining a new trial shall give the opposite party ten days' notice thereof before the term next succeeding the granting of the application, does not authorize the court to set aside the previous order granting a new trial; that provision being intended only to prevent the bringing of the case on for trial at the same term at which the new trial is granted. *Stanley v. An appeal cannot be taken from a judgment after a motion for a new trial has been granted. Kower v. Gluck, 33 Cal. 407.

Where the record of a judgment in the circuit court has been sent to the supreme court, and the defendant in error has there entered his appearance, and the judgment has been reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial, the defendant in error cannot object that the first judgment is in force and unreversed, because a writ of error was not sued out. Evans v. Eaton, 3 Wash. (Va.) 443.

A new trial was ordered, the new trial had and judgment rendered. Afterwards, the judgment ordering a new trial was reversed. Held, that the judgment on the new trial was thereby vacated, and that the successful party could have no fruit thereof. Bigby v. Powell, 15 Ga. 91.

Where a case has been tried and a verdict returned for the plaintiff, which has not been set aside, and then there has been another trial and a verdict for the defendant, the court will not set aside the second verdict and render judgment on the first, if the motion for judgment is not made until after the second verdict is returned. Knowles v. Dow, 22 N. H. 387.

But where a new trial is improperly ordered, and the second verdict is set aside, judgment should be entered on the first verdict. Brevard v. Graham, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 177.

Conditional Verdict.—Where a conditional verdict is rendered in favor of the plaintiff, a rule for a new trial obtained by him will postpone the performance of the condition, the payment of money, for example, until the rule is disposed of. Jones v. Backus, 114 Pa. St. 120.

In Criminal Cases.—A remittitur ordering a new trial need not expressly set aside the verdict and judgment. State v. Stephens, 13 S. Car. 285.

out notice of the intention to apply for a new trial, disposed of the subject matter of the suit is no ground for vacating the order granting a new trial.¹

(1) Where Whole Case Is Opened.—Where all the issues are essential and each touches the merits of the controversy, the order granting a new trial must be general, reopening all questions formerly controverted, or which can be controverted,² and in the absence of any showing to the contrary a new trial will be presumed to have been awarded on the merits reopening the whole case.³

(2) When Part Only Is Opened.—Where, upon the first trial, all the material issues were correctly found, and the error does not touch the merits, a partial new trial to correct that error may be

This applies equally to cases where the facts are to be passed on by the judge instead of a jury. Jones v. Swepson, 94 N. Car. 700. And a new trial in ejectment does not differ in this respect from any other, though under a judgment entered on a verdict on the first trial, the plaintiff has obtained restitution. Donahue v. Klassen, 22 Mich. 252.

Plaintiff's petition contained two counts. He recovered on each, and damages were separately assessed by the verdict. Judgment, pursuant to statute, was rendered for the aggregate amount. On appeal the judgment was reversed for error on the trial of the issues made by the first count, and the cause was remanded for further proceedings. It was held that defendant was entitled to a new trial on both counts. Needles v. Burke, 27 Mo. App. 211.

Criminal Cases.—When a person indicted for murder in the first degree, on the trial was found guilty of murder in the second degree, the judgment was reversed on appeal by the defendant; the cause was again tried, resulting in a verdict of guilty of manslaughter, and the defendant again, at his request, was granted a new trial; he took the new trial as to the whole cause, and might be tried again for the higher grades of the crime, of which he was not convicted, as well as for the lower grades, of which he was convicted. Ex parte Bradley, 48 Ind. 548; State v. Behimer, 20 Ohio St. 572. To the contrary State v. Martin, 30 Wis. 216.

Steps Taken for Purpose of First Trial.—Defendant, upon a trial, demurred to the evidence, judgment was rendered against him, and the judgment was reversed by the appellate court. Held, that upon a retrial, defendant was entitled to contest the evidence. The demurrer was tendered for the occasion of the first trial only. Mitchell v. Bannon, 10 Ill. App. 340.

Where the court refused a new trial upon plaintiff's stipulating to take judgment on one only of his two causes of action, and plaintiff so stipulated, judgment was entered, defendant appealed, and the appellate court reversed the judgment and ordered a new trial, plaintiff can try the issues raised on each cause of action. Crim v. Starkweather, 32 Hun (N. Y.) 350. And see Hays v. Hynds, 28 Ind. 531.

Reversal on Appeal.—The same rule applies to a case sent back for new trial upon reversal on appeal. Ex parte Bradley, 48 Ind. 548.

An ex officio order for a new trial, not being restricted in its terms to the parties defendants who filed the motion for a new trial, will be held to have opened the case as to all the defendants, and the subsequent signing of the judgment as to one of the defendants who did not join in the motion was without effect, and no execution could issue awarded,¹ and where an issue of fact has been awarded and tried, a new trial may be granted either as to the facts, or as to the conclusions of the court upon the facts.² In some States an action may be severed, and a new trial granted as to one or more of several parties and denied as to others.³ If the new trial is granted for the purpose of retrying a portion of the issues only, the evidence must be confined to those issues.⁴

XII. THE NEW TRIAL.—There is, with a very few exceptions, no difference in the procedure on the second trial from that of the first.⁵ There is no objection to the trial being had before the thereon. Converse v. Bloom, 20 La. An. 555.

In an action on an administrator's bond, where several breaches have been assigned, issues joined thereon, and findings made, an order granting a new trial as to one issue has the legal effect of granting a new trial as to all. State v. Templin, 122 Ind. 235.

In Nevada, the court may retry a part only of a case, as, for instance, that part relating to property rights in an action for a divorce, and for a separation of property. Lake v. Bender, 18 Nev. 361.

When exceptions are sustained on the sole ground of an error in the rejection of evidence, which affected the question of damages only, a new trial will be confined to the assessment of damages. Kent v. Whitney, 9 Allen (Mass.) 62; Winn v. Columbian Ins. Co., 12 Pick. (Mass.) 279; Haley v. Dorchester Mut. F. Ins. Co., 12 Gray (Mass.) 545.

This court, under the Iowa statute, on finding that an error occurred only in an allowance of the defendant's cross-action, will order a new trial to extend thereto, without disturbing the judgment establishing the plaintiff's claim. McAfferty v. Hale, 24 Iowa 355.

Waiver of Condition.—If a motion for a new trial is granted for the purpose of submitting to another jury a single specified question of fact, the party who obtained the verdict may waive the condition in his favor; and if, at the new trial, he puts his case upon another ground, the whole case is thereby opened to the other party. Seccomb v. Provincial Ins. Co., 4 Allen (Mass.) 152.

In Alabama it is held that after a trial of the question of right of property in two slaves, in one action, the court cannot grant a new trial as to the property in one slave, and refuse it as to the other. Dale v. Mosely, 4 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 371.

same judge,¹ but none of the jurors of the former panel are again eligible in the same cause,² and reference to rulings made or opinions expressed on the former trial is improper.³ A ruling or waiver or other act is considered as having been made for the purpose of the former trial only,⁴ though an absolute and unqualified admission can be retracted only by leave of the court;⁵ and the defendant cannot for the first time on the second trial, interpose an objection to the parties plaintiff.⁶

XIII. SUBSEQUENT NEW TRIALS.—In the absence of statutory enactment it seems that there is practically no limit to the number of successive new trials that may be had upon the proper grounds.⁷ But after two concurring verdicts upon the facts, the court will rarely set the second aside, unless satisfied that it is against right, or

Where a cause has been twice tried by the same judge with the same result, his refusal to grant a third new trial will not be questioned by the supreme court. Hollenbeck v. Marshalltown, 62 Iowa 21.

If on conflicting testimony there have been two concurring verdicts, the first of which was set aside as against the weight of evidence, a second new trial ought not to be granted on the same ground, unless there be an offer to produce new testimony. Milliken v. Ross, 4 Woods (N. Y.) 69.

Upon a bill of injunction against a judgment, a new trial was granted at law, which resulted in a verdict for the complainant, but the judge certified that it was against evidence. Another trial, directed, resulted as before, and the judge certified up all the evidence, from which it appeared that the merits of the case were against the complainant, whereupon another trial was not ordered, but the injunction was dissolved and the bill dismissed. Ruffners v. Barrett, 6 Munf. (Va.) 207.

The court will not, in the exercise of its discretion, grant a third trial of an action to recover possession of lands to a party, who upon the two previous trials has lost his case by overlooking a point of law, or conceding a fact, or by omitting to seek a remedy by an appeal from an erroneous ruling on an unimportant question of evidence, unless he is shown to have been thrown off his guard. The fact that the defendant, in another cause tried subsequently, succeeded by raising the objections which were not raised in the present case, is not, necessarily, ground for granting the application. Wright v. Millbank, 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 672.

Where three new trials were granted each resulting in a verdict for the plaintiff, in an action for personal injuries chargeable to negligence, to order another trial is reversible error. Hazzard v. Savannah, 77 Ga. 54.

In Equity, when one verdict goes one way and the other the other way, the court will usually order a third trial by statute, two being the number generally adopted.¹ These statutes are not, as a general rule, allowed to operate as a restriction upon the power of an appellate court to reverse a judgment and send the case back for a new trial any number of times,² and which will be regarded as conclusive. Danl. Ch. Pr. (5th ed.) 1125, citing Wyatt's Pr. 263.

The provision of Indiana Code, which declares that not more than two new trials shall be granted to the same party in the same cause, means that when three juries have concurred in finding the matters actually in litigation against a party, the courts shall not disturb the verdict on his application. Judah v. Vincennes University, 23 Ind. 273.

Restriction on Common-law Right.—A statute which limits the number of new trials to be granted to the same party deprives the court of its common-law right to grant a new trial upon its own motion, where the verdict was in due form and responsive to the issues. State v. Adams, 12 Mo. App. 436.

Under the Missouri statute, providing that "only one new trial shall be allowed to either party: First, where the triers of the fact have erred in matter of law; second, where the jury shall be guilty of misbehavior," there is no limit to the number of new trials which may be granted for errors in giving or refusing instructions, or in admitting or excluding evidence. State v. Edwards, 35 Mo. App. 680.

The addition of new counts after two new trials have been granted (particularly when the cause of action remains the same), does not take the case out of Tennessee act that "not more than two new trials shall be granted to the same party, in the same cause at law, or upon the trial of an issue of fact in equity." East Tennessee etc. R. Co. v. Hackney, 1 Head (Tenn.) 169.

Divorce and Real Action.—Where, as in Minnesota, the statute gives the right to a second trial in an "action for the recovery of real property," a second trial may be claimed of that part of a divorce suit involving the title and right to the possession of land. Schmitt v. Schmitt, 32 Minn. 130.

In Texas, errors of law and misconduct of the jury are excepted, and that the jury have been misled by the charge of the court is held to be error of law. Rains v. Hood, 23 Tex. 555; *Austin v. In Shirts v. Irons, 47 Ind. 445, it was held that a statute which allows the granting of new trials for specified causes, and provides that not more than two new trials shall be granted to the same party in the same cause, should not be construed as restricting the power of the supreme court to grant new trials repeatedly for errors of law committed in the cause. The true meaning is, that they apply only when a new trial is had, and not to a case of non-suit.¹ Where a judgment is reversed on error and remanded for further proceedings, it is not to be counted as a new trial for the purpose of restricting the number which may be granted by the court below.²

XIV. APPEAL FROM ORDERS GRANTING OR DENYING NEW TRIALS—1. When Appealable.—At common law and in some of the States, decisions of the trial court upon a motion for a new trial are not appealable;³ and in others the order refusing to grant a new trial where two new trials have been granted in the same cause to the same party, either by the court below or the supreme court, exclusively for any of the reasons specified in the act as causes for a new trial, another new trial cannot be granted to the same party in such cause for any of the reasons specified. And see also Silsbe v. Lucas, 53 Ill. 479.

In West Virginia, there are no exceptions to the provisions of code, that not more than two new trials shall be granted to the same party in the same case. But if, on the face of the record, it appears that a verdict is void, and that no judgment could at common law be properly entered upon it, as, for instance, because it was too uncertain, ambiguous or defective, the court may declare such a verdict void, and direct a new trial, without regard to the number of new trials which may have been granted to the same party in the same case. Williams v. Ewart, 29 W. Va. 659.

2. Burton v. Brashear, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 276. And see Beckman v. Richardson, 28 Kan. 648.

Under statutory restrictions not limiting the number of new trials to be granted for erroneous rulings on questions of law, a new trial granted because of the admission of improper evidence is not to be counted in determining the power of the court to grant a subsequent new trial. State v. Edwards, 36 Mo. App. 425.

For Different Causes.—Section 352 of the Practice act of Indiana, providing that "not more than two new trials shall be granted to the same party in the same cause," does not apply to a case where a party has twice had a new trial, once for an erroneous ruling upon a demurrer to a pleading, and again for other reasons. Charles v. Malott, 65 Ind. 184.

The supreme court will not revise the decision of a matter which rests in the legal discretion of the court below. Sanford Mfg. Co. v. Wiggin, 14 N. H. 441.

A petition for a new trial is an appeal to the discretion of the court, and, in the exercise of that discretion, they are supreme, so long as they keep within the limits of their authority. Their proceedings, when of this character, are not subject to be revised or controlled by writ of error, certiorari or appeal. If, indeed, they transcend those limits, and attempt to exercise a discretionary power, which they do not possess, their decision may be set aside for that reason. If, therefore, they grant a new trial, their decision upon the merits is not subject to a revision; yet, if they

is not appealable where the motion is addressed to the discretion of the trial judge, and his decision rests upon questions of fact.¹

grant a new trial, in a case where they had no legal authority to do so, it is error. Houghton v. Slack, 10 Vt. 522.

In United States courts the granting or refusal of a motion for a new trial is always addressed to the discretion of the court, and cannot be reviewed by an appellate court. Henderson v. Moore, 5 Cranch (U. S.) 11; Blunt v. Smith, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 248; M'Lanahan v. Universal Ins. Co., 1 Pet. (U. S.) 170; United States v. Buford, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 12; *Life & Fire Ins. Co. v. But the United States Rev. Stats., § 804, relating to the District of Columbia, empowering a trial judge in his discretion to entertain motions for new trials, upon exceptions taken at the trial, do not limit the cases in which an appeal may be taken from his decision, on such motions, to the three cases enumerated. Construing that section in connection with section 772, giving an appeal from special to general term from any order, judgment, or decree, "if the same involved the merits of the action or proceeding," rulings on motions for new trials based upon other grounds, such as that the verdict is against the weight of evidence, are equally appealable as are those enumerated in section 804. Inland etc. Coasting Co. v. Hall, 124 U. S. 121.

An appeal will not lie from an order granting or refusing a new trial, where no question of law is involved. Thomas v. Myers, 87 N. Car. 31; Braid v. Lukins, 95 N. Car. 123.

No exception lies to a decision of the court of common pleas, overruling a motion made for a new trial on the ground of the alleged incompetency of a juror by reason of interest. Kennicutt v. Stockwell, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 73.

There can be no appeal to the supreme court from an order denying a new trial. Nor can the notice of an appeal from such an order be amended so as to embrace an appeal from the final judgment. Stevens v. Gale, 2 Dak. 370.

Whether a verdict is against the weight of the evidence is a matter solely to be determined by the judge trying the cause, and the question of a new trial on that ground must be conclusively decided by him. Boykin v. Perry, 4 Jones L. (N. Car.) 325.

But in Connecticut, while a petition for a new trial is addressed to the discretion of the trial court, yet the exercise of that discretion is reviewable by the supreme court of errors. Husted v. Mead, 58 Conn. 55.

An order granting a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, surprise, misconduct of juries, or the like, has always been considered as addressed to the discretion of the court, and no appeal lies from the decision. Harris v. Burdett, 73 (N. Y.) 136; Selden v. Delaware etc. Canal Co., 29 N. Y. 634; Wavel v. Wiles, 24 N. Y. 635; Lawrence v. Ely, 38 N. Y. 42; Smith v. Platt, 96 N. Y. 635; *Williams v. Upon an appeal from an order grant-

While the foregoing proposition is equally true of an order granting a new trial,¹ yet the courts in many States go much farther, and refuse to review an order granting a new trial altogether:² assigning as reasons for this course: First, that the order is not final, and, therefore, not appealable;³ and, secondly, that the order ing a new trial the judgment cannot be reversed unless the case repels the inference that the court granting the new trial may not have differed from the original court upon the determination of any question of fact. To permit the reversal of such an order, it must appear, from a statement of the facts considered as established at general term, that an error of law was committed in granting the new trial. Miller v. Schuyler, 20 N. Y. 521. This decision and that of Hoyt v. Thompson, 19 N. Y. 207, were made before the amendment to the code of 1860, allowing a review in the court of appeals upon the facts in cases tried before the court or a referee, and are no longer applicable to that class of cases. But they are applicable to cases tried by jury, the law in respect to them being unchanged. Wright v. Hunter, 46 N. Y. 409.

An appeal from an order denying a motion made, under N. Y. Code, § 999, for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was contrary to law, brings the whole case before the appellate court, upon the law as well as the facts. Tate v. McCormick, 23 Hun (N. Y.) 218.

Without assuming to determine that a court of error will, in any case, employ the power apparently conferred by the letter of section 4 of the act of Ohio of April 12th, 1858, "to relieve the district courts," etc., to reverse a judgment for error of the court below, in granting a new trial, it will require a strong case to justify its exercise. Beatty v. Hatcher, 13 Ohio St. 115.

A notion for a new trial is addressed to the sound discretion of the court, and when granted the judgment rendered on the new trial will not be reversed for error in allowing such new trial. This may now be regarded to be the rule in this State, as indeed practically it always has been in like cases. Smith v. Board of Education, 27 Ohio St. 44. See also Conord v. Runnels, 23 Ohio St. 601; Spafford v. Bradley, 20 Ohio 74; Beatty v. Hatcher, 13 Ohio St. 15.

In Florida an order of the trial court granting a new trial is not appealable though the action of the court in granting or refusing a new trial may be reviewed upon an appeal from the final judgment. Staples v. Hartridge, 8 Fla. 426; Dawkins v. Carroll, 5 Fla. 407.

Where a court, after expiration of the term, vacates, without warrant of law, a judgment rendered by it, grants a new trial, restores the original case to the docket, and the plaintiff appears, objects to the proceeding, and moves to dismiss it, and, after his objection is overruled, enters on a second trial, in which judgment is rendered against him, he may appeal, and rest on the introduction of the cause in the court below, by the grant of the new trial, as an error fatal to the judgment. McLendon v. Darden, 53 Ala. 67.

A decree setting aside a judgment of forfeiture of an appearance bond is one granting a new trial, and is not appealable. State v. Cole (La. 1887), 3 So. Rep. 84.

While a judgment setting aside a verdict and granting a new trial is not a final judgment, and, therefore, is not one from which an appeal or writ of error will lie, yet, when the trial court improperly grants such new trial, the party objecting may avail himself of the error by tendering his bill of exceptions and abandoning the case at that point, and when final judgment is thereafter rendered against him, he may appeal therefrom and thus secure a review of the alleged errors of the trial court in granting the new trial. Iron Mountain Bank v. Armstrong, 92 Mo. 265.

does not affect a substantial right.¹ And, where the order is held to be appealable, the courts always show greater hesitation and reluctance to disturb an order granting a new trial than one refusing it.² But an order denying a motion being in effect one which determines the action, is, as a general rule, appealable when not based upon a question resting in the discretion of the trial court.³

A judgment granting a new trial is not final, and therefore will be reviewed only in an extreme case. McWhorter v. McMurrain, 26 Ga. 164.

Although N. Y. Code provides that an appeal must be taken from the order denying a new trial, an appeal taken before the judgment of reversal is entered, is ineffectual to review the judgment. Vernon v. Palmer, 67 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 18. See, however, Hines v. Driver, 89 Ind. 339, where it was held that an order granting a new trial for cause, after the close of the term, is a final judgment, and therefore appealable. See also Belt v. Davis, 1 Cal. 134; McCall v. Hitchcock, 7 Bush (Ky.) 615; Odd Fellows' Sav. Bank v. Deuprey, 66 Cal. 168; Dorland v. Cunningham, 66 Cal. 484.

The exercise of discretion by an inferior court, in granting a new trial, will not be interfered with on appeal, unless an abuse of discretion is shown, and the evidence thereof should be stronger to justify an interference where a new trial has been granted, than where it has been refused. Shepherd v. Brenton, 15 Iowa 84; Whitney v. Blunt, 15 Iowa 283; McNair v. McComber, 15 Iowa 368; House v. Wright, 22 Ind. 383.

The supreme court will very seldom reverse an order for a new trial, and only for stronger reasons than need be shown for reversing an order refusing a new trial. Sedan v. Church, 29 Kan. 190.

To interfere with the decision of the court below in granting a new trial, the supreme court will require a clearer showing of abuse of judicial discretion, or legal error, than it would to reverse a refusal of a new trial. Chapman v. Wilkinson, 22 Iowa 541; Newell v. Sanford, 10 Iowa 396.

But where a new trial is erroneously granted on a ground not discretionary, the action of the court will be corrected on appeal as readily as though the new trial had been refused. Manson v. Ware, 63 Iowa 345.

An order refusing a new trial, and dismissing the motion therefor, being appealable, an order refusing to set aside said order is not appealable. Larkin v. Larkin, 76 Cal. 323.

An order denying a motion to vacate an order sustaining a demurrer, and for a "new trial" on the demurrer, is not an order refusing a new trial, so as to be appealable, under Gen. Stat. Minn. 1878, ch. 86, § 8. Dodge v. Bell, 37 Minn. 382.

Where a motion for a new trial has been denied, and a subsequent motion for a new trial has been denied on the ground of the previous decision, the latter order is not appealable. Romine v. Cralle, 80 Cal. 626.

Inferior Courts.—No appeal lies from the order of an inferior court granting or refusing a new trial. Kirk v. Grant, 67 Md. 418.

So, in a few of the States, orders granting a new trial are considered appealable on the theory that they in effect prevent final judgment in the case.¹ And the rule in a majority of the States is that, where there has been legal error, or an abuse of discretion by the trial court upon the decision of a motion for a new trial, the appellate court will review and correct such decision as well where the motion was sustained as when overruled.²

Where, in an action to construe a will, the general term of the New York Supreme Court made an order reversing the judgment of the special term, and directing a new trial, the court of appeals has jurisdiction on an appeal from such order; the appellant having consented in his notice of appeal that judgment absolute should be rendered against him if the order should be affirmed. Henderson v. Henderson, 113 N. Y. 1.

An order expunging an order discharging a trustee from the record is appealable, since it virtually grants a new trial. Guthrie v. Guthrie, 71 Iowa 744.

When the reason and evidence for a new trial appear of record, and come within recognized rules of law, the question may very properly become the subject of review and correction in the supreme court. Jones v. Fennimore, 1 Greene (Iowa) 134.

Where a court has granted a new trial upon insufficient grounds, it cannot review its decision at a subsequent term, but the remedy is by writ of error. Becker v. Sauter, 89 Ill. 596.

The New York statute allows an appeal from an order of the general term of the marine court of that city, granting a new trial, only upon condition that the appellant consent to a final judgment against him if the order is affirmed. Without such a consent, therefore, there can be no appeal and no final judgment entered upon it. Wilmore v. Flack, 96 N. Y. 512.

The circuit court has power to grant a new trial where it is satisfied that perjury has been committed by a witness, and that an improper verdict was occasioned in consequence thereof, but the matter rests in the sound discretion of the court upon being satisfied that the facts exist, and it would require a case of the grossest character to authorize the appellate court to interfere. Jaccard v. Davis, 43 Mo. 535.

The terms upon which to grant a new trial are peculiarly within the discretion of the court, and not to be reviewed except in a very clear case. Rice v. Gashirrie, 13 Cal. 53.

The proceedings upon a complaint for a new trial, under Ind. Rev. Stat., § 563, are a distinct matter from the original action; and an appeal from the judgment in the original action does not present any question as to the rulings upon the complaint for a new trial. Harvey v. Fink, 111 Ind. 249.

Where a new trial is improperly ordered, the party objecting may save his exception and stand upon his rights by refusing further to proceed in the trial court. Having done this, his objections against the order will be heard

2. The Record on Appeal.—When the motion for a new trial is based upon matters relating solely to the evidence or to the facts of the case, all the evidence must be incorporated into the record on appeal, as the appellate court will presume in its absence that the order disposing of the motion in the court below was correctly decided;¹ and when the ground was that the verdict was against evidence, it must affirmatively appear that the whole of the evidence is shown in the record;² the facts proved being required to be stated in some jurisdictions, and not merely the evidence tending to prove them.³ So, where the ground for a new trial is that the verdict was against instructions, all the instructions must be incorporated in the record, or the appellate on appeal or writ of error. Blanchard v. Wolff, 6 Mo. App. 200.

Where, by consent, there is a trial by the court, a motion for new trial upon the ground that the finding was contrary to the law and evidence overruled, and exception thereto, the supreme court, upon a writ of error, is required by statute to review the order overruling the motion and to examine the evidence. Knox v. Barnett, 18 Fla. 594.

A petition in error will lie in the supreme court to reverse an order of the district court granting a new trial, although the action may still be pending in the district court. Ottawa v. Washabaugh, 11 Kan. 124.

Where a motion for a new trial fails to show that it was based solely on exceptions or questions of law, an appellate court will not review the order granting a new trial. Kennicutt v. Parmalee, 109 N. Y. 650.

Under the rule requiring the appellate court to reject the parol evidence of the exceptor to the refusal of the trial court to grant a new trial where it cannot be seen whether or not the re-court will not review the decision,¹ and, generally, the record must affirmatively show that all the evidence submitted to the court below, upon the questions relied upon on the motion, are incorporated into it.² If this rule is not complied with, the appellate court will take no cognizance of the case unless, after rejecting all parol evidence in favor of the applicant and giving full credence to that of the other, the decision of the court below still appears to be erroneous.³ The party desiring to appeal from the order of the court upon a motion for a new trial, must except to such order, or he will be deemed to have acquiesced in the decision.⁴ The affidavits, too, which were before the court below must be in-

The correctness of instructions, in most if not in all cases, depends upon the facts developed upon the trial; and where their applicability or irrelevancy is not shown by a bill of exceptions, embodying sufficient of the testimony, the appellate court cannot determine upon their correctness, nor determine whether the court erred in granting a new trial, on the ground that they were erroneous. Farr v. Fuller, 8 Iowa 347.

Where a motion for a new trial raises no question as to the correctness of the instructions given by the court to the jury, no error arising from them can be considered on appeal, although they are made part of the record by bill of exceptions. Bodamer v. Hutton, 40 Ind. 244.

Assignments of error that "the court erred in refusing to give the instructions asked for by defendants and refused by the court," and that "the court erred in not granting a new trial, because the verdict and judgment were contrary to and against the law, and were not supported by the evidence," are too general. Koepsel v. Allen (Tex. 1887), 4 S. W. Rep. 856.

On appeal from a judgment, where it does not appear that a motion for new trial was made, or that any statement was filed pursuant to Rev. St. Idaho, § 4443, the judgment roll only can be considered. Washington etc. R. Co. v. Osborne (Idaho 1889), 21 Pac. Rep. 421.

The objection that the court below denied the defendant the right to open and close, cannot be taken by assignment of error on an appeal. It should be assigned as cause for a motion for a new trial below. Abshire v. State, 52 Ind. 99; White v. Carlton, 52 Ind. 373.

Where failure to suppress certain parts of a deposition is assigned as a reason for a new trial, and there is no bill of exceptions showing the motion to suppress or the parts of the deposition proposed to be suppressed, the supreme court cannot review the action of the lower court. Bargis v. Farrar, 45 Ind. 41.

The reviewing court will not notice the action of the court below in overruling a motion for a new trial, unless the bill of exceptions shows that judgment of the court to have been ex-corporated in the record or certified by the judge.¹ These matters are thus made a part of the record by means of the settlement and filing of a statement of the case and bill of exceptions, properly setting forth the errors relied upon,² and errors occurcepted to. Fondren v. Durfee, 39 Miss. 324; Hicks v. Wilson, 24 Ark. 628; Hoover v. Wood, 9 Ind. 286.

The supreme court will not review the refusal of a new trial, on a motion involving questions of law blended with fact, unless the grounds are incorporated in a bill of exceptions. State v. Chatman, 34 La. An. 881.

Where, in effect, it clearly appears of record that the appellant did object to the overruling of his motion for a new trial below, it is immaterial that the fact is not so stated in terms. Van Winkle v. Blackford, 28 W. Va. 670.

In the absence of a bill of exceptions the supreme court will not review the action of the trial court on a motion for a new trial. Nor is it enough that the order recites that an exception was taken. People v. Smith, 3 Utah 425.

It has always been held in Missouri that the motion for a new trial is not part of the record proper and must be preserved by a bill of exceptions. It is also settled by the decisions of this court, that the action of the trial court on the motion for a new trial is a matter of exception and not of error, and it is accordingly held that when the bill of exceptions fails to show that the action of the court in overruling the motion for a new trial was excepted to, this court will not review such action of the trial court. Hart v. Walker, 31 Mo. 26; Bateson v. Clark, 37 Mo. 34; State v. Marshall, 36 Mo. 403, 404; State v. Gaither, 77 Mo. 305.

If the bill of exceptions shows the filing of a motion for a new trial and the action of the court thereon, it is not necessary that this should be shown by the record proper. State v. Gaither, 77 Mo. 304.

An order dismissing a motion for a new trial cannot be reviewed on appeal in the absence of a statement containing the papers on which the order was made. The papers are not of themselves a part of the record. Strathern v. Dakin, 63 Cal. 478.

The notice of intention to move for a new trial constitutes no part of the record on appeal from an order granting or refusing it. Hook v. Hall, 68 Cal. 22.

That a finding was against the preponderance of evidence, or that there was any cause, however good, for a new trial in the court below, is not ground for a reversal by the supreme court, without an assignment of error upon the overruling of a motion for a new trial. Scott v. State, 29 Ind. 219; Kline v. Sinnissippi Ins. Co., 29 Ind. 293; Whitinger v. Nelson, 29 Ind. 441; Caldwell v. Asbury, 29 Ind. 451; Herrick v. Bunting, 29 Ind. 467; Smith v. Crigler 29 Ind. 516; Vandoren v. Kimes, 29 Ind. 582.

But a motion for a new trial is a part of the record, without a bill of exceptions; and the action of the court upon such motion may be assigned as error. Kirby v. Cannon, 9 Ind. 371; Cooper v. Howard Co., 64 Ind. 520. See also State v. Central Pac. R. Co., 17 Nev. 259.

On a motion for a new trial, which is overruled, and exceptions taken, the supreme court cannot act upon affidavits taken in the court below. Rinehardt v. Potts, 7 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 403; Crippen v. People, 8 Mich. 117.

The affidavit on motion for a new trial and the instructions complained of, form no part of the record, although copied therein by the clerk; they must be preserved in a bill of exceptions. Gregory v. Spencer, 3 Ill. App. 80; Rockenfeller v. Tobias, 3 Ill. App. 461.

Where there is no bill of exceptions in the case, there is not proper data, either as to law or evidence, upon which the court will consider whether there was error in overruling a motion for new trial. Grady v. Jeffares (Fla. 1889), 6 So. Rep. 828.

Where leave to file a bill of exceptions is granted at the time a motion for a new trial is overruled, the bill may embrace all rulings made during the trial. Pitzer v. Indianapolis etc. R. Co., 80 Ind. 569.

The minute entry of the clerk reciting the fact of filing a motion for a new trial, the ruling upon it, and that the appellant excepted, does not bring the motion, the ruling, or the exception before the supreme court on appeal. That must be done by bill of exceptions. Sutherland v. Putnam (Ariz. 1890), 24 Pac. Rep. 320.

Where the transcript on appeal contains a motion for a new trial, based on alleged erroneous rulings of the court, but there is nothing in the record to show what the rulings were, or the facts on which they were based, the judgment of the lower court must be affirmed. State v. Harty (Iowa, 1890), 45 N. W. Rep. 903.

Notice of intention to move for a new trial need not be made part of the record on appeal. Pico v. Cohn, (Cal. 1889) 20 Pac. Rep. 706; Scott v. Wood, 81 Cal. 398.

A motion for a change of venue, with the affidavit supporting it, and a motion for a new trial, are not pleadings, and can only become part of the record by being incorporated into a bill of exceptions, and this is not sufficiently done when the bill simply recites the filing of the motion and affidavit, and then states that reference is made to them, and the same made part thereof. Perkins v. McDowell (Wyoming, 1890), 23 Pac. Rep. 71.

Waiver of Bill.—Where the record recited that a motion for a new trial, based upon affidavits, was by consent of parties brought to a hearing, and the affidavits were heard against it as well as in its favor the objection that there was no case or bill of exceptions was waived. Carroll v. More, 30 Wis. 574.

Where counsel stipulate that all depositions on file may be "read and referred to on the hearing of defendant's motion for a new trial herein as part of the foregoing statement," and that the same "shall be printed in the transcript on appeal," and "form a part of the statement," a strict compliance with the requirements of statute as to the manner of making them parts of such statement is waived. Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 633.

A general term has no power to review a case upon the facts, on appeal from the judgment, where the trial was by jury; the only mode in which the facts can be brought before it for review is by appeal from the order of special term or circuit granting or refusing a new trial. Boos v. World Mut. L. Ins. Co., 64 N. Y. 236. And an appeal from "all the orders and rulings occurring on the trial, and excepted to," is not an appeal from an order granting or refusing a new trial. Day v. Callow, 39 Cal. 593.

The giving or refusing to give instructions, and the overruling of a motion to strike out parts of a special verdict, cannot be assigned as error on appeal, but must be assigned as reasons for a new trial, and are then brought up for review under the assignment of error because of the overruling of the motion for a new trial. Louisville etc. R. Co. v. Hart, 119 Ind. 273.

In White v. Prigmore, 28 Ark. 450, and Nisbett v. Brown, 30 Ark. 585, it was held that the motion for a new trial does not become a part of the record merely by being filed, as do the pleadings. In the former case there was no bill of exceptions at all; in the latter there was a bill of exceptions, but it made no reference at all to the motion for a new trial.

In Farquharson v. Johnson, 35 Ark. 536, the court held that unless a motion for a new trial be incorporated in the bill of exceptions, or referred to in it as made part of the record, it is no part of the record, though filed and copied in the transcript.

The denial of a motion for a new trial on the judge's minutes, because the verdict is against the evidence, is not the subject of an exception; and an order of the general term affirming such a denial will not be reviewed by the court of appeals, though an appeal from the order and an intention to review it are contained in the notice of appeal from the judgment. Duryea v. Vosburgh, 121 N. Y. 157.

Trial by Court or Referee.—The rule not to reverse a judgment for insufficiency of evidence, unless that question is first made in the court below on a motion for a new trial, applies when the cause is tried by the court without a jury. Bills v. Stanton, 69 Ill. 51.

On an appeal from a judgment confirming a referee's report, on exceptions to the referee's rulings on the admission of evidence, the record must show, not only that after the referee filed his report (stating the evidence taken, his findings of fact and conclusions of law), appellant moved to set the report aside, and for a new trial, and excepted to an order denying the motion, but also that he had filed exceptions to the referee's findings of fact. Riley v. Mitchell, 37 Wis. 612.

Arbitration Proceedings.—The Missouri revised statutes provide that the party aggrieved by the confirmation or vacation of an award of arbitrators may take his writ of error or an appeal "as upon any other judgment." Held that, in appealing from a judgment vacating an award of arbitrators, a motion for a new trial was necessary, pointing out the error alleged. Wallace v. Underwood, 32 Mo. App. 473.

Waiver of Exceptions.—In New Jersey, whether a rule to show cause why a new trial should not be granted is general or special, the mere granting of it on the application of the party who holds bills of exceptions operates as a waiver of all exceptions save those which are expressly reserved in the rule to show cause. Finley v. Handley (N. J. 1888), 14 Atl. Rep. 585.

But the Supreme Court of Missouri may review, though no motion for a new trial has been made. Meek v. Hewitt, 48 Mo. 337.

Carlton, 26 Ark. 662; Pio Pico v. Cuyas, 47 Cal. 174. And see Gage v. Downey (Cal. 1888) 19 Pac. Rep. 113; Fisher v. Purdue, 48 Ind. 323; Derfahl v. Tuttle, 42 Iowa 177; Kilmer v. O'Brien, 13 Hun (N. 3. What Will be Considered.—Upon an appeal from an order granting or refusing a new trial, the appellate court will confine itself to the consideration of questions made below.¹ Thus, where it is assigned as error, that the court overruled the motion for a new trial, the only question for the appellate court is, whether the court erred in disallowing that motion on any of the grounds upon which it was made.² But a judgment in a criminal case may be reversed for an error not specified in the written grounds for a new Wagner (Neb. 1890), 46 N. W. Rep. 427; Rogers v. King, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 495.

Errors in a decree cannot be corrected by a motion for a new trial. Creech v. Richards, 76 Ga. 36.

A petition in error to review the charge to the jury and rulings on the admission of testimony will not be dismissed because no motion for a new trial was filed. Waldron v. Evans, 1 Dak. 11.

Where special finding is in accordance with the statute, the proper method of presenting to the supreme court the question of the sufficiency of the finding to justify the judgment is by exception to the decision of the court in its conclusion of law, and not by a motion for a new trial. But where there has been no motion for a new trial on account of the insufficiency of the evidence, the supreme court will not review the action of the court below upon the facts. Roberts v. Smith, 34 Ind. 550.

Where the issues of fact in a cause are tried by the court, and, by request, the conclusions of law are stated with the facts in writing, the questions of law involved are saved for review by the appellate court by exception to such conclusions and not by motion for a new trial. Luirance v. Luirance, 32 Ind. 198. And where the court, the record not showing it to have been requested by either party, finds the facts specially and states conclusions of law thereon, a motion for a new trial can raise no question for review as to the correctness of such conclusions. Rose v. Duncan, 43 Ind. 512.

A motion for a new trial below is not necessary to procure a review of a ruling by which the court excluded from the consideration of the jury the whole of the plaintiff's evidence as insufficient to prove his case, in consequence of which the jury necessarily found for the defendant. A simple exception to such ruling will bring it up for review. Smith v. Gillett, 50 Ill. 290.

Thomas, 36 Mo. App. 105; Smith v. Prior, 9 N. Y. Supp. 636; Kelly v. Rogers, 21 Minn. 146.

Where a motion for a new trial raises no question as to the correctness of the instructions given by the court to the jury, no error arising from them can be considered on appeal, although they are made part of the record by bill of exceptions. Bodamer v. Hutton, 40 Ind. 244.

The action of the court below in improperly sustaining or overruling a motion to suppress a deposition, or a part thereof, is cause for a new trial, and must be stated as a reason for a new trial in the court below, to entitle it to the consideration of the supreme court. Jeffersonville etc. R. Co. v. Riley, 39 Ind. 569.

Proper Parties.—On a motion to dismiss an appeal from an order refusing a new trial, the question whether others should have been made parties to the motion in the court below is not involved. Watson v. Sutro, 77 Cal. 609.

But the appellant, on an appeal from an order granting a new trial, cannot, for the first time, object that the notice of the motion did not specify any grounds for it. Chesley v. Mississippi etc. Boom Co. (Minn. 1888), 38 N. W. Rep. 769.

Upon an appeal from an order refusing a new trial, the supreme court cannot review an order of the court below allowing an amendment of the pleadings made previous to the commencement of the trial, and not as a part of it. Winona v. Minnesota Railway Construction Co., 27 Minn. 415.

Where an assignment of error in the supreme court alleges that "the court below erred in not granting a new trial for" a reason stated both in the assignment of error and in the motion for a new trial, it brings in review such ground only, though others be stated in such motion. Harrison Co. v. Byrne, 67 Ind. 21.

When error is assigned upon the overruling of a motion for a new trial, such assignment brings in review all the grounds properly made the basis of the motion, and they need not be assigned as error. Where the overruling of a motion for a new trial is not assigned as error, no question as to reasons properly assigned in such motion can be presented to the supreme court. Reinhart v. State, 45 Ind. 147.

Where, on motion for a new trial, objection is not made to the verdict, as contrary to evidence, or without evidence to sustain it, the appellate court will only consider the sufficiency of the evidence so far as may be necessary to pass upon the instructions based upon it. Little Rock etc. R. Co. v. Barker, 33 Ark. 350.

Error in assessing too small damages will not be considered in the supreme court, unless made the ground of a motion for a new trial. Mackison v. Clegg, 95 Ind. 373.

Excessive damages as a ground for revising a judgment must be submitted to the court below on the motion for a new trial, otherwise the question will be disregarded on appeal. Seele v. Neumann (Tex.), 1 S. W. Rep. 274.

If the statement and notice of a motion for a new trial are defective, in not specifying the grounds of the motion, the objection should be taken in the court below, and if it is overruled, this court can then review the matter. Brady v. O'Brien, 23 Cal. 244.

Upon appeal from an order granting a new trial, the court cannot review an order overruling a demurrer to the complaint. Flanagan v. Chicago & Northwestern R. Co., 45 Wis. 98.

Errors assigned for giving and refusing instructions to the jury are grounds for a new trial, and must be stated in a motion for a new trial; and where the action of the court in overruling the motion for a new trial is not specifically assigned for error, no question is properly raised in this court for the consideration of the instructions given or refused. *Carson v. An assignment of error that the "court erred in overruling the first, second and third grounds of defendant's motion for a new trial," held, sufficiently specific, when the grounds stated in different ways but a single proposition.

4. The Decision.—The trial court's decision will always be presumed to have been in accordance with the justice and merits of the case, unless the contrary plainly appears by the record.¹

Kitterman v. Chicago etc. R. Co., 69 Iowa 440.

But an assignment that "the court erred in overruling defendants' motion for new trial," is not sufficient to raise the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict, where the motion for new trial is made on several grounds, only one of which raises that question. State v. Harbach (Iowa, 1889), 43 N. W. Rep. 272. And see Cullen v. Drane (Tex. 1888), 10 S. W. Rep. 720; Ruby v. Von Valkenberg, 72 Tex. 459.

"Irregularity in the proceedings of the court, error of law occurring at the trial and excepted to by the defendant," are too general an assignment of causes for a new trial to present any point for consideration on an appeal. Phelps v. Tilton, 17 Ind. 423. And see State v. Wilson, 51 Ind. 96.

Grounds alleged for a new trial on motion therefor, that proper evidence has been refused and improper evidence admitted, are too indefinite to present any question for review. Queen Ins. Co. v. Studebaker Bros. Mfg. Co., 117 Ind. 416.

An assignment of error that "the court erred in overruling defendant's motion for new trial for all the reasons stated in the motion" is too general to be considered. Harrell v. Mexico Cattle Co., 73 Tex. 612.

The appellate court will not consider assignments of error filed as a "supplemental statement," which the court below declined to make a part of the case settled for appeal under Code N. C., § 550, prescribing the manner in which the judge shall settle cases for appeal. Rodman v. Harvey, 102 N. Car. 1.

In Wyoming it is held that as errors occurring upon the trial, which are properly grounds for a new trial, can only be brought into the record by a motion for a new trial, and must be included in the motion to bring them to the attention of the supreme court, it is not necessary to separately assign them as error. They are sufficiently included in the assignment that there was error in overruling the motion for new trial. Wolcott v. Bachman (Wyo. 1890), 23 Pac. Rep. 72.

Worman, 71 Iowa 264; Hammel v. Stone (Cal. 1887), 14 Pac. Rep. 675.

In Slauter v. Whitelock, 12 Ind. 338, it was assigned as error that a witness had not been sworn before he testified at the trial, but the record did not show when such mistake was discovered, if discovered at all, or whether any motion was made to correct it. It was held that the ruling of the trial court must be affirmed. See also Mintrum v. Bliss, 77 Cal. 90; Schweickhart v. Stuerve, 75 Wis. 157; Edsall v. Ayers, 15 Ind. 286; *Lloyd v. Where a motion is made for a new trial in the court below, on the ground that the charge of the court was disregarded by the jury, and the motion is refused, it will be presumed, on appeal, that the charge was not disregarded by the jury, unless there is evidence to the contrary. Ashcroft v. Pouns, 1 Tex. 594.

Where the trial court has granted a new trial on the ground of the submission of an improper issue to the jury, the supreme court will, in the absence of evidence, presume that such submission was prejudicial to the appellee. Stutz v. Chicago etc. R. Co., 69 Wis. 312.

In reviewing the order granting a new trial, upon grounds other than the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, its correctness will be presumed, unless the contrary affirmatively appears of record. Nudd v. Home Ins. etc. Co., 25 Minn. 100.

The appellate court will not disturb an order granting a new trial, which is in the discretion of the trial court, though founded in part on an erroneous proposition of fact, where there is nothing in the record to show that the court based its conclusions solely on such proposition. Reed v. Chicago etc. R. Co., 71 Wis. 399.

In Kansas, where a motion for a new trial is required to be reduced to writing, filed in the court, and made within three days after judgment is rendered, if the record of the court below shows that on the fifth day after the rendering of a judgment in a case, a motion for a

And where nothing is shown to the contrary by affidavit or otherwise in the record, the appellate court is bound to presume in favor of the ruling of the court on the motion for a new trial, that such a state of facts existed as authorized that ruling upon the point under consideration.

As has been said, the motion for a new trial is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and the action of the lower court upon such motion will not be disturbed by the court of appeals, unless it appears affirmatively from the record that there has been an abuse of such discretion, or that some settled principle of law has been violated.¹ The question is not whether new trial was overruled, it will be presumed by the supreme court for the purpose of upholding the judgment of the court below, that the party did not comply with the above requisites, and that therefore, the court below did not err in overruling his motion. Lucas v. Sturr, 21 Kan. 349. See also Dyal v. Topeka, 35 Kan. 62; Douglass v. Insley, 34 Kan. 604; Odell v. Sargent, 3 Kan. 80; Mitchell v. Milhoan, 11 Kan. 617; Nesbit v. Hines, 17 Kan. 316; Fowler v. Young, 19 Kan. 150; State v. Benson, 22 Kan. 473.

See, however, Sam v. State, 31 Miss. 480, where it was held that a new trial should have been granted, where the prisoner proved by the affidavits of two witnesses that one of the jurors stated, the day before the trial, "that if the evidence was the same as it was on the former trial, which he had heard, the prisoner was guilty of murder and should be hung"—as it did not appear from the record that the affidavits were disbelieved by the court below. HANDY, J., dissented, holding that as the record did not show upon what ground the court acted, it should be presumed that the court disbelieved the testimony contained in the affidavits, as every presumption must be indulged in favor of the judgment of the court below, which is not removed by the record.

In Byington v. Woodward, 9 Iowa 360, the court said: "If the court below errs in granting or refusing a new trial upon a legal proposition, there is no especial presumption in favor of the correctness of such refusal.

the appellate court would have granted a new trial in the case, but it is rather whether the trial judge, who had many more and far more reliable facilities for exercising a reasonable discretion than the appellate court can claim, has abused that discretion, or has violated a clear legal right of the complainant.¹

Acting upon this general rule, the courts have held that they will not reverse the order of the trial court refusing to grant a new trial, upon the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence, where there is any evidence to support the verdict.²

Central R. Co., 71 Ga. 222; Suddeth v. Kramer, 78 Ga. 353.

Under the statutes of Arkansas, the circuit court has discretion whether to receive a motion for a new trial, although filed after the prescribed time, and the supreme court would be slow to interfere with the discretion exercised; but where the circuit court considered the statute imperative, the supreme court may direct the circuit court to use, but not how to use, its discretion. Gould v. Tatum, 21 Ark. 329.

Unless it is apparent that the trial judge has abused his discretion in granting a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, the supreme court will not interfere. Wingfield v. Rhea, 77 Ga. 84.

In Missouri, if, upon a review of all the testimony, the supreme court are of opinion that the circuit court improperly exercised its discretion in refusing a new trial, the judgment will be reversed. Bybee v. Kinote, 6 Mo. 53.

The discretion of the court below, in ruling upon a motion for a new trial, on the ground of a deposition having been improperly used by the jury in their room, is a legal discretion, subject to review in the supreme court. Stewart v. Burlington etc. R. Co., 11 Iowa 62.

Stipulation for Judgment Absolute.—Under a stipulation that, upon review of an order granting a new trial, the determination of the appellate court shall be final as to the merits of the action, the rule that the decision of the trial court on a motion for a new trial will not be disturbed unless there is an abuse of discretion, does not apply. Johnson v. Parrotte, 23 Neb. 232.

The Mississippi court, in Drake v. Surget, 36 Miss. 487, thus states the rule: "The doctrine is well established by a series of adjudications, that on a motion for a new trial, brought to this court by writ of error, the verdict of the jury will not be disturbed, unless where it is without evidence, or the evidence greatly preponderates against it, or where the verdict appears to be manifestly wrong, from the record before us." See also Dickson v. Parker, 3 How. (Miss.) 219; Harris v. Halliday, 4 How. (Miss.) 338; Leflore v. Justice, 1 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 381.

In a civil cause, where the court trying it approves the verdict by refusing

Where the trial court has granted a new trial upon the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence, the Minnesota court thus states the rule in regard to the reversal of such a decision: "We would not be warranted in reversing an order of this kind simply because if the judge below had refused to grant a new trial, we would have felt bound to sustain him, nor because there was evidence reasonably tending to support the verdict, nor because, if the motion for a new trial had been made before us in the first instance, we should have, upon a consideration of the evidence and its preponderance, denied the motion; but if, upon careful perusal of the testimony and mature reflection, we feel satisfied that the preponderance of the evidence is manifestly and palpably in favor of the verdict, we would then deem it our duty to reverse the order granting a new trial."¹ This rule, however, while seemingly reasonable enough, is perhaps at variance with that of a majority of the courts, who hold that they will not disturb an order granting a new trial if there is a substantial conflict in the evidence.² So where the motion for a new trial on the ground of surprise was overruled, the order will not be reversed if anything appeared upon the motion, either in the affidavits or counter-to set it aside, and there is not an entire want of evidence in its justification, the supreme court will not interfere and reverse, although the verdict may seem to be greatly against the weight of evidence. Gillespie v. Stone, 43 Mo. 350.

A verdict may be against the weight of evidence, and yet not so strongly as to authorize a new trial, when it has been refused by the court below. Doe v. Roe, 28 Ga. 484. And the appellate court will not revise the discretion of the trial judge in refusing a new trial, because it is apparent that he was strongly of opinion that the verdict should have been different. Atlanta v. Brown, 73 Ga. 630.

In reviewing the decision of the court below, refusing to grant a new trial, the court above will consider as facts so much of the evidence as upholds the verdict, where there is any evidence to sustain it. Turner v. Huggins, 14 Ark. 21.

Where the general grant of a new trial, though from a third finding for the same party, is warranted on the ground that the verdict is contrary to evidence, other grounds not controlling as to the merits of the case may be left open for re-examination, should they arise again, when the new trial is had. Jarrell v. King, 84 Ga. 308.

But where, taking the whole testimony of the successful party alone, it is not sufficient to sustain the verdict, the court will overrule the motion refusing to grant a new trial. People v. Acosta, 10 Cal. 196.

In Ackley v. Berkey, 22 Iowa 226, the court said: "Now, although the evidence reported, taken as a whole, affidavits, to justify it.¹ And when the ground is that of misconduct of a juror, the decision of the court will be upheld if there is anything in the proofs used upon the motion tending to sustain it,² while an order on a motion based upon excessive damages will be affirmed unless the damages assessed by the jury are so outrageous as to induce the belief that they acted from prejudice, partiality or corruption.³ Where, however, the question in the lower court was not a discretionary one, and it appears from the record that some settled principle of law has been violated, the court will, upon appeal from the order, reverse it as in other cases where questions of law and not matters of discretion would have equally, if not better, justified a different conclusion as we see it, looking simply at the written testimony, nevertheless we cannot conceal from ourselves the fact that there is so much to be inferred, especially in this class of cases, from surrounding circumstances, from the appearance of witnesses, their conduct upon the stand, etc., that it is possible we might have reached the same conclusion, had we been placed in like circumstances. Hence the propriety of not interfering unless the conflict in the testimony is slight, and the weight of evidence clearly against the verdict; or there are other circumstances strongly indicating that injustice has been done."

A motion for a new trial, upon the alleged ground that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict, should be granted by the circuit court, unless it clearly appears that substantial justice has been done. But when the same question is presented to the supreme court, on appeal, that court should not grant a new trial, unless it clearly appears from the record that substantial justice has not been done. Christy v. Holmes, 57 Ind. 314.

When a verdict is wholly without evidence to support it, still more when it is directly against the entire evidence, and even when the preponderance of evidence is manifestly in opposition to it, and especially when in any of these cases the impression made upon the mind of the presiding judge concurs with the view of the court above, a new trial will be granted. Plate v. Carolina Mut. Ins. Co., 15 Rich. (S. Car.) 213; Davidson v. Manlove, 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 345.

It is in the discretion of a judge, so long as he does not invade the province of the jury, to grant a new trial, where the preponderance of the evidence is against the verdict, and his order will not be disturbed on appeal. Albion Consolidated Min. Co. v. Richmond Min. Co., 19 Nev. 225.

1. Sultan v. Sherwood, 18 Nev. 454.

A motion was made for the continuance of a motion for a new trial, on the ground of surprise in the testimony of the adverse party, and to enable the party to procure affidavits of witnesses to disprove the unexpected testimony in support of the motion for a new trial. The court overruled the motion for a continuance. Held, that the motion was addressed to the discretion of the court, and unless that discretion was abused the appellate court would not interfere with its exercise. Toledo etc. R. Co. v. McLaughlin, 63 Ill. 389.

But a verdict so clearly wrong as to induce the belief on the part of the reviewing court that it must have been found through mistake, or some means not apparent in the record, will be set aside and a new trial awarded. Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Feary, 22 Neb. 53.

2. McCulley v. State, 62 Ind. 428; Myers v. Conway, 62 Ind. 474.

A motion for a new trial, for the reason that one of the jurors before sat on a trial of the same case, is addressed to the sound discretion of the court below, and cannot be a ground of exception under our system of practice. Bourke v. James, 4 Mich. 336.

A motion for a new trial, based upon affidavits of some of the jurors that they did not concur in the verdict, and by others that they did not understand portions of the charge of the court, and where there is no error assigned in the record, is a matter purely within the discretion of the presiding judge, and will not be considered. Jones v. Parker, 97 N. Car. 33.

discretion of the trial court, and its action thereon is not revisable on exceptions. Stearn v. Clifford (Vt. 1890), 18 Atl. Rep. 1045.

Newly Discovered Evidence.—An order for a new trial, on the ground of newly discovered evidence, is largely discretionary, and the supreme court will not disturb the same, unless there is an abuse of such discretion. Heilner v. Brown (Idaho, 1887), 12 Pac. Rep. 903.

While the supreme court interferes reluctantly with an order granting a new trial, yet, when such order is made because of the misapplication of a legal proposition by the court, it will be reviewed the same as a ruling upon a demurrer or other legal question. Mehan v. Chicago etc. R. Co., 55 Iowa 305.

When the statute notice to the adverse party of a motion for a new trial is not given, an order granting a new trial will be reversed. Bear River etc. Co. v. Boles, 24 Cal. 354.

Where there is no conflict in the evidence, and the correctness of the verdict can be demonstrated by a mathematical calculation, the trial court has no discretion, and an order granting a new trial will be reversed on appeal. Anderson v. Cahill, 65 Iowa 252.

A judge of the circuit court would have granted a new trial had he not fallen into the error of believing that the new constitution limited his power in the matter. Held, that, the supreme court, upon appeal, would remand the case for a new trial. Wood v. Atlanta etc. R. Co., 19 S. Car. 579.

In case of legal error in the decision of the court below, if it appear that, after correction of the error, the ver-

On appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial, there being no evidence before the appellate court, the judgment below will be presumed to be supported by the evidence. Beck v. Beck, 6 Mont. 318.

An appeal from an order of the trial court granting a new trial on the grounds of surprise and irregularity in the proceedings, cannot be reviewed where the record does not disclose the necessary affidavits, but it will be presumed that such affidavits were used in support of the motion, and the order will stand. *Leete v. Where error is alleged in sustaining a motion for a new trial, it must appear affirmatively that none of the grounds of the motion are sufficient before a reversal can be had. Ryan v. Topeka etc. Co., 7 Kan. 207.

On appeal, where the order overruling a motion for a new trial is assigned as error, and it appears that it was assigned as cause for new trial, "that the court erred in giving to the jury instructions one to seventeen, inclusive," the order will be sustained, if any of the instructions so designated are correct. Ohio etc. R. Co. v. McCarty, 121 Ind. 385.

(a) TRIAL DE NOVO IN THE APPELLATE COURT.—The statutes of several of the States provide for a trial de novo in the appellate court, in certain prescribed cases.¹ The most usual application of the provision is to equity causes, in which a final decree, when appealed from, is required to be tried de novo upon the merits, and not upon alleged errors in the proceedings below;² and it is applicable also when the judgment or decree is based on evidence

Where it appeared by affidavits filed by the appellant, who was claimant below, in a collision case, that it was probable that two witnesses for the libellant received, before testifying, a promise from him for the payment of a sum of money in the event that the case should be decided in his favor, and that the appellant ascertained the fact after the appeal, the court ordered a commission to take the testimony of such witnesses relative to the alleged agreement. The Western Metropolis, 12 Wall (U. A proceeding to establish a disputed corner and boundary line, under Laws Iowa 1874, ch. 8, which provides for the appointment of a commission of surveyors by the district court to hear the evidence and make a report, subject to the review of the district court, is a special proceeding, reviewable on appeal to the supreme court, only on the errors assigned, and is therefore not triable de novo on such appeal as an equity case. Yocum v. Haskins (Iowa 1890), 46 N. W. Rep. 1065.

Upon an appeal to the circuit court under Code Oreg., § 1134, from an order of the county court allowing a claim against an estate under the same section, which declares that such order shall have the force and effect of a judgment, the matters in issue between the parties must be tried anew in the same manner as trials at law for the recovery of money are conducted. Wilkes v. Cornelius (Oreg. 1890), 23 Pac. Rep. 473.

Setting Apart a Homestead.—In Georgia, upon appeal from the judgment of the ordinary setting apart a homestead of realty and personalty exemption, it is error in the court to restrict the jury to find for or against the homestead, etc., as plotted. The whole case comes up by the appeal, and the court should administer the law with regard to its terms and provisions. Kirtland v. Davis, 43 Ga. 318.

Assignment of Dower.—In a proceeding for the allotment of dower in the probate court, an order confirming the report of the commissioners appointed to allot the same is final, and an appeal therefrom to the circuit court carries with it the whole case for trial de novo. Hilliard v. Hilliard, 52 Ark. 283.

Contested Election Cases.—The Missouri act of 1867, providing for appeals in contested election cases, was intended to give to the party aggrieved a trial de novo in the circuit court. Boggs v. Brooks, 45 Mo. 232.

Appeals from Justices' Courts.—See tit. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE; subtit. Trial De Novo in Appellate Court, 12 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law 488.

An appeal from a judgment of a justice on both law and fact brings the case up for a trial de novo upon the merits, irrespective of errors or irregularities occurring in the course of the trial in the court below, or in the judgment rendered therein, under Gen. Stat. Minn. 1878, ch. 65, § 117—Wetler v. Nokken, 38 Minn. 376. But a judgment rendered on the verdict of six jurors in an action for damages, in which no defence was made, cannot be tried de novo on appeal. Hickman v. Baltimore etc. R. Co., 30 W. Va. 296; Vandervoort v. Fouse, 30 W. Va. 326.

Under the Kansas act, providing for an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, in criminal cases, submitted to the court as upon special findings of a jury.¹ But in order to entitle the appellant to such a trial, he must have moved, or the court must have ordered, at the hearing of the cause in the court below, that all of the evidence be reduced to writing and made a part of the record of the case.²

5. May Appeal Separately or in Connection with Judgment.—The losing party may, as a general rule, appeal from the judgment, or from the order granting or overruling the motion for a new trial, or from both;³ the decision or disposition of the one being no bar to the further prosecution of the other.⁴ But an order granting a new trial necessarily vacates the judgment, and thereby renders an appeal ineffective and inconsequential.⁵ Such an appeal from an order refusing a new trial may be maintained, even though the reversal of the order will vacate the judgment and the time to appeal from the judgment has expired.⁶

and that on such appeal being taken, the cases shall be tried de novo in the appellate court, it is error for the appellate court to try such a case as upon a petition in error. State v. Young, 6 Kan. 37.

Upon an appeal to the general term of the Supreme Court of New York from an interlocutory judgment of the special term, and upon motion for a new trial made, the judgment was affirmed and the motion for new trial denied, one order embracing both decisions. Held, that an appeal from that order was well taken, so far as related to the order denying a new trial. Kelsey v. Sargent, 104 N. Y. 663.

Contra.—Under the Missouri practice, when exception is taken to the granting of a new trial, the party complaining must wait until final judgment and then appeal from the judgment. Smith etc. Implement Co. v. Wheeler, 27 Mo. App. 16.

The decision on a petition for a new trial is not an interlocutory order so as to deprive the appellate court of jurisdiction of an appeal from such decision. Husted v. Mead, 58 Conn. 55.

By the New York Code Civil Proc., the court of appeals has jurisdiction to review every actual determination made at general term where a final judgment has been rendered, and to review an order granting or refusing a new trial. It is further provided that where a judgment has been reversed, and a new trial ordered, there can be no appeal from the judgment of reversal, but on appeal from the order the judgment must be reviewed; and an appeal to the general term from a final judgment on a verdict can only be taken on questions of law, the facts being reviewable only on appeal from an order on a motion for new trial. On appeal from a judgment and order denying a new trial, the general term refused to consider the facts, but heard the appeal from the judgment. Held, that the court of appeals had jurisdiction of an appeal from the order of the general term granting a new trial, and on such appeal was required to review the judgment of reversal. Pharis v. Gere, 112 N. Y. 408.

6. Effect of Reversal.—As a general rule, a judgment or order of the appellate court reversing an order denying a motion for a new trial, or affirming an order granting a motion for a new trial, expressed in general and unrestricted terms, like an order of the trial court granting a new trial, opens anew all the questions at issue in the case.¹ But the cause must be proceeded with in the court below, in accordance with the rulings of the appellate court as expressed in its decision of the motion and order remanding the case.² In States in which the appellate court is empowered either to affirm, reverse or modify the judgment or determination of the court below, it may affirm as to part and reverse as to part, and order a new trial as to the part reversed only.³

Where, upon reversal of a decree founded upon a verdict, the remittitur, upon notice to the parties, was made a part of the decree in the court below, and entered as a finality of the litigation by an order of the chancellor, and a motion made by parties in interest to set such order aside was overruled. The legal effect of the reversal by the appellate court of the judgment of the court below, based upon the verdict of a jury, was to have granted a new trial in the case, and it was error to have adjudged the rights of the parties to the litigation upon the motion. Miller v. Jourdan, 43 Ga. 316.

Where issue has been joined and trial had on evidence on the merits, defendant, having filed no exception, nor even prayed for a dismissal, a judgment maintaining an exception and dismissing the suit, is not responsive to the issues tendered, and cannot be reviewed on the merits by the appellate tribunal, but will be set aside and the cause remanded for a new trial on the issues. Wood v. Daboval, 40 La. An. 256.

2. State v. Newkirk, 49 Mo. 472.

In Maryland, it is held that when a decree of a circuit court is reversed in the appellate court, and the cause remanded with instructions, and the circuit court passes a new decree, in strict conformity to the instructions, such decree has the force and effect of a judgment of the appellate court, and an appeal therefrom cannot be entertained. Graff v. Barnum, 33 Md. 283.

3. Braunsdorf v. Fellner, 76 Wis. 1; Boyd v. Brown, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 458.

Correction of Mistake in Decision.—

Where, on appeal from a judgment for defendant, non obstante veredicto, the supreme court intend simply to reverse the judgment, but, by inadvertence, the words "and a new trial must be had in the court below, and we so adjudge," are added to the opinion after the words "the judgment is reversed," the court may, on discovering the error, and without notice to the parties, strike out the former words, and the trial court thereafter properly renders judgment on the verdict for plaintiff without a new trial. Summerlin v. Cowles (N. Car. 1890), 12 S. E. Rep. 234. So a general term order or judgment, reversing a judgment below and dismissing the complaint, may be amended so as to order a new trial, instead of a dismissal of the complaint. Giles v. Austin, 34 N. Y. Super. Ct. 540.

Restitution.—In cases of reversal on appeal from a final order in summary proceedings, the common pleas court is required to order restitution to the defendant; but the power of restitution is merely collateral to the disposition of the appeal, and therefore does not exclude the construction by which the larger power to order a new trial is given. Moench v. Young, 18 Civil Proc. Rep. (N. Y.) 259; s. c., 9 N. Y. Supp. 637.

"Next Assizes."—The "next assizes," as a time when an appeal was to be heard, held to mean not the next assizes, strictly and technically, but the next assizes at which the appeal could have been lawfully heard. Burns v. Collum, 4 L. R. I. 493.

"Next Before."—Under the Minnesota statute which provides that notice of an administrator's sale shall be published three weeks successively, "next before such sale," it was held, nine days having elapsed between the last publication and the day of sale, that the sale was void. *Hartley v. Under Stat. 2 & 3, Wm. Next election by the people, occurring in a provision in a California statute, that the commission of a judge, appointed by the governor to fill a vacancy, shall expire at the "next election by the people," means the next election after the vacancy happens; and not the next judicial election. *People v. "Next" in Some Instances Equivalent to "Instant."—Where a contract for sale of reversionary interests was signed on the 15th Dec., 1885, and the day of completion was therein fixed for "the 28th of December next," and if not then completed interest to run on the next unpaid purchase money from that day, it was held that the day appointed for completion was the 28th Dec., 1885—i. e., that "next" was in that connection equivalent to "instant," for that "the 28th of Dec. next" was to be read as one noun substantive and meant the next 28th Dec. following the 15th Dec., 1885—viz, the 28th Dec., 1885. Dawes

Next Regular Sessions.—As used in the Ill. Const. of 1870, art. 4, § 18, "Each general assembly shall provide for all the appropriations necessary for the ordinary and contingent expenses of the government until the expiration of the first fiscal quarter after the adjournment of the next regular session," means the end of the first fiscal quarter after the adjournment of the second regular session of the general assembly held after the adoption of the constitution. *People v. Next Session.—Under an act authorizing the governor to appoint a supervisor, subject to the approval of the senate at its "next session," next session means the next session in fact, whether special or regular. State v. Williams, 20 S. Car. 12.

Next Term.—In Iowa, where, by attachment, the defendant is required to appear and answer at the "next term," the next general term will be intended, unless a special term had been appointed at the time of the issuing of the writ. Wilke v. Jones, 1 Morr. (Iowa) 97.

Under a statute requiring an action to be entered at the term of court holden next after its removal to the court, an action was removed by an order passed March 2, which also was the first day of a term. Held, that the next subsequent term, and not the term commencing March 2, was the next term within the meaning of the law. *French v. A writ being made returnable at the "term next to be holden," the term being fixed by general statute is sufficiently definite without stating the day on which the term would begin. Dean v. Swift, 11 Vt. 311.

The question is whether "the next term succeeding that at which the accused shall have been arraigned," means the next term of the trial court appointed by law, without regard to the condition and situation of the case, or does it mean the next term after the arraignment at which the petition "for a change of venue" might properly be presented to the court. After due consideration we have concluded that we ought to give the statute the latter construction. State v. Sasse, 72 Wis. 3. See generally Smith v. Cutler, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 589; s. c., 25 Am. tained, 703.

I. DEFINITION.—The next of kin of a decedent are the persons or person nearest in degree of blood surviving him. LORD COKE defined the next of kin to be, "the next of blood who are not attainted of treason, felony, or have any other lawful disability."²

The practical difference between "next of kin" and "heirs at law" is that the former take the personal property, while the latter take the real estate.³ In the United States, where primogeniture is not recognized as a rule of descent, the "next of kin," in the majority of cases, are the same as the heirs at law. But in many cases they may be different. Thus, in some of the States personal property is distributed to the parents of the intestate, while the real estate vests in his brothers and sisters. In such a case the parents take the personal property as next of kin, while the brothers and sisters take the real estate as heirs at law.

II. HOW NEXT OF KIN ARE ASCERTAINED.—No one is included within the term "next of kin," who does not come within the statutes of distribution. In England and the United States statutes of distribution, modeled upon the 118th novel of Justinian, have been enacted, which define with precision the order of preference among kindred. In construing these statutes the courts have generally applied the rules of the civil law in ascertaining the proximity of kindred.⁴ In determining lineal consanguinity each step up or down from the decedent counts as one degree. Thus an intestate and his son or father are related in the first degree; an intestate and his grandson or grandfather are related in the second degree. In determining collateral consanguinity the rule is to count up from the intestate to the common ancestor and then down to the person whose kinship with the intestate is sought to be ascertained. In this computation, each step, both in the ascending and descending lines, counts as one degree. Thus an intestate and his brother are related in the second degree, an intestate and his cousin in the fourth degree.⁵

5. 2 Black. Com. 202, 207. In Lee v. Sedgwick, 1 Root (Conn.) 52, administration was granted to the daughter in

In cases of distribution, relatives of the intestate on the father's side and the mother's side stand on an equal footing. It follows from this that there may be relatives, distant from the intestate by an equal number of degrees, who are not related to each other, but who have equal rights in the distribution of the intestate's estate, and stand on an equal footing as to rights of administration.¹

In the distribution of personal property the half blood is entitled equally with the whole blood.²

In some cases the law discriminates between persons of the same degree of kinship, but of different classes. Thus grandparents and brothers and sisters are both of the second degree, but it is considered that the ties of kinship are closer between the intestate and his brothers and sisters than between him and his grandparents, and preference is, therefore, accorded to the former. On the same principle descendants are preferred to ascendants in the same degree.³

The civil law preferred lineal to collateral kindred of whatever degree, except in the case of brothers and sisters, but at common law preference is given to nearer collateral kin over more remote lineal kin.⁴

In most of the United States, in cases of administration, preference is given to the father, as next of kin, over the mother, where the intestate has died without leaving widow or issue to survive him.

A husband and wife, not being related to each other by blood, are not considered next of kin to each other.⁵

preference to the son of the eldest son of the intestate.

III. GIFTS TO NEXT OF KIN.—Where a devise or bequest is made to the next of kin without reference to the statute, only those persons take who strictly answer this description. Thus, where a gift is to A, and at his decease to his next of kin, and A dies leav-

Keteltas v. Keteltas, 72 N. Y. 312; Hamlin v. Osgood, 1 Redf. (N. Y.) 409; Slosson v. Lynch, 43 Barb. (N. Y.) 147; Donnington v. Mitchell, 2 N. J. Eq. 247; Waters v. Tazewell, 9 Md. 291; Peterson v. Webb, 4 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 56; Ivin's Appeal, 106 Pa. St. 176; Tillman v. Davis, 95 N. Y. 17; Stall v. Kurtz, 28 Ohio St. 192; Succession 7 Williamson, 3 La. An. 261.

"The words 'next of kin' are limited in legal meaning, as in common use, to blood relations, and do not include a husband or wife, unless accompanied by other words clearly manifesting a purpose to extend their signification; and the mere addition of a reference to the statutes of distribution is not sufficient," per GRAY, C. J., in Haraden v. Larrabee, 113 Mass. 430.

In New York "next of kin" (as used in 2 R. S. 451, § 23, authorizing actions against the next of kin to recover back the assets) means those to whom, under the statute of distributions, the personal estate of the deceased would pass. It therefore includes the widow of the deceased. Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Hinman, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 410; s. c., 13 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 110.

As used in the statutes authorizing action for causing death, the term does not include husband or wife. The phrase is used to signify relatives of a person who has died intestate. Green v. Hudson River R. Co., 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 25. In Peet v. Commerce etc. R. Co., 70 Tex. 522, the will of a married woman contained the following clause: "I give and bequeath to my beloved husband, in trust for my legal heirs, my street railroad property in the city of D., known as the C. Railroad, together with all stock, live and rolling, franchises and rights pertaining to the same, and direct that he superintend the management of the same . . . and after paying all expenses incidental to the running, maintaining, and keeping said property in good condition, the remainder of the revenues derived from the management of said property, I direct shall be paid over to my legal heirs, share and share alike, with remainder after my husband's death, or the relinquishment of said trust by him for any cause to my legal heirs." In Texas, the husband of one dying intestate, without child or descendants, takes all her personal estate. Testatrix left no issue. The court held, in a proceeding by judgment creditors of her husband to reach the testatrix's shares of stock, that the words "legal heirs" meant her next of kin and did not include her husband.

1. Thus in Hoskins v. Morel, T. U. P. Charlt. (Ga.) 69, where two claimants for the appointment of administrator were in equal degree of affinity to the deceased, the one of them who was residuary legatee of one-quarter of the estate, real and personal, was held to have the preferable right. See also Clay v. Jackson, T. U. P. Charlt. (Ga.) 71; Leverett v. Dismukes, 10 Ga. 98; Moody v. Moody, 29 Ga. 519.

In New York the surrogate has power to select, from two persons, equally akin to the deceased, the one he deems more suitable, and appoint him sole administrator. Taylor v. Delancy, 2 Cal. Cas. (N. Y.) 143.

Under 3 N. Y. Rev. Stat. (5th ed.) 158, prescribing the order in which the next of kin shall be entitled to letters of administration—an intestate's married daughter, over twenty-one years of age, is entitled to the administration of his estate in preference to the guardian of a minor son. 1870, Cottle v. Vanderheyden, 56 Barb. (N. Y.) 622; 39 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 289.

Under article 93, § 23 of the Maryland Code, a grandson of an intestate, though indebted to the estate, is entitled to letters of administration in preference to a granddaughter; and the orphans' court has no power to deprive him of the right. Cook v. Carr, 19 Md. 1.

A died, leaving three sisters and one brother. The eldest sister was older than the brother, and unmarried. The other sisters were married. It was agreed by all concerned in the estate, ing a brother and the children of a deceased brother, the brother takes, to the exclusion of the children of the deceased brother.¹

In the case of devises or bequests, all persons of equal degree take, although, under the statute, one class may be preferred to another.²

that the eldest sister should administer the estate, and she expressed an intention to do so. She left the State to be gone for a month. In her absence, the husband of one of the sisters, without notice to or consent of the other parties, applied for and obtained the administration. Held, that the eldest sister was entitled to the administration of the estate, and the decree of the orphans' court, revoking the letters granted to her sister's husband, was confirmed. Owings v. Bates, 9 Gill (Md.) 463.

1. Elmsley v. Young, 2 Myl. & K. 780; Redmond v. Burrough, 63 N. Car. 242; Brookfield v. Allen, 6 Allen (Mass.) 585; Lucas v. Brandreth, 28 Beav. 274; Avison v. Simpson, 1 Johns. 43. In Harrison v. Ward, 5 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 240, a daughter was held entitled to take exclusive of another daughter, deceased.

A testator gave property to his "nearest relations." Held, that his brothers took, to the exclusion of nephews and nieces. Locke v. Locke, 45 N. J. Eq. 97.

The words "next heir" in a will are words of purchase, not of limitation. In re Parry's Contract, 55 L. J. R., Ch. 237.

The words "next male kin" indicate a class. Re Chapman W. N. (83) 232. Where there is a bequest to the next of kin of a particular name, it has been held in some cases that change of name by marriage is immaterial. Pyot v. Pyot, 1 Ves. 335; Carpenter v. Bott, 15 Sim. 606; Mortimer v. Hartley, 6 Exch. 60.

In Jobson's Case, Cro. El. 576, however, where the gift was to "the next of kin of my name," the daughter of a brother, who was married at the testator's death, did not take. See also Leigh v. Leigh, 15 Ves. 100; Doe v. Plumtre, 3 B. & Ald. 474.

Next Personal or Legal Representatives.—Under a gift to a person's "next personal representatives," or "next legal representatives," his nearest of kin, in blood, will take. Booth v. Vickers, 13 L. J., Ch. 147; 1 Coll. C. C. 6; Withy v. Mangles, 10 L. J., Ch. 391; 10 Cl. & F. 215; Stockdale v. Nichol- son, 36 L. J., Ch. 793; L. R., 4 Eq. 359.

2. The preference given to one class over another when all are in the same degree, seems to hold good only under the statutes of distribution and administration. Where the term "next of kin" is used in a will or a deed a different rule applies. This is illustrated by the interesting case of Withy v. Mangles, 4 Beav. 358. In that case a settlement was made on the marriage of Emily Mangles, by which the ultimate limitation of personal property was "to such person or persons as at the time of the death of Emily Mangles would be her next of kin." Emily died, leaving a father, mother and a child. The court held that, under this limitation, the father, the mother and child took as her next of kin in joint tenancy. The master of the rolls, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "Whatever arbitrary distinctions may have been adopted in computing collateral degrees of consanguinity, all writers upon the law of England appear to concur in stating, that, in the ascending and descending line, the parents and children are in equal degree of kindred to the proposed person; and I think that, except for the purpose of administration and distribution in cases of intestacy, and except in cases where the simple expression may be controlled by the context, the law of England does consider them to be in equal degree of consanguinity."

"The law of England gives a preference to the child over the parent in distribution; but I think that we cannot therefore conclude, that with respect to every disposition of property, made in words to give the same to persons equally near of kin, the parents are to be held more remote than the child. If, in this case, the words of the limitation had, in any way, referred to the law of distribution, there would have been a guide to the interpretation; but there is no such reference. The words stand by themselves simply, the limitation is to the next or nearest of kin, and I cannot take upon myself to say, that the settler had in his contemplation the law

If, however, the testator refers expressly to the next of kin according to the statute, and does not state how they are to take, the beneficiaries take according to the proportions directed by the statute.¹

The term "next of kin" has reference to the death of the ancestor, and those who are entitled to take under that term are to be ascertained at the death of the ancestor.²

NIGHT—(See BURGLARY; PROCESS).—That space of time during which the sun is below the horizon of the earth, except that short space which precedes its rising and follows its setting, during which, by its light, the countenance of a man may be discerned. In most of the States, however, night is defined by statute.³

of distribution of intestate's effects, and intended a limitation in conformity with that law. To act upon such an hypothesis would be, in effect, to introduce into the settlement an implied reference to the law of distribution of personal estates in cases of intestacy, and it does not appear to me that this can safely be done.

"Conceiving, therefore, that by the law of England, the father, the mother and child of any proposed person are equally near of kin to such person, I am of opinion that at the time of Mrs. Withy's death, her father, mother and child, being her next of kin, the limitation took effect in their favor; and I think that they took the property limited to them as joint tenants."

The testator may, however, direct the class of next of kin to be ascertained at any time which he may choose. Pinder v. Pinder, 28 Beav. 44; White v. Springett, 4 Ch. 300.

If the gift is, after the decease of the tenant for life, to such persons as shall then be my next of kin, the word "then" must refer to the death of the tenant for life. Long v. Blackall, 3 Ves. 486; Wharton v. Barker, 4 K. & J. 483;

If, however, the word then is used as the equivalent of thereupon, the rule does not apply. In Bullock v. Downes, 9 H. L. 1, the testator gave the residue of his estate to three persons, in trust, to pay the dividends to his son for life, and after the son's decease to pay to any widow of the son (who was not then married) an annuity of £600 for life, and the residue to his son's children, and, in case there should not be any child of the son "then to stand possessed of the same in trust for such persons or person of the blood of me, as would by virtue of the Statutes of Distribution of Intestates' Effects have become and been then entitled thereto, in case I had died intestate." At testator's death, he left the son and four daughters him surviving. The son married, enjoyed the dividend of the residue during life, and died without ever having had a child. The court held that the word "then," even if treated as an adverb of time, referred only to the time when the persons entitled would come into possession of what had been bequeathed to them; and that the persons entitled were to be ascertained at the death of the testator

NIGHT WALKER.—Night walkers are persons who make themselves a common nuisance by going about nights committing bawdry or other petty offences or annoyances.¹

The presence of sufficient daylight to discern a man's features has long been adopted as a criterion to determine whether or not the act was done in the night-time within the meaning of the law applicable to the crime of burglary. People v. Griffin, 19 Cal. 578. See also Trull v. Wilson, 9 Mass. 154.

A complaint for an offence committed in the night-time of a particular day may be dated on the same day. Commonwealth v. Flynn, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 525.

"At Night" in an Insurance Policy.—The policy stipulates that the assured, a country merchant, should keep a set of books, and that the books should be kept in a fireproof safe "at night," and at all times when the store was not actually open for business; the books to be produced in case of loss by fire, and, upon failure to produce them, the policy to be null and void. In a suit on the policy the evidence showed that it was customary for the merchants of the neighborhood to keep their stores open as late as nine or eleven o'clock at night, and that the loss occurred about nine o'clock when the store was open for business and the plaintiff posting his books, the most of the books being lost. Held, that "at night" in the sense of the policy did not mean from sunset to sunrise, but from the merchant's closing until his opening hour. Jones v. Southern Ins. Co., 38 Fed. Rep. 21.

"Sabbath Night."—Where a statute made it an offence to keep open a tippling shop on the Sabbath day or night, it was held that a count of an indictment charging the offence to have been committed between midnight of Saturday and the morning of Sunday sufficiently charged its commission on Sabbath night to withstand a motion to quash. Kroer v. People, 78 Ill. 294.

Since the passing of St. 1847, ch. 13; Gen. Stat. of Mass., ch. 172, § 13, for defining "the time of night-time in criminal prosecutions," it is sufficient to allege, generally, that an offence was committed in the night-time, without designating the particular hour of the night; and by such allegation is to be understood the period of night-time as defined in that statute. Commonwealth v. Williams, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 582.

An indictment on Rev. Stat. of Mass., ch. 126, § 5, which imposes a punishment on "every person who shall wilfully and maliciously burn either in the night-time or in the daytime" any building therein described, is not fatally defective by reason of its describing an offence as having been committed in the night-time, between the hour of sunset on one day and the hour of sunrise on the next day, notwithstanding St. 1847, ch. 13; Gen. Stat., ch. 172, § 13, defining the time of night-time in criminal prosecutions to be "the time between one hour after the sunsetting on one day and one hour before sunrise on the next day." Commonwealth v. Lamb, 1 Gray (Mass.) 493.

In the absence of a motion for a bill of particulars, a charge that defendant is "a common night walker" is a sufficient description of the offence. State v. Russell, 14 R. I. 506.

2. A return of a sheriff appropriate to a writ of scire facias. It is a fuller return than that of non est inventus, and it means "that the defendant has nothing in the bailiwick, no dwelling-house, no family, no residence and no personal presence to enable the officer to make the service required by the act of assembly." "Nihil" is a good return to a writ of summons. Sherer v. Easton Bank, 33 Pa. St. 139.

I. IN GENERAL—1. Definition and Use.—Nolle prosequi, usually abbreviated into nol. pros., is a technical term of English law, used both in criminal and civil cases. It may be defined as a for-

1. Anderson's Law Dict.

"A continuance is an adjournment to a time certain; a continuance nisi is to a time certain unless something shall occur to cause action upon the case before that time." Commonwealth v. Maloney, 145 Mass. 208.

Judgment Nisi.—What is called a judgment nisi is nothing more than a rule to show cause why judgment should not be rendered. Young v. M'Pherson, 3 N. J. L. 455. As to decree nisi in divorce suits, see DIVORCE, 5 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law 745.

2. The abbreviation "No." signifies the word number and nothing else. Burr v. Broadway Ins. Co., 16 N. Y. 271.

No More.—Where a testator gave legacies to each of his children and heirs at law, except one, and ended each bequest with the words, "and no more," and finally gave all of his realty to this son, without words of limitation, and without repeating the phrase "and no more," it was held that the son took an estate in fee. Hitch v. Patten (Del.), 16 Atl. Rep. 558.

No Costs.—An agreement of tenants to an action of dower to "submit to judgment for plaintiff for dower, no costs," construed under the circumstances, to refer only to costs up to the time of judgment for dower, and not to costs of the subsequent proceedings for the admeasurement of dower. Smith v. Smith, 4 R. I. 370.

"No Man's Land."—The court of the Eastern District of Texas has jurisdiction of "No Man's Land." In re Jackson, 40 Fed. Rep. 372.

"No Order."—Plaintiff took out a summons before a judge at chambers for costs, under 13 & 14 Vict., ch. 61, § 13. The judge endorsed the summons with the words, "No order;" "that is, as I understand it, equivalent to a dismissal of the summons." CAMPBELL, C. J., in Merredith v. Gittings, 18 Q. B. 257; s. c., 83 E. C. L. 258.

No Particular Provocation Appearing.—The words, "no particular provocation appearing," are proper in an indictment for aggravated assault, under § 1293 Gantt's Ark. Dig., but are surplusage in an indictment for an assault with intent to commit murder. Butler v. State, 34 Ark. 480.

"No Question as to the Validity."—The endorsement on a policy that there would be "no question as to the validity" of the same, unless raised in a certain way, held to preclude the insurance company from interposing the defence of fraudulent representations in an action on the policy, and not to be against public policy. Wright v. Mutual Ben. L. Assoc., 26 N. Y. Wk. Dig. 18.

"No Tenant."—The owner of a house is not liable, under a Boston ordinance that provides that snow shall be removed from the sidewalk by the "tenant, occupant, and, in case there shall be no tenant, by the owner," where there are two tenants of the house, but no sole tenant on whom to fix the liability. Commonwealth v. Watson, 97 Mass. 562.

mal undertaking or agreement, entered on the record by the plaintiff or prosecutor, that he will, either wholly or partially, forbear to proceed further with the action or bill (se ulterius nolle prosecute), or that he will proceed no further against certain of the defendants.

The principal use of a nolle prosecute in civil cases was to clear the record of improper parties or objectionable counts, or parts of counts. It is now almost entirely superseded by the modern practice of discontinuance or amendment, but may be still found useful in some instances. In criminal cases its object is much the same, and it is usual to enter it during the trial or after conviction, so as to confine the verdict to those counts and parties which are good. Another object for which it is often used in criminal trials is to stay proceedings against an accomplice in order to secure his evidence. This latter is, however, now usually effected by the prosecution offering no evidence and the judge directing an acquittal.

2. Nature and Effect.—The effect of a nolle prosecute, in both civil and criminal cases, is simply that of an agreement to proceed no further in that particular suit or part of the suit, or prosecution; or as to some of the defendants. It is not in the nature of a retraxit or a release¹ in civil cases, or of an acquittal² in criminal prosecutions, and is not a bar to a future action for the same cause,³ or to another indictment for the same crime.⁴

(a) In Civil Cases.—Formerly a nolle prosecute was thought to be a bar to a second civil action for the same cause, but it is not so now, except in those cases where, from the nature of the action—as for technical reasons in the case of joint contractors under the old common-law rules—judgment and execution against one is a satisfaction for all the damages sustained by the plaintiff.⁵

"It has long been settled that a nolle prosecute does not amount to a retraxit, and that it may be entered as to a part of the suit, or as to one of the defendants, where the action is in its nature joint and several, or where the defendants sever in their pleas. Thus, in trespass, or other action founded upon tort,

(b) In Criminal Cases.—In criminal cases a nolle prosequi is not, as such, a bar to a fresh indictment for the same offence.¹ However, if, at the time the proceedings are stayed by a nolle prosequi, the defendant has been put in jeopardy, that fact will, of course, release him from the second indictment, upon his pleading second jeopardy, or autrefois acquit, as the case may be.

II. NOLLE PROSEQUI IN CIVIL ACTIONS.—To narrow slightly the definition before given: nolle prosequi, in civil practice, is an agreement or acknowledgment entered of record by the plaintiff in an action that he will forbear, either wholly or partially, to proceed in the particular action; or that he will proceed no further against one or more of the defendants. From the definition it appears that there are two distinct classes of cases in which a nolle prosequi may be used in civil practice; first, where it is entered as to some of the counts of the declaration; and, second, where it is entered as to some of the parties to the action.

1. Nolle Prosequi as to Part of the Declaration.—A nolle prosequi may be entered as to any of several counts in a declaration, or to any part of the action, without turning the plaintiff out of court as to the other counts, or the remaining part of the suit.² After a count is nol. pros'd, it is considered as stricken out of the declaration, except so far as it is referred to by the other counts, and the only effect of the nolle prosequi is to strike from the record that count and all the issues joined upon it. The residue of the issues remain to be tried the same as if no other had been formed.³ the plaintiff may enter it at any time before final judgment, as to one or more of the defendants, and proceed against the others." SMITH, J., in Beidman v. Vanderslice, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 334.

It is not erroneous to enter a nolle prosequi as to one count of a declaration, even after the jury is sworn, and proceed to trial on the other counts. Breckenridge v. Lee, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 446. Or when a count is adjudged bad on demurrer. Brown v.

Feeter, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 301. A nolle prosequi as to one count of a declaration on a promissory note and money paid does not admit the truth of a plea of the statute of limitations. Keeler v. Bartine, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 110. Where the plaintiff declares on a promissory note and the money counts, he can enter a nolle prosequi upon the latter and have his damages assessed by the clerk, or he may proceed by writ of enquiry, but the defendant cannot compel him to enter a nolle prosequi. *Beard v. Next Regular Sessions.—As used in the Ill. Const. of 1870, art. 4, § 18, "Each general assembly shall provide for all the appropriations necessary for the ordinary and contingent expenses of the government until the expiration of the first fiscal quarter after the adjournment of the next regular session," means the end of the first fiscal quarter after the adjournment of the second regular session of the general assembly held after the adoption of the constitution. People v. Lippincott, 64 Ill. 256.

Next Session.—Under an act authorizing the governor to appoint a supervisor, subject to the approval of the senate at its "next session," next session means the next session in fact, whether special or regular. State v. Williams, 20 S. Car. 12.

Next Term.—In Iowa, where, by attachment, the defendant is required to appear and answer at the "next term," the next general term will be intended, unless a special term had been appointed at the time of the issuing of the writ. Wilke v. Jones, 1 Morr. (Iowa) 97.

Under a statute requiring an action to be entered at the term of court holden next after its removal to the court, an action was removed by an order passed March 2, which also was the first day of a term. Held, that the next subsequent term, and not the term commencing March 2, was the next term within the meaning of the law. French v. Barnard, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 403. See also Durell v. Merrill, 1 Mass. 411.

The phrase next term, in the act of 1799, meant the term holden after the termination of the circuit court. Moodie v. Vandyke, 4 Yeates (Pa.) 512.

In reference to appeals, the expression "next term" excludes a present or existing session of the court appealed to, and carries the appeal to the next succeeding term. Town of Shelburn v. Eldridge, 10 Vt. 123.

A writ being made returnable at the "term next to be holden," the term being fixed by general statute is sufficiently definite without stating the day on which the term would begin. Dean v. Swift, 11 Vt. 311.

The question is whether "the next term succeeding that at which the accused shall have been arraigned," means the next term of the trial court appointed by law, without regard to the condition and situation of the case, or does it mean the next term after the arraignment at which the petition "for a change of venue" might properly be presented to the court. After due consideration we have concluded that we ought to give the statute the latter construction. State v. Sasse, 72 Wis. 3. See generally Smith v. Cutler, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 589; s. c., 25 Am. Dec. 580.

Next Two Months.—Evidence was held properly admissible that in the iron trade a custom prevails whereby the entire months of July and August would be included in the terms "during the next two months" in a contract entered into on June 17. Bissell v. Beard, 28 L. T., N. S. 740.

"Day Next Appointed."—As to the phrase "day next appointed" for holding brewster sessions, in the Sunday Closing (Wales) act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict., ch. 61, § 3, see Richards v. Macbride, 8 Q. B. discharging the others.¹

(b) In Actions Ex Delicto.—In the case of joint tortfeasors, separate actions are maintainable against each of them, and, therefore, in all actions ex delicto, a nolle prosequi may be entered as to part of the defendants, and proceedings continued against the others.²

III. NOLLE PROSEQUI IN CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.—A nolle prosequi in criminal proceedings is the voluntary withdrawal by the prosecuting authority of present proceedings on a particular bill or information. Many reasons may arise which make it desirable to enter it before trial, and the practice is usual after verdict to enter it upon objectionable counts or parts of counts, so as to disencumber the record and confine the verdict to those which are good. Nolle prosequi after verdict is sometimes used as a method for recording executive clemency.

1. When It May be Entered.—There are three periods of the prosecution in which the question of the entry of a nolle prosequi may arise—before a jury is empanelled, while the case is on trial, and after verdict.

(a) Before Trial.—In the first stage, the right of the prosecution to enter a nolle prosequi at pleasure is perfectly clear.³ Numerous considerations may move him to do this. The indictment may be defective, and he may desire to procure another. It may be discovered that the evidence will turn out different from what was expected, and the charge must be varied to correspond with the proof; or, there may be good reasons for not prosecuting at all.

(b) During Trial.—When a jury is empanelled for the trial of an indictment, the defendant then acquires new rights. Whether he shall be put on trial or not depends upon the will of the prosecution. But when once put on his trial, and a jury sworn, it is the defendant's right to have them pass upon his case. Their verdict will be a bar to another indictment for the same offence, but a nolle prosequi will not. The defendant is entitled to this bar. Therefore, at this stage of the proceedings a nolle prosequi cannot be entered without the consent of the defendant.⁴

(c) After Verdict.—After a verdict of guilty, the defendant is

4. See the cases cited in the note immediately preceding and also in the following note:

In cases of distribution, relatives of the intestate on the father's side and the mother's side stand on an equal footing. It follows from this that there may be relatives, distant from the intestate by an equal number of degrees, who are not related to each other, but who have equal rights in the distribution of the intestate's estate, and stand on an equal footing as to rights of administration.¹

In the distribution of personal property the half blood is entitled equally with the whole blood.²

In some cases the law discriminates between persons of the same degree of kinship, but of different classes. Thus grandparents and brothers and sisters are both of the second degree, but it is considered that the ties of kinship are closer between the intestate and his brothers and sisters than between him and his grandparents, and preference is, therefore, accorded to the former. On the same principle descendants are preferred to ascendants in the same degree.³

The civil law preferred lineal to collateral kindred of whatever degree, except in the case of brothers and sisters, but at common law preference is given to nearer collateral kin over more remote lineal kin.⁴

In most of the United States, in cases of administration, preference is given to the father, as next of kin, over the mother, where the intestate has died without leaving widow or issue to survive him.

A husband and wife, not being related to each other by blood, are not considered next of kin to each other.⁵

come a matter of record to prevent a revival of proceedings on the original bill. If, however, the jury has been actually empanelled, then, unless the defendant consented to the entry, it will operate as an acquittal.¹ It may be otherwise in cases where the defendant has not been put in jeopardy, and the local law allows a nolle prosequi during trial.²

No personal agreement by the prosecuting officer will make a nolle prosequi a bar. In State v. Lopez, 19 Mo. 254, the circuit attorney in open court agreed with a defendant, against whom there were several indictments, that if he would plead guilty to some, he should be discharged as to the others. The defendant then pleaded guilty to four of the counts, and a nolle prosequi was entered on the record as to the remainder. It was held that the nolle prosequi could not have the legal effect of a retraxit by the agreement.

3. The plea of nolo contendere to an indictment has the same effect as a plea of guilty, so far as regards the proceedings on the indictment; and a defendant who is sentenced upon such plea, to pay a fine, is convicted of the offence for which he was indicted. But a plea of nolo contendere, with a protestation of the defendant's innocence, will not conclude him in a civil action from disputing the facts charged in the indictment. Com. v. Horton, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 206.

In Com. v. Tilton, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 232, SHAW, C. J., said: "This plea, like a demurrer, admits, for the purposes of the case, all the facts which are well stated, but is not to be used as an admission elsewhere."

In United States v. Hartwell, 3 Cliff. (U. S.) 221, CLIFFORD, J., said: "Attempt was made at the argument to set up a distinction between the plea of nolo contendere and the plea of guilty, but the suggestion is entitled to no weight, as it is well settled that the legal effect of the former is the same as that of the latter, so far as regards all the proceedings on the indictment."

NON-CLAIM, STATUTES OF.—Those statutes of limitation common to most of the States of the Union which are applicable to demands against the estates of deceased persons. These statutes are called frequently special statutes of limitation. The limitations created by them exist independent of and collateral to the general statutes of limitation, and require claims against the estates of deceased persons to be exhibited to the executor or administrator within such periods of time as are prescribed, and if rejected, sued upon also within such periods of time as are prescribed.⁴

wholly disregarded. The fair construction of this statute is that conditions in a conveyance which evince no intention of actual or substantial benefit to the grantor are merely "nominal." Barrie v. Smith, 47 Mich. 130. See also Monroe v. Bowen, 26 Mich. 523.

Nominal Plaintiff.—One who is named as plaintiff in an action, but who has no interest in it, having assigned the cause or right of action to another, for whose use it is brought; in general, he cannot interfere with the rights of his assignee, nor will he be permitted to discontinue the action or meddle with it. See Bouv. L. Dict. See also PARTIES TO ACTION; REMOVAL OF CAUSES.

1. Nominate.—See APPOINT, 1 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law 631, note.

In an agreement for reference, a provision that each party shall "nominate" a referee means not only naming him, but also the communication of the nomination to the other party. Tew v. Harris, 11 Q. B. 7.

The nomination of an heir, by such expressions as "I appoint" or "I nominate," passes the land in fee simple. Shark v. Purnell, Hob. 75.

Nominated.—The person nominated by an instrument creating a trust, as the person to appoint new trustees, is the person "nominated" for the purposes of § 31, Conv. & L. P. (act 1881), though the event on which such new appointment becomes necessary was not contemplated at the date of the instrument. Re Walker, 24 Ch. D. 698.

Nominees.—The act 56 Geo. III, ch. 73, which establishes the customs annuity and benevolent fund, and rules made under the authority of that act, provide that a subscriber shall have a limited power of appointment "for the benefit of his widow, children and relatives and for such nominees as shall have been duly admitted by the directors." Upon the construction of this clause it was held that the "nominee" need not take a beneficial interest in the fund and that he cannot take as trustee. Urquhart v. Butterfield, 37 Ch. D. 375.

NON EST INVENTUS—NON-RESIDENT.

NON EST INVENTUS—(See also PROCESS).—Is not found. The sheriff's return to a writ requiring him to arrest the person of the defendant, which signifies that he is not to be found within his jurisdiction. The return is usually abbreviated N. E. I. The English form "not found" is also commonly used.¹

NON PROSEQUITUR—(See also NONSUIT; RETRAXIT; JUDGMENT, 12 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law 61).—Non prosequitur, generally abbreviated into non pros., is a species of judgment against a plaintiff who fails to take in due time, at any stage of the proceedings in an action at law, the steps which he ought to take in accordance with the rules of practice prescribed by the court. Such a judgment is taken when the plaintiff neglects to file a declaration, replication, etc., at the required time. The judgment taken is called judgment of non prosequitur (not followed up), and the plaintiff is said to be non pros'd. Judgments of like nature against a defendant are spoken of as judgments of the nature of non pros. Non prosequitur is technically a final judgment, and will be opened only upon cause shown to the court. Not being upon the merits of the case, it is, however, generally subject to be opened upon due explanation of the failure to take the proper steps within the prescribed time.²

1. Bouv. L. Dict.

"The sheriff's return of 'non est,' although very brief, and also bad grammar when there are two defendants, is in the usual form, and the objection to it was properly overruled." Patterson v. Parker, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 598.

"To be Returned Non Est Inventus."—When a ca. sa. is delivered to the sheriff with an endorsement directing it to be returned non est inventus, the meaning is merely that the sheriff need not look for the defendant; it must be understood with this qualification that, if the defendant surrenders himself, the sheriff must take him. Mangay v. Monger, 4 Q. B. 818; s. c., 45 E. C. L. 820.

2. Judgment by non prosequitur against the plaintiff takes place where the plaintiff, at any stage of the action after appearance, and before judgment, abandons and fails to prosecute his action, as by not filing his pleadings in due succession, etc. In such case the entry is that, having been ruled to file his declaration (or other pleading), and failing so to do, it is ordered that he be nonsuited, and pay, etc. 4 Minor's Inst. 781.

Non Prosequitur.—He does not prosecute. The name of an entry and judgment on the part of the defendant in an action at law, where the plaintiff fails to prosecute his action, or any part of it, in due time. Such an entry and judgment terminate the action, with costs to the defendant. The judgment is termed by abbreviation, judgment of non pros.; and the plaintiff is said to be non pros'd. Abb. L. Dict.

The difference between nonsuit and non pros. is that in the former the plaintiff, being called upon in court to proceed, advisedly abandons the suit, because he sees it is likely to go against him; in the latter, he simply neglects to take the proper steps. Mozley & W.

The word nonsuit is sometimes employed to express any failure on the part of the plaintiff to prosecute his suit, whether upon being called at the trial or at any other time; so that it includes not only the idea of a nonsuit proper, but also of a non prosequitur, and of a nolle prosequi (non pros. and

I. DEFINITION.—A non-resident is one who resides out of the jurisdiction in question.¹ In the general acceptation of the term it means one who resides out of the State. The mere being out of a State, or not domiciled there, does not constitute one a non-resident; a person may be domiciled in a State and yet be a non-resident.² The term is not merely the negative of resident; one who is not a resident is by no means necessarily a non-resident. Thus, one may be unable to vote because he is not a resident within the meaning of the election laws, yet he may at the same time be not a non-resident as regards service of process.³

II. WHEN NON-RESIDENCY COMMENCES.—The non-residence of a party begins as soon as he leaves the State with no present intention of returning; indeed, it has been often considered that one's non-residence was to be reckoned as from the time of his departure from his present place of abode with the intention of becoming a non-resident, so that he may become a non-resident before he has gone beyond the limits of the State.⁴ But this rule is not uni-sol. pros., as they are respectively called). 4 Minor's Inst. 782.

1. Abbott's Law Dict., art. Non-resident; Frost v. Brisbin, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 11; s. c., 32 Am. Dec. 423.

Non-residence is thus defined: "An actual cessation to dwell within a State for an uncertain period without definite intention as to a time for returning, although a general intention to return may exist." Anderson's Law Dict., art. Reside; Weitkamp v. Loeler, 53 N. Y. Super. Ct. 83.

Thus where a mother left the State of Mississippi for that of Alabama in order that she might better attend to the education of her children, although she intended to return to Mississippi after her object had been accomplished, she was considered a non-resident of Mississippi, and therefore subject to the process of foreign attachment provided for such cases. Alston v. Newcomer, 42 Miss. 186; Morgan v. Nunes, 54 Miss. 311; Wheeler v. Cobb, 75 N. Car. 21; Frost v. Brisbin, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 11; s. c., 32 Am. Dec. 423; Long v. Ryan, 30 Gratt. (Va.) 718; Brown v. Ashbough, 40 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 260.

But a mere temporary absence of a few weeks will not constitute the party a non-resident if at the time of departure from the State there was an intention of returning to it at the expiration of that period. Reed's Appeal, 71 Pa. St. 382; Pfoutz v. Comfort, 36 Pa. St. 420.

One's dwelling house determines his place of residence in some cases. Thus on a motion against a plaintiff in equity for security for costs, on the ground that he was a resident of a neighboring State, he proved that he was a man of family with which, so far as known, he lived, and that his dwelling house was fifteen feet within the State line on the Virginia side, it was held that prima facie he was a citizen of Virginia, and therefore not compellable to furnish security for costs. Evans v. Bradshaw, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 207.

3. See RESIDENT—RESIDENCE.

The word resident is used in many different senses, and one may be a resident as regards some purposes, while he is not as regards others. It has a different meaning in almost every statute in which it is used, while the technical "non-resident" always imports one idea only—that of a party who is incapable of being served with process. See PROCESS.

4. Clark v. Ward, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 448; Moore v. Holt, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 284.

In the case of Spalding v. Simms, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 285, this state of facts appeared, viz: Simms left his home at ——— in Kentucky and went to Louisville, intending to leave there on the steamer for a distant State, where he would reside in future. He intended to leave on the twentieth of December, but was unavoidably detained until the

III. HOW PROVEN.—Evidence to prove the intent of a party when leaving a State is always admissible, to determine whether or not he has become a non-resident by so leaving;² and the declarations made by him at the time of removal are admissible as such evidence.³ The non-residency of a party defendant is usually proven in cases where application is made for a foreign attachment, as well as where an order of publication is applied for by the plaintiff's affidavit. This is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction of the question,⁴ twenty-fourth of the month. On the twenty-first of the following April attachments provided for such cases were levied. The statute allowed such attachments to be sued out and levied upon the property of one who has been absent from the State for four months. The court held the attachments valid, saying that the absence from the State was to be considered as dating from the time the party left his home with the intention of leaving the State.

Exchange Bank*, 33 Kan. 100.

In the case of Kugler v. Schreve, 28 N. J. L. 129, the defendant had left the place of his tenancy and placed his goods and chattels in a canal boat lying in the basin at Trenton with the intention of taking them and his family to Pennsylvania. While the goods were yet on the boat an attachment was issued against them as being the goods of a non-resident. The court held, however, that such party did not lose his residence in New Jersey until he had actually left the State with intention of remaining therefrom. See also City Bank v. Merrit, 13 N. J. L. 131; Clark v. Likens, 26 N. J. L. 207.

Such declaration must, however, have been made ante litem motam. Doyle v. Clark, 1 Flip. (U. S.) 536.

But in a case where the debtor has been absent from the State four or five years working as a contractor in the construction of railroads in the adjoining State, it not appearing that he might be absent as many years longer, the declarations of the debtor offered to show that he had not abandoned his home or domicil in the State, are not admissible. Risewick v. Davis, 19 Md. 82.

4. See ATTACHMENT, 1 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law 901, 902, 903. See also NOTICE BY PUBLICATION; PROCESS; N. Y. Code Civ. Proc., §§ 435-438.

Thus it is said in Weber v. Weitling that the proceedings by foreign attachment are not void merely because the defendant was a resident of the State at the time of the issuing of the attachment. By the act the foundation of the proceedings and of the jurisdiction of the court is not the non-residence of the defendant, but the filing of an affidavit by the plaintiff that he believes him to be a non-resident. If such affidavit is made in good faith, the proceedings are not void. The court pending the proceedings will enquire into the truth of the affidavit, and if it appears that the affidavit is not true will arrest the proceedings and quash the attachment; but if the affidavit is regular and made although it is by no means conclusive,¹ but may be rebutted by proper evidence.

IV. IN ATTACHMENT CASES.—The question of non-residency occurs most frequently in cases touching service of process and the validity of foreign attachments. It is provided by statute in most States, inasmuch as non-residents frequently cannot be reached with ordinary process in suits, that a proceeding against them may be commenced by an attachment of their property. An attachment is, therefore, often valid against a non-resident which would not be so as against a resident, and thus the important question of the non-residency of the party is involved.²

Residence, in attachment laws, implies an established abode fixed permanently for a time, for business or other purposes. One's citizenship of a State

I. DEFINITION.—A nonsuit is the result of an abrupt termination of an action at law.¹ It is the name of a judgment given against the plaintiff when he is unable to prove his case, or when he refuses or neglects to proceed to the trial of a cause after it has been put at issue, without determining such issue.² Its origin can be easily traced to a very early period in the history of the common law.³

does not necessarily determine his residence. Absence of such a character, and so prolonged that the person cannot be reached by ordinary process, may amount to non-residence, though the party may have entertained and expressed an intent to return to the State of his former home at some remote and uncertain time. Morgan v. Nunes, 54 Miss. 308.

In the case of Hackettstown Bank v. Mitchell (28 N. J. L. 516), this state of facts existed: A party, M, resided in the State of New York, and his wife, previous to her marriage, and at the time of it, was a resident of this State (i. e., New Jersey), and they were married here. After the marriage in 1859 they went to Europe, Mrs. M intending on their return to remain at her former residence in this State until the fall of 1860. While absent an attachment was issued against them both to recover a debt contracted by the wife before her marriage. On their return from Europe she came to her residence here, where her husband also spent a large part of his time, but retained his residence and attended to his business in New York. It was held that the residence of both was in the State of New York, and that since process by summons could not be served upon the husband, a foreign attachment provided for non-residents was a proper remedy. Story on Conflict of Laws, § 146; Greene v. Greene, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 415.

2. Bouv. Law Dict.

3. Nonsuits at Common Law and Under English Statutes.—Washburn v. Allen, 77 Me. 344. The English practice differs somewhat from that of our own courts. At common law, as early practiced in the English courts, upon every continuance or day given over before judgment, the plaintiff was demandable, and upon his nonappearance might have been nonsuit. Bacon's Abr. Nonsuit, D.; Co. Litt. 139 b. And no verdict could be returned and given unless in his presence or that of his counsel, but the plaintiff was said to be nonsuit. Therefore, it was usual for a plaintiff, when he or his counsel perceived that he had not given evidence sufficient to maintain his issue, to withdraw himself and be voluntarily nonsuited. 3 Black. Com. 376; Murphey v. Donlan, 5 B. & C. 178 (11 Eng. Com. Law 195); and whenever the plaintiff ought to appear in court he was at liberty to withdraw. Co. Litt. 138 b, 139 a; Robinson v. Lawrence, 7 Exch. 123. The plaintiff had a right to be nonsuited at any step of the proceedings he might prefer, and thereby reserve to himself the power of bringing a fresh action for the same subject-matter; and this right continued to the last moment of the trial, even till after verdict rendered; or, where the case was tried by the court without the intervention of a jury, until the judge had pronounced his judgment. Outhwaite v. Hudson, 7 Exch. 380. Consequently, if he was not satisfied with the damages given by the jury, he might become nonsuit. Bacon's Abr. Nonsuit, D.; Keat v. Barker, 5 Modern 208. But by statute, 2 Henry IV, ch. 7 (A. D. 1400), it was ordained and established that if the verdict passed against the plaintiff, he should not be nonsuited, which before that time was otherwise at common law.

Notwithstanding this statute, which was an amendment of the common law, it was held that the plaintiff might be nonsuited after the finding of a special verdict, and the reason of this would seem to be that a special verdict is in the nature of a statement of facts; and also after a demurrer and argument thereon, and a rule for judgment for defendant, though it could not be done at the same term. Bacon's Abr. Nonsuit, D.; Alderly v. Alderly, Cro. Jac. 35. And this statute was afterwards construed as applying only to cases where the jury had passed upon the whole matter. Earl of Oxford v. Waterhouse, Cro. Jac. 575; Com. Dig. Pleader W. 5. Except in the cases above stated, the plaintiff could always become nonsuit upon any continuance.

2. Involuntary Nonsuits.—Nonsuits are involuntary when granted against the plaintiff's will.² In some jurisdictions involuntary nonsuits are not allowed. A nonsuit must be distinguished from a discontinuance,³

In 1740, the English practice was further regulated by statute of 14 Geo. II, ch. 17, which provides "that where issue is or shall be joined in any action or suit at law in any of his majesty's courts of record, and the plaintiff or plaintiffs in any such action or suit hath or have neglected, or shall neglect, to bring such issue on to be tried according to the course and practice of the said courts, respectively, it shall and may be lawful for the judge or judges of the said courts, respectively, at any time after such neglect, upon motion made in open court (due notice thereof having first been given), to give the like judgment for the defendant or defendants in every such action or suit, as in the case of nonsuit."

It would seem that the practice in England, under the common law as well as since the more modern statutes, has been perhaps more liberal in favor of allowing nonsuits to plaintiffs as matter of right, than is prescribed in this country. According to the practice there, as appears by the decisions of their courts, a plaintiff could not be nonsuited on the trial against his assent, but might insist, as a matter of right, on the cause going to the jury, and thus take his chance of a verdict. Dewar v. Purday, 4 A. & E. 633.

Voluntary Nonsuits in New York.—In New York there are but two cases (and those among the early decisions of that State) so far as we have been able to find, that incline towards the English practice. In one, where a verdict was received without the assent of the plaintiff, the court set it aside, remarking that it was the right of a plaintiff to submit to a nonsuit. People v. Mayor's Court of Albany, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 36. In the other, it was held that a plaintiff has the right to submit to a nonsuit on the coming in of a jury, although they are prepared to render a balance in favor of the defendant, in an action of assumpsit, and where a notice of set-off had been given. Wooster v. Burr, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 295. See also, infra, this title.

1. Washburn v. Allen, 77 Me. 344.

"Before proceeding to consider the authorities that bear upon this question, it may be remarked that nonsuits may be classed under two divisions: (1) Involuntary, as when ordered by the court against the plaintiff's objection; (2) voluntary, when allowed by the court on the plaintiff's own motion. Into the one or the other of the two classes the decided cases fall. The case under consideration comes within the last, and brings us to consider the rule of practice applicable in such cases."

Judge of the United States supreme court, in the case of Hammergen v. Schuermier, 1 McCrary (U. S.) 436, said: "Nonsuit is voluntary or involuntary. Voluntary nonsuit is where a party submits to the court and says: 'I have not made out a case,' and asks that it be dismissed; involuntary nonsuit is just this case: when the case is before the jury, and the plaintiff having introduced all of his evidence, the defendants say: 'It is not sufficient to go to the jury, and we ask for a nonsuit,' and the court says: 'You shall have it.'"

2. See, infra, this article XI, WHERE INVOLUNTARY NONSUITS ARE GRANTED AND WHERE REFUSED.

3. Evans v. Clover, 1 Grant (Pa.) 164, 169. "Before the case went to the jury the plaintiff asked leave to discontinue the suit, which the court refused. It is quite clear that a plaintiff may take a nonsuit on the trial whenever he thinks proper. At common law he might do so at any time before the verdict was actually recorded; and the only restriction of the right by our statute, is that which requires it to be exercised before the jury announce their readiness to deliver the verdict. But a discontinuance is not a nonsuit, though the difference in their legal effect is slight. A greater distinction exists in the mode of applying them, the one being subject to the discretion of the plaintiff, the other of the court . . . but a discontinuance may be allowed or refused according to the discretion of the court, which is not assignable for error."

a retraxit,¹ and a demurrer,² which closely resemble it in the abruptness with which they put an end to an action; in other respects a nonsuit is different in its results, and serves an entirely different purpose.

II. COMMON-LAW RULE AS TO TIME WHEN VOLUNTARY NON-SUITS ARE ALLOWED.—At common law a plaintiff might take a nonsuit, as of right, at any time in the progress of a case, even after the verdict was rendered, but before judgment was entered.³ But by the statute 2 Henry IV, ch. 7, amending common law, the plaintiff's right to take a nonsuit was limited to the time of the rendition of the verdict, and if the verdict passed against the plaintiff, he could not be nonsuited.⁴ While the common law of England, as modified by the above statute, was in force in the colonies at the time of the Revolution and continued to be the law in the various States, many of which expressly adopted it by legislative enactment, a definite rule applicable alike to all the States, as to the exact time to which a plaintiff is limited in taking a nonsuit as of right, cannot safely be stated, further than that the common-law rule has never been extended. It may, however, be stated generally that in many of the States the plaintiff is, by statute, given the right to take a nonsuit at any stage of the proceeding or trial before the cause is finally submitted to the court or jury for decision.⁵ In some States the

1. Lowry v. McMillan, 8 Pa. St. 157, 163. "A technical retraxit has been, and is, almost unknown in the practice of this State. It is where a plaintiff cometh personally into court where his action is brought, and saith he will not proceed in it; and this is a bar to that action forever. 2 Jacob's Law Dict. A retraxit must always be in person; if it is by attorney, it is error; 8 Rep. 58; 3 Salk. 245. It cannot be before a declaration; for before a declaration it is only a nonsuit. 3 Leonard 47; 2 Silby's Abr. 476. In the case in hand, the plaintiff did not go personally into court, and there was no declaration filed. It cannot, therefore, according to the authorities, be considered as a retraxit; for although the words "withdraw forever" are used in the paper filed, we cannot suppose that the parties had in their mind a legal technical rule, obliterated where it is not worn out." See also South Branch R. Co. v. Long, 26 W. Va. 692.

2. Dodge v. Bank of Kentucky, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 616. "Motions to instruct, as in case of nonsuit, partake of the nature of a demurrer to evidence, and in modern practice is frequently indulged in lieu of a demurrer. It is frequently used when the allegata et probata do not agree, and the plaintiff proves a case not as he has laid it. . . . In every motion, then, so to instruct a jury, every fact which the evidence proves and conduces to prove, as well as those facts which may naturally and rationally be inferred from those proved, must necessarily be considered as admitted by the party making the motion; and the court is appealed to to say, after all these admissions, whether in law the plaintiff has made out his cause of action. In the present case, then, the defendant's below, for the purposes of the motion, must be considered as taking the evidence as true without further contest. See also *Davis v. In order to bar the plaintiff's right to submit to a nonsuit, the jury must have the whole of the case, including not only all the evidence, but also the instructions of the court. Consequently, if for any cause the jury retire from the bar without having the whole of the case on which they are to render a verdict, the plaintiff's right to submit to a nonsuit is not taken away. Berry v. Savage, 3 Ill. 261. See also Amos v. Sinnott, 5 Ill. 440.

1. In Gordon v. Goodell, 34 Ill. 429, 435, BREESE, J., observes: "By our Practice act, it is provided that every person desirous of suffering a nonsuit on trial, shall be barred therefrom unless he do so before the jury retire from the bar. (Scates' Comp., 261, § 29. Illinois.) By implication most clearly, a plaintiff has a right to suffer a nonsuit on trial if he makes his motion in time." In this case a judgment has been confessed, the defendant allowed to plead, the judgment remaining as security to the plaintiff; and while the issue made upon the defendant's plea was being tried, and before the jury retired from the bar, the plaintiff asked leave to take a nonsuit; and it was held that the plaintiff had a right to take a nonsuit notwithstanding the judgment. See also Templeton v. Wolfe, 19 Mo. 101; Hancock Ditch Co. v. Bradford, 13 Cal. 637; Jones v. Fennimore, 1 G. Greene (Iowa) 134.

The plaintiff has the right to take a nonsuit at any time before the jury retires from the bar. (Paschal's Dig., art. 1464, note 562. Texas.) Even after the defendant has pleaded in reconvention, the plaintiff may take a nonsuit, especially if the plea presents no cause of action. (Paschal's Dig., art. 3446, note 797. Texas). Frois v. Mayfield, 31 Tex. 366.

When the jury comes in for further instructions, the plaintiff may, on their being given, elect to submit to a nonsuit. Berry v. Savage, 3 Ill. 261. See also Hensley v. Peck, 13 Mo. 587.

Leave to enter a nonsuit will not be granted after verdict. Taylor v. Alexander, 6 Ohio 144.

3. Under Missouri Rev. St., § 3556, declaring that a nonsuit may be taken at any time before the case is finally submitted, it may be taken at any time before the jury retires and after the law is declared. Wood v. Nortman, 85 Mo. 298.

In Tennessee, a nonsuit may be entered even after the evidence has been heard by the jury and they have been charged by the court. Partlow v. Elliott, 1 Meigs (Tenn.) 547.

Arizona.—It is not proper to grant an involuntary nonsuit under Rev. St. Arizona, § 764, providing that at any time before the jury have retired the plaintiff may take a nonsuit; but he shall not thereby prejudice the right of an adverse party to be heard on his own claim for affirmative relief. Bryan v. Pinney (Ariz. 1889), 21 Pac. Rep. 332 (WRIGHT, C. J., dissenting).

4. Lawrin v. Hanks, 3 McCord (S. Car.) 558, 559. "There can be no doubt that a plaintiff may, at any time before the verdict is read by the clerk, submit to a nonsuit; and a defendant who pleads a discount is, as to that, considered as if he had brought his action. The object of the act was to prevent unnecessary litigation, and thus to enable a defendant who had a demand against one who should sue him, to recover it without the necessity of a cross-action. What reason then, can be urged why a defendant in such a case, should not as well be permitted to withdraw his action as a plaintiff? It does not embarrass the plaintiff. If the discount is withdrawn, he goes on to receive his whole demand. In the case before us, the court should have granted the motion and directed the jury to find for the plaintiff the full amount of his demand. See also Graham v. Tate, 77 N. Car. 120.

tered the jury box and nine of them have been called;¹ or after the jury have agreed upon their verdict which is ready to be declared in court, and is known to the plaintiff;² or before the jury retire to consider their verdict, or the cause is submitted to the court for its decision.³ In those States in which the time is not regulated by statute, the common-law rule, that a plaintiff may take a nonsuit, as of right, at any time before verdict rendered, prevails. The authorities are conflicting in cases where the issues of fact are submitted to the court for trial, in place of a jury, as to whether there is any limitation upon the right to take a nonsuit to any particular time.⁴

III. EXCEPTIONS TO COMMON-LAW RULE.—In Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and perhaps in a few other States, a plaintiff has not the absolute right to become nonsuit after the trial has begun. The courts in these States do not deny that a nonsuit at common law is allowed at any time, but claim that such a rule is vexatious to the defendants, and is not in accordance with the practice of their State. The rule as stated is, that, before opening his

4. In Illinois it has been decided that a nonsuit should be granted at any time after the court has announced its opinion and before a note thereof is entered. In Howe v. Herron, 17 Ill. 494, the court observes: "When the case is tried by a jury, the plaintiff, before he determines whether he will take a nonsuit, not only has an opportunity of knowing precisely what the testimony is upon which his rights depend and upon which the jury are to act, but he also hears the charge of the court to the jury, so that he knows by what rules of law the jury are to be governed in deciding upon those facts. These desirable ends cannot be attained when the court tries the question of fact in place of the jury. Either the plaintiff must have the benefit of the views of the court upon the law by which the case is to be governed, which can only be done after the court has expressed an opinion, or else he must be deprived of the right which was always guaranteed to him by the common law, and which is preserved to him by our statutes in all cases of jury trial." And see

In this case the court had found the law and facts and a note was made; but the court opened the finding as to the damages, which was again taken under consideration and was undetermined when the nonsuit was entered. See also Gordon v. Goodell, 34 Ill. 429.

Hudson*, 7 Exch. 380." See also Hall v. Schuchardt, 37 Md. 15.

case, the plaintiff may become nonsuit as a matter of right. After the case is opened and before verdict, he may have leave to become nonsuit in the discretion of the court; after verdict, there can be no nonsuit.¹

1. Washburn v. Allen, 77 Me. 344. "Whatever may be the practice elsewhere, the courts of Massachusetts and New Hampshire have never adopted the early English practice; but, on the contrary, have declared that, after a cause has been opened to the jury, the plaintiff cannot become nonsuit, as a matter of legal right, but the court might allow it at that stage of the case, in its discretion . . . also in Locke v. Wood, 16 Mass. 317, the court were of the opinion 'that there was no such right; and that after a cause is opened to the jury, and begun to be proceeded in before them, the parties are entitled to a verdict, unless the court should in its discretion allow a nonsuit or discontinuance.' . . . In the cases to which we have referred, our courts have fully recognized, though they have not seen fit to follow the ancient common law as laid down many years ago in England. Many of the customs of our courts are different from those existing at that time, when no verdict could be returned for or against a plaintiff unless he or his counsel was present in court, and to avoid which, or if in his favor and the damages were not satisfactory to him, he might withdraw himself and become nonsuit. 'Cessante ratione legis, cessat ipsa lex.' See also Truro v. Atkins, 122 Mass. 418; Judge of Probate v. Abbott, 13 N. H. 21; Shaw v. Boland, 15 Gray (Mass.) 571. In the present case the trial having been begun, and the question of law reserved at the trial being still undisposed of, the ruling by which the demandant was allowed to become nonsuit as of right and of course, against the objection of the tenant, and without any exercise of discretion on the part of the court, was erroneous. . . . Whether the superior court can allow a plaintiff to become nonsuit, after a question of law has been reserved on report for the opinion of this court, and before the question has been disposed of by this court, is not presented by these exceptions, and we express no opinion." Shaw v. Boland, 15 Gray (Mass.) 571.

"A plaintiff who has opened his case to the jury, called witnesses, and, after they had been sworn generally, examined them as to the existence and loss of a document with a view to the introduction of secondary evidence of its contents, is not entitled as of right to become nonsuit, and cannot except to the refusal of the judge to permit him to do so."

In Texas, although the power of a plaintiff to take a nonsuit is much greater than in Maine, Massachusetts and New Hampshire, it is still not so great as at common law. Frois v. Mayfield, 31 Tex. 366.

"Where no cause of action is set forth in the pleadings, the plaintiff may suffer a nonsuit at any time before the jury retire from the box; or at least, at any time before the judge commits the case to them." So it is held that the plaintiff cannot take a nonsuit after the case has been finally submitted. Hays v. Turner, 23 Iowa 214; Brown v. Harter, 18 Cal. 76; Jones v. Fennimore, 1 G. Greene (Iowa) 134; Mansfield v. Wilkerson, 26 Iowa 482; Peters v. Diossy, 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 115.

But the rule is different in suits in equity according to the old rules of distinction. Hesse v. Mississippi etc. Ins. Co. 21 Mo. 93.

In Benton v. Bellows, 61 N. H. 107, the court held that a plaintiff who has elected a jury trial, upon the report of the referee of the court, may, if the report cannot be used, become nonsuit at any time before the commencement of the trial.

Nonsuit for Want of Jurisdiction.—A plaintiff may elect to be nonsuited when the judge intimates an opinion that the court has no jurisdiction of the action, and when the defendant has moved to dismiss for want of jurisdiction. See also McKesson v. Mendenhall, 64 N. Car. 502; Mercantile Bank v. Pettigrew, 74 N. Car. 326.

A nonsuit cannot be entered after judgment. Mauney v. Long, 91 N. Car. 170.

In Bynum v. Poire, 97 N. Car. 374 the court held that a plaintiff might have a judgment of voluntary nonsuit entered, where he has made a motion for a preliminary injunction, which has been denied, provided no rights have been acquired by the defendant by virtue of anything done in the course of the action.

IV. HOW ASKED OR TAKEN.—No formality is required as to the manner in which a plaintiff may take a nonsuit.¹ He may absent himself from court when his presence is required, and thus accomplish his purpose. He may remain silent when his name is called by the clerk of the court, prior to the jury giving their verdict, and thus become nonsuit; and again, at any time before the case is tried, he may have the clerk enter a nonsuit on the court docket. Usually when the case is on trial, and the plaintiff desires a nonsuit, his attorney announces the fact in a few appropriate words to the court. The reasons which induce the plaintiff to take the nonsuit need not be stated. Where a plaintiff needlessly takes a nonsuit, the appellate court will not relieve him.²

V. RULE WHEN SET-OFF IS PLEADED.—In some States it is settled that, where a defence of set-off has been pleaded, the plaintiff cannot take a nonsuit; this is on the theory that when a set-off is pleaded, then two suits are in existence to be tried at the same time before the court, and that, therefore, a plaintiff would have no more right to discontinue the defendant's suit than the defendant would the suit of the plaintiff. It is further agreed that a contrary construction of the statutes on the subject of set-off, which were enacted in order that, in an equitable and economical manner, all controversies between the parties to a suit might be determined in the same action, would defeat their object.³ But generally Petition in Nature of a Cross Action.—Where the answer of a defendant contains matters which constitute a cause of action against the plaintiff, and prays judgment upon the same, whether the answer is called a plea in reconvention, or a petition in the nature of a cross action, or by whatever designation, the plaintiff cannot take a voluntary nonsuit. Bradford v. Hamilton, 7 Tex. 55; Thomas v. Hill, 3 Tex. 270; McCoy v. Jones, 9 Tex. 363.

Where Plaintiff Is Taken by Surprise.—Where the plaintiff is taken by surprise during the trial, he may submit to a voluntary nonsuit, and afterwards move to set it aside, and ask leave to amend his petition so that it may correspond with his evidence; and if the court grants his motion, the supreme court will not reverse the decision unless serious injury has been done to the defendant. Austin v. Townes, 10 Tex. 24; Easterling v. Blythe, 7 Tex. 210.

C. 178, 179. "The ancient practice which I remember to have prevailed in some places, was for the officer of the court to ask the jury after they had considered their verdict, if they were agreed. If they answered in the affirmative, the officer then called the plaintiff by name to hear the verdict; and if he appeared, the verdict was pronounced. If he did not appear to prosecute his suit, he was nonsuited . . . A verdict against a plaintiff cannot be taken but in his presence, but a verdict against a defendant may be taken in his absence."

2. Gentry v. Black, 32 Mo. 542. See also Robbins v. Stevenson, 5 Mo. 105.

3. Francis v. Edwards, 77 N. Car. 271, 275. "A counter claim is a distinct and independent cause of action, and when properly stated as such with a prayer for relief, the defendant becomes in respect to the matters alleged by him an actor, and there are then really two simultaneous actions pending between the same parties, wherein each is at the same time both a plaintiff and a defendant. The defendant is not obliged to set up his counter claim. He may omit it and bring another action. He has his election. But when he does set up his counter claim, it becomes a cross action and both opposing claims a nonsuit is allowed, notwithstanding a set-off has been pleaded. It is so held on the ground that, as the right of the plaintiff to discontinue his suit at any time before the verdict is undoubted, therefore, in the absence of a statute taking away the right, it must be adjudicated. The plaintiff, then, has the right to the determination of the court of all matters thus brought in issue, and mutually the defendant has the same right, and neither has the right to go out of court before a complete determination of all the matters in controversy, without or against the consent of the other. This is the proper construction of the provisions of the code in relation to counter claim. C. C. P., § 100, 104. Any other construction would defeat or impair these equitable and economical provisions of it, by which all matters in controversy between the parties to a suit may be determined in the same action. Pomeroy on Remedies, §§ 734, 800; Holzbauer v. Heine, 37 Mo. 443; Woodruff v. Garner, 27 Ind. 4; Sloan v. McDowell, 71 N. Car. 356. There was error in allowing the judgment of nonsuit." See also McNeill v. Lawton, 97 N. Car. 16; *Harris v. In Block v. Weiller, 61 Tex. 692, the court held, that under R. S. Texas, §§ 1260, 1301, a plaintiff is allowed to take a nonsuit at any time before the decision of the court is announced, provided he does not prejudice the right of defendant to obtain affirmative relief upon any counter claim he may have pleaded.

Merchants' Bank v. Schulenberg, 54 Mich. 49, 51, dissenting opinion of Judges SHERWOOD and CAMPBELL: "The question is simply this: Whether, under our statute, when the defendant has given notice of set-off, and claims a balance in his favor, the plaintiff can discontinue his suit, or be permitted to discontinue it without the consent and against the wishes of the defendant. Set-off is a mode of defence . . . The object of the statute is beneficial and equitable, and in its operation it proceeds upon equitable principles. Downer v. Eggleston, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 55, 56. . . . The statute requires the defendant to bring forward his claim for adjudication at the time the plaintiff brings his suit, and thereby determines the time when the defendant shall have his claim adjudicated, at the peril of doing so at his own expense. In all other respects the case stands as though two separate suits were brought to determine the rights of the parties; and I fail to see why both cases should not be governed by the same rules, and receive the same treatment at the hands of the court. Simple justice requires this, and I can see no reason why the equitable rules upon which the whole doctrine of set-off is based, should not be carried out in the practice in these cases. Adopting this rule, the plaintiff would have no more right to discontinue the defendant's suit, than the latter would that of the former; and such, I think, should be the law."

The court in the above case was divided, and so the case was affirmed, contrary to the above opinion of Judge Sherwood. Hancock Ditch Co. v. Bradford, 13 Cal. 637.

"The error assigned here is, that the court refused to permit the plaintiff to take a nonsuit after the testimony for plaintiff and defendants was closed. No counter claim seems to have been made in this case by defendants. By the 148th section of the Practice act, it is provided, 'that the plaintiff may, at any time before trial, upon the payment of costs, if a counterclaim has not been made, take a nonsuit.'" Brown v. Pfouts, 53 Tex. 221.

"Although, as a general rule, when a plea in reconvention has been filed, the plaintiff is not entitled to a voluntary nonsuit, yet a motion to set it aside will be refused where no reason is given for not objecting to it at the time, and where no merit is shown in the plea." See also Partridge v. Wilsey, 8 Iowa 459.

Where the defendant in a suit sets up a reconventional demand, the plaintiff is not permitted to discontinue his suit when defendant opposes it. And if the plaintiff has discontinued the suit without opposition on the part of defendant, the latter has the right to prosecute against him, his claim in reconvention notwithstanding the discontinuance. Barrow v. Robichaux, 15 La. An. 70. See also McDonough v. Copeland, 9 La. An. 310.

1. Merchants' Bank v. Schulenberg, 54 Mich. 49, 54. COOLEY, C. J., delivered the opinion: "In this case the defendant relied upon a set-off which, he claimed, was larger than the plaintiff's demand; and he brings the case to this court, assigning for error the order of the circuit court permitting the plaintiff, notwithstanding his objection, to submit to a nonsuit.

"The general right of the plaintiff to discontinue his suit or to submit to a nonsuit at any time before verdict, is undoubted; and in the absence of any statute taking away the right, it exists in the cases where set-off is relied upon, to the same extent as in other cases. This is fully recognized in Cummings v. Pruden, 11 Mass. 206, and Branham v. Brown, 1 Bailey (S. Car.) 262. In several States, statutes have been passed taking away the right, but we have no such statute. The fact that the statute of set-offs permits judgment to be taken by the defendant for the balance found due him, does not preclude a discontinuance. Cummings v. Pruden, 11 Mass. 206.

"But it is said there are decisions to the contrary of these, and several are referred to. The Texas cases are not in point, as they are decided under the civil law, which does not prevail in this State. Egery v. Power, 5 Tex. 501; Bradford v. Hamilton, 7 Tex. 55. The case of Francis v. Edwards, 77 N. Car. 271, was decided upon a construction of the Code of that State, and therefore has no bearing. In Riley v. Carter, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 230, the defendant had obtained judgment for his set-off in a justice's court, and the plaintiff removed the case to the circuit court by certiorari, and then, in that court, was given leave to dismiss his suit. This was palpable error, and the court so held; but we discover no analogy between that case and this. The defendant had his judgment, and unless error was shown had a right to retain it. The three New York cases of Cockle v. Underwood, 3 Duer (N. Y.) 676, Rees v. Van Patten, 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 258, and Van Alen v. Schermerhorn, 14 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 287, are not in point, because decided under the State code; but so far as they can be considered as having a bearing, they are against the defendant instead of for him, for they all recognize the power of the court in its discretion to permit the plaintiff to discontinue, which is all that is necessary to sustain this judgment."

The above case was affirmed on this judgment, but JUDGES SHERWOOD and CAMPBELL dissented.

Where the defendant answers and pleads a set-off and counter claim, he cannot, if the plaintiff fails to appear at the trial, take a verdict and judgment for the amount of his set-off and counter claim. The proper judgment is that of nonsuit of the plaintiff, or a dismissal of his suit. Nordmanser v. Hitchcock, 40 Mo. 178.

The plaintiff has a right to suffer a nonsuit at any time before publication of the verdict, although the defendant has filed a discount and introduced evidence to establish it. And the defendant has the same right, to withdraw his discount. Branham v. Brown, 1 Bailey (S. Car.) 262.

Under §§ 363 and 365 of the Indiana Code, 2 G. & H. 216, a plaintiff may, at any time before the jury retire or the finding of the court is announced, dismiss his action without prejudice; and a defendant who has pleaded a set-off, must, as to that, be regarded as a plaintiff, and may, therefore, in like manner dismiss as to his set-off. Crain v. Hilligross, 21 Ind. 210.

In Missouri, a plaintiff may take a nonsuit, although the defendant pleads a set-off exceeding the amount sued for. Fink v. Bruhl, 47 Mo. 173. So also McCredy v. Frey, 7 Watts (Pa.) 496; Wolf v. Ament, 1 Grant Cas. (Pa.) 150.

An executor offering a will for probate, cannot take a nonsuit. Roberts v. Trawick, 13 Ala. 68.

In Lyon v. Adams, 24 Vt. 268, it was held that a plaintiff in an action on book account, is not at liberty to become nonsuit after judgment to account and after the case goes before the auditor. And in Farmington v. Copp, 56 N. H. 218, the court held that a plaintiff could not become nonsuit as matter of right while the cause was pending before an auditor. See also Pollard v. Moore, 51 N. H. 188; Fulford v. Converse, 54 N. H. 543.

But in McNeill v. Lawton, 97 N. Car. 16, the court held that a plaintiff may take a nonsuit while the case is before a referee, if the defendant has not pleaded a counter claim arising out of the same contract or transaction which is the foundation of the plaintiff's cause of action. See also Whedbee v. Leggett, 92 N. Car. 469; Plant v. Fleming, 20 Cal. 92.

VI. MUST BE ENTERED AS TO ALL THE PLAINTIFFS.—Where one of several co-plaintiffs prays to be nonsuited, a nonsuit must be entered as to all the plaintiffs;¹ for, at common law, all the plaintiffs were merged into one, in the contemplation of the law. An admission of one plaintiff was the admission of all. If a nonsuit was taken fraudulently by one plaintiff for the purpose of injuring his co-plaintiffs, the rule was different.

VII. VOLUNTARY NONSUIT NO BAR TO ANOTHER SUIT.—It has been uniformly held, that a voluntary nonsuit will not deprive a plaintiff of his right to try a case a second time,² when, with more favorable conditions, he may attain greater success than in the first case. It is owing to this fact alone that nonsuits are so frequent.

1. Brown v. Wentworth, 46 N. H. 490; s. c., 8 Am. Dec. 223.

Caverly v. Jones, 23 N. H. 573, 577. "It is a rule of law, says C. J. RICHARDSON in Kimball v. Wilson, 3 N. H. 96, that in personal actions the nonsuit of one is the nonsuit of all the plaintiffs, although the rule is otherwise in real and mixed actions. We think no doubt can be entertained that the rule is correctly stated. In this case of trespass, a nonsuit must of course be entered as to all the plaintiffs. Wilson v. Moore, 5 Mass. 411. The counsel for both parties agree that in personal actions, tenants in common must join; and it is not to be questioned that a release by one of the plaintiffs is a bar to the action, both of which points were directly in question in the case of Kimball v. Wilson, 3 N. H. 96. The case of nonsuit stands manifestly on the same ground as a release. An admission by one of the plaintiffs is also evidence against his co-plaintiffs. 1 Ph. Ev. 378; 1 Greenl. Ev. 203, § 172. The writing presented to the court in this case, contains admissions which are almost necessarily fatal to the case of the parties making them, and consequently to the case of all the plaintiffs. If either of these, the release, the nonsuit, or the admissions can be excluded, the same principle would require that all of them should be rejected . . . Any fraudulent or covinous contrivance to defeat the action would present a different case from the present."

A motion for judgment as in case of nonsuit cannot be made by one of several defendants without the concurrence of the others; so of a motion made by all, if either of them has no right to move on account of a default or otherwise. Bancroft v. Wilson, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 495.

In March on Arbitraments 215, cited in Clapp v. Thomas, 5 Allen (Mass.) 158, it is well said that a nonsuit "is but like the blowing out of a candle which a man at his own pleasure may light again." See also Ellington v. Crockett, 13 Mo. 72; Harris v. Tiffany, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 225; Holton v. Gleason, 26 N. H. 501; Snowhill v. Hillier, 9 N. J. L. 38; Elwell v. McQueen, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 519; *Bournonville v. "Every judgment against a plaintiff is either upon a retraxit non pros., nonsuit, nolle prosequi, discontinuance, or a judgment on an issue found by jury in favor of defendant, or upon demurrer. The inducements or preliminary recitals in these several kinds of judgment are variant, but the conclusion in each is always the same; it is as follows: 'Therefore it is considered by the court that plaintiff take nothing by his suit, and that the defendant go without day, and recover of plaintiff his costs.' (Of these several judgments, none but a retraxit, or one on the merits, will bar subsequent actions" . . . under no circumstances will such a judgment be deemed final, whether entered before or at the trial. Foster v. Wells, 4 Tex. 101; Pillow v. Eliot, 25 Tex. Supp. 322;

VIII. VOLUNTARY NONSUITS NOT APPEALABLE.—When a plaintiff has voluntarily taken a nonsuit, and afterwards desires the benefit of an appeal, he will not be allowed the privilege, for it is not a decision of the judge below which the plaintiff complains of, but of something which he himself has done.¹ A contrary rule would enable a plaintiff at the same time to have all the advantages of a nonsuit and none of its disadvantages. A peculiar practice prevails in North Carolina, which apparently is an excep-

Gummer v. Village of Omro, 50 Wis. 247, 252. "The books of practice agree that there is no difference in the effect of the judgment between a voluntary and an involuntary nonsuit. Freeman on Judgments, § 261, cites many authorities to sustain his text asserting the same principle. 2 Whittaker's Pr. 357; 3 Wait's Pr. 163. That the facts in evidence given by the plaintiff are fully considered by the court, upon a motion for a nonsuit, in determining the question whether in law they entitle the plaintiff to recover, constitutes no such trial on the merits as to make the nonsuit a bar. It is the form of the judgment of nonsuit which gives to it its legal effect, and not the facts considered on the motion. Fisk v. Parker, 14 La. Ann. 496. We conclude, then, that a judgment of nonsuit, whether voluntary or involuntary, is never a bar to another action for the same cause. The rule in respect to involuntary nonsuits is not only sustained by the authorities, but by reason, and is evidently recognized generally by the courts and the bar, from the common practice of nonsuits granted on motion, without a question as to their effect in barring another action. The defendant, instead of moving for a nonsuit on the case made by the plaintiff, may, if he have confidence in his position, have a judgment which will be a bar to another action by submitting the cause to the verdict of a jury, or to the court if a jury be waived. He should not be allowed to experiment with a motion for a nonsuit, and obtain the opinion of the court of the plaintiff's case, and, if he fails in his motion, then go to a full trial on the merits, without also allowing the plaintiff, if he is the losing party on the hearing of the motion, to sue over. If the defendant is not bound and concluded by the decision of the motion, the plaintiff should not be." See also Hammergen v. Schuermier, 1 McCrary (U. S.) 436; Jay v. Almy, 1 Woodb. & M. (U. S.) 262.

Gibson*, 20 Pa. St. 9, that a record which showed that the plaintiff withdrew his suit and confessed judgment for costs, was no bar to another suit for the same cause." "In this condition of the issues, the parties went to trial, when the plaintiff (for what purpose we cannot say) offered the bond in evidence, to the reading of which the defendants objected (for what reason the record does not show); and their objection being sustained by the court, the plaintiff thereupon voluntarily suffered a nonsuit, which the court afterwards refused

tion to the above rule, but in reality is not.¹ In an action of replevin an appeal is allowed from a voluntary nonsuit.²

IX. MOTION FOR INVOLUNTARY NONSUIT.—While the motion for a nonsuit is usually made by the defendant, it has been held that to set aside; and the rejection of the evidence and the refusal to set aside the nonsuit are assigned for error . . . the plaintiff needlessly took a nonsuit. In such case, this court has no power to relieve. The nonsuit must stand." See also Louisiana Plank Road Co. v. Mitchell, 20 Mo. 432.

If the plaintiff submits to a nonsuit, he cannot by writ of error or appeal procure a reversal thereof, on account of any erroneous opinion delivered in the progress of the trial. Watson v. Anderson, Hard. (Ky.) 458; Moore v. Herndon, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 168; Worke v. Byers, 3 Hawks (N. Car.) 228; Thornton v. Zett, 1 Wash. (Va.) 138; People v. Browne, 8 Ill. 87; Beall v. Breckenridge, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 695.

In Spruill v. Trader, 5 Jones (N. Car.) 39, the court held, that a submission to a nonsuit, by a plaintiff in a county court, is not a voluntary abandonment of a suit, and he may appeal.

1. North Carolina Cases.—In Mobley v. Watts, 98 N. Car. 284, the practice in North Carolina appears to allow a plaintiff to take a nonsuit and then appeal, but an examination of the cases will show that the nonsuit has been taken in consequence of the court intimating an adverse opinion to the plaintiff's case (p. 291), "that when on the trial the court intimates an opinion that the plaintiff cannot maintain the action, he may, in deference to the opinion of the court, submit to a judgment of nonsuit, assign ground of error, and appeal to this court. In such cases the judgment is not regarded as entered simply at the instance of the plaintiff; he submits to it with the understanding on the part of the court that he shall have the right to except and appeal. In Graham v. Tate, 77 N. Car., PEARSON, C. J., says: 'Even when the plaintiff appears at the trial, takes a part in it by challenging jurors, examining and cross examining witnesses, and the argument of his counsel, if he finds from an intimation of the court that the charge will be against him, he may submit to a nonsuit and appeal. This is every day practice.' And the Chief Justice gives the reasons for it. But, says the learned counsel, there was in this case no intimation that the charge of the court would be against the plaintiff, and there could be no such intimation until the whole case was before the court. We cannot take this narrow view of the case; it is 'sticking in the back.' In the progress of the trial the plaintiff offers evidence to establish necessary links in his chain of title, without which he cannot make out his case. This evidence is excluded. Can he go any further? He submits to a nonsuit. Is not the irresistible inference that he does so because, not under the intimation simply, but under the ruling of the court, if correct, he must fail?"

2. Reed v. Carpenter, 2 Ohio 79. "The plaintiff replevied the property, and on the return of the writ filed his declaration . . . At the term, when by the rules and usages of court, the cause stood for trial, the plaintiff became nonsuit, and judgment of nonsuit was rendered against him. At the request of the defendant, a jury was impanelled to ascertain the value of the property replevied. A verdict of the value was returned, for which judgment, with a penalty of fifty per cent., was rendered. The plaintiff gave notice of appeal . . . The defendant moved to quash the appeal, upon the ground that the law did not permit the plaintiff to appeal from a voluntary nonsuit (the court). The action of replevin is one of a peculiar nature; both parties are actors . . . The situation of the parties is changed. The defendant becomes plaintiff, or actor. He claims to recover not only his costs, but also the value of the goods and chattels replevied, together with damages. Upon the verdict of the jury, the court render a judgment for the value of the property . . . This judgment is final. It is not, strictly speaking, a judgment of nonsuit. The plaintiff cannot afterwards recommence his action of replevin, for the property is already in his own possession . . . The propriety of sustaining an appeal, under our statute, from a judgment by default, has never been doubted, and the same reason applies for sustaining the appeal in the present case."

a judge may order a nonsuit of his own motion, although he has refused it on motion of the defendant.¹

X. NON-APPEARANCE OF PLAINTIFF.—If a plaintiff fails to appear, either in person or by attorney, when his case is called for trial, he will be considered as electing to become nonsuit, and a judgment of nonsuit will be entered against him.² It has been held, however, that the action of replevin is an exception to this rule.³

XI. WHERE INVOLUNTARY NONSUITS ARE GRANTED AND WHERE REFUSED.—The decisions in many of the States are in conflict as to whether a nonsuit can be granted by the court against the will of the

1. Nonsuits With and Without Motion.—Couch v. Charlotte etc. R. Co., 22 S. Car. 557.

Under the North Carolina act of 1777, a nonsuit will not be ordered, unless on motion of the defendant. Allison v. Hancock, 2 Dev. (N. Car.) 296.

In Allgro v. Duncan, 24 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 210, the court held, that in a clear case the judge should direct a nonsuit, though not asked to do so.

Where the proof shows that plaintiff's injury was caused by the negligence of a fellow servant, defendant may move for nonsuit without having pleaded such defence in his answer. Sayward v. Carlson (Wash.), 23 Pac. Rep. 830.

Where Plaintiff Opposes a Motion for Nonsuit.—A plaintiff by opposing a motion for a nonsuit, does not thereby waive his right to have the case submitted to the jury without a particular request to the court to that effect, nor assume thereby that the question is one of law only. It is otherwise with the defendants, for by their motion for a nonsuit they assume that the case is a proper one for the disposition of the court; and that assumption is a waiver of their right to have it submitted to the jury without some specific request being afterward made in their behalf, provided they do not succeed on their motion for a nonsuit. Slade v. McMullen, 45 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 52.

A dismissal and a nonsuit are not equivalent to two nonsuits, under the Alabama statute providing that two nonsuits shall be equal to a verdict against the party suffering the same. Bullock v. Perry, 2 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 319. This statute does not apply to nonsuits set aside before the end of the term. Kennedy v. Geddes, 8 Port. (Ala.) 263; s. c., 33 Am. Dec. 289. It means nonsuits for the same cause and not such as are set aside. King v. McLoskey, 4 Ala. 91.

2. Non-appearance.—Nordmauser v. Hitchcock, 40 Mo. 178; Herring v. Poritz, 6 Ill. App. 208. See also Merrick v. Mayhue, 40 Mich. 196; Phillips v. Cassidy, 36 La. Ann. 288; Petit v. Hewlett, 2 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 157.

Adjournment of a Cause.—If, on adjournment of a cause the plaintiff does not appear, he will be nonsuited. Holiday v. Large, 3 N. J. L. 653.

Where Plaintiff Fails to Carry Down His Cause.—Where a plaintiff neglects to carry down his cause for trial at the next circuit, after a new trial has been awarded, a judgment of nonsuit will be entered against him. Fox v. Lambson, 8 N. J. L. 366. See also Wright v. Bartlett, 45 N. H. 287.

Where Plaintiff Fails to Reply to a Plea in the Required Time.—By the Tennessee act of 1794, ch. 1, § 26, the plaintiff may be nonsuited if he fails to reply to a plea in the time prescribed by the act. If, however, the defendant takes no steps against the plaintiff for his failure, but goes to trial on issues or other pleas, he waives his defence on the plea, to which there is no replication. Harris v. Snider, 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 743.

Failure to File Declaration.—Where the declaration is not filed ten days before the second term of the court, a nonsuit will be granted. Downey v. Smith, 13 Ill. 671.

Where Plaintiff Refuses to Proceed.—Where a cause is set down for trial by plaintiff, who, when it is called, refuses to proceed, it may be dismissed on defendant's motion. Haberstich v. Fischer, 67 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 318.

3. Barret v. Forrester, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 247; Phillips v. Cassidy, 36 La. Ann. 288. But see Gale v. Hoysradt, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 179.

plaintiff. The Supreme Court of the United States holds that an involuntary nonsuit cannot be granted,¹ and in many of the States the rule is the same,² while in others it has been the practice to

1. Where Granted and Where Refused.
—De Wolfe v. Raband, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 476, 496.

"After the evidence for the plaintiffs was closed the defendant moved for a nonsuit, which motion was overruled. This refusal certainly constitutes no ground for reversal in this court. A nonsuit may not be ordered by the court upon the application of the defendant, and cannot, as we have had occasion to decide at the present term, be ordered in any case without the consent and acquiescence of the plaintiff." Elmore v. Grymes, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 469. In which case CHIEF JUSTICE MARSHALL said: "The circuit court had no authority to order a peremptory nonsuit against the will of the plaintiff. He had a right by law to a trial by a jury, and to have had the case submitted to them. He might agree to a nonsuit; but if he did not so choose, the court could not compel him to submit to it." Dissenting opinion by JOHNSON, J. See also Crane v. Morris, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 598; Castle v. Bullard, 23 How. (U. S.) 172; Boucicault v. Fox, 5 Blatchf. (U. S.) 87; Foot v. Silsby, 1 Blatchf. (U. S.) 445; Elmore v. Grymes, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 469.

New York.—In Pratt v. Hull, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 334, the court held that "a court of common pleas may compel a plaintiff to be nonsuited against his consent, when in their opinion the evidence offered by him is not sufficient to support his action, there being no question of fact to be decided." See also Foot v. Sabin, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 155, 158; s. c., 10 Am. Dec. 208.

And it has been held that a justice of the peace has the same power. Clements v. Benjamin, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 298. See also Betts v. Jackson, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 173.

In Jansen v. Acker, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 480, the court held that a nonsuit might be granted after evidence had been given on both sides. See also Fort v. Collins, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 109.

A nonsuit may be granted at the trial of a cause on the testimony adduced by the defendant, and it is not necessary that the evidence given by the defendant be in its nature conclusive, e. g., a record or something importing absolute verity. It is enough that a verdict for the plaintiff would be against the clear weight and effect of the defensive evidence whatever may be its character. Rudd v. Davis, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 287. See also Stuart v. Simpson, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 376, 379; Demyer v. Souzer, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 436; Wilson v. Williams, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 146; s. c., 28 Am. Dec. 518.

2. Alabama.—"It has been the continuous practice in this State (Alabama) that the court cannot order the plaintiff to be nonsuit against his consent, and whenever he submits his case to a jury he must be understood to insist upon a verdict." Hunt v. Stewart, 7 Ala. 525. See also Smith v. Seaton, Minor (Ala.) 75; Saunders v. Coffin, 16 Ala. 421.

Arkansas.—"A nonsuit cannot be ordered in any case, by the court, without the consent and acquiescence of the plaintiff." Martin v. Webb, 5 Ark. 72; s. c., 39 Am. Dec. 363. See also Ringo v. Field, 6 Ark. 43; Carr v. Crain, 7 Ark. 241.

In Hill v. Rucker, 14 Ark. 706, 709, WATKINS, C. J., observes, after stating that the court has no power to order a peremptory nonsuit: "But the practice has prevailed for the court, sitting as a jury, or the jury under instructions from the court, to find as in case of nonsuit, which is a determination of the case upon the merits as presented by the evidence, a bar to any future action for the same cause, and to which error lies. Fagan v. Faulkner, 5 Ark. 161; Cocke v. Brogan, 5 Ark. 694; Palmer v. Ashley, 3 Ark. 75, though the correctness of it was doubted in Goodrich v. Fritz, 4 Ark. 525, and in Carr v. Crain, 7 Ark. 241, where the court said, 'the correct motion is, to instruct the jury that if the evidence has not proved a matter necessary to be proven, they must find for the defendant,' though in this last case mentioned the distinction does not appear to be noticed, that to order a nonsuit is to say the jury shall not pass on the evidence, while the better authority is that the court has not this power. . . . To instruct the jury to find as in case of nonsuit, is only the opinion of the court that the plaintiff has failed to make out his case in evidence, and so far from taking the case from the jury is every way favorable to the plaintiff, because it is analogous to a demurrer to evidence, where all legiti-grant involuntary nonsuits.¹ The court of appeals of Maryland mate presumptions of fact are to be indulged in favor of the evidence. There is no real discrepancy between the cases adverted to. They all tend to establish, that however dangerous it may be for a defendant to ask the court to instruct the jury to find as in case of nonsuit . . . it is no assumption of power for the court to give such an instruction, the only question being whether it was properly given."

Indiana.—Williams v. Port, 9 Ind. 551.

Kansas.—The court is not authorized to dismiss a suit upon the application of the defendant, for want of sufficient proof, or even in absence of proof, to sustain the plaintiff's claim, and the court erred in granting a judgment of nonsuit against the plaintiff's will." Case v. Hannahs, 2 Kan. 490.

Massachusetts.—Rose v. Learned, 14 Mass. 154.

In Mitchell v. New England Marine Ins. Co., 6 Pick. (Mass.) 117, the court held that a plaintiff cannot be nonsuited against his consent, if he insists on his right to appear when called.

Michigan.—"A plaintiff has always a right, if he chooses, to go to the jury with his case. The circuit court cannot compel him to become nonsuit." Ca-hill v. Kalamazoo Mut. Ins. Co., 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 124; s. c., 43 Am. Dec. 457.

Mississippi.—In Winston v. Miller, 12 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 550, JUSTICE CLAYTON observes: "In this country there is no such thing as a compulsory nonsuit, if the party insists that a jury shall pass upon his case; but what by the English practice would be good ground to compel a party to take a nonsuit would in our law, where the parties have entered on a trial, be good reason for a verdict against him."

Missouri.—St. Louis Floating Dock Ins. Co. v. Soulard, 8 Mo. 665; Barada v. Carondelet, 8 Mo. 644-649; Wells v. Gaty, 8 Mo. 681; Clark v. Steamboat Mound City, 9 Mo. 146; Perrin v. Williams, 9 Mo. 148; Wells v. Biddle, 9 Mo. 159; Marshall v. Wolfe, 11 Mo. 608; Martin v. Henley, 13 Mo. 312.

New Mexico.—Herrera v. Chaves, 2 New Mex. 86; Montoya v. Donohoe, 2 New Mex. 214.

North Carolina.—"If the court be dissatisfied with the verdict of a jury, they can only grant a new trial. They cannot, unless by the agreement of the parties, go farther and direct the plaintiff to be nonsuited." Dickey v. Johnson, 13 Ired. (N. Car.) 450.

In Hatchell v. Odom, 2 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 304, the court held, that it was not error in law for the judge to refuse to nonsuit the plaintiff; and if the defendant relies upon the objection, he should move it in the shape of instructions to the jury.

In Smith v. Smith, 8 Ired. (N. Car.) 31, RUFFIN, C. J., observes: "Error will not lie for a refusal to nonsuit, because the court is not bound to do so in any case, but has the discretion to leave the matter to the decision of the jury, except in the few cases in which the duty is imposed by statute."

In Tiddy v. Harris, 101 N. Car. 589, the court held that, when the proofs are all in, and the judge intimates an opinion that, under the old practice, plaintiff cannot recover, or, under the new, fails to establish the issue necessary to his having judgment, he may suffer a nonsuit, and have the correctness of the ruling reviewed by appeal; and the same course may be taken where the judge announces that, if the jury believe the facts to be as testified to, he will instruct them to find the issue in favor of defendant. See also Magruder v. Clayton, 29 S. Car. 407; Petrie v. Columbia etc. R. Co., 29 S. Car. 303.

Tennessee.—"A court upon the trial of a cause, cannot order and adjudge a nonsuit to be entered for the misconception of the action, or for want of testimony. The party alone has the right to decide whether he will take a nonsuit or have a trial." Scruggs v. Bracken, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 528.

Wyoming.—Mulhern v. Union Pac. R. Co., 2 Wyoming 446; Hoy v. Smith, 2 Wyoming 440.

1. California.—In Ringgold v. Haven, 1 Cal. 108, BENNETT, J., observes: "As to the right of the court to direct a compulsory nonsuit, upon this point we are met with a contrariety of authorities and a diversity of argument. In some of the States the affirmative, in others the negative of the proposition is asserted in theory and maintained in practice. In some, it is held that the court has no right, in any case, to non-suit the plaintiff, even though his evidence be insufficient in law to support his action, whilst in others it is settled that a jury should be allowed to receive no cause until the court is satisfied that the evidence is sufficient in law to authorize the jury to find a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. In all, however, it is agreed that cases may sometimes, under certain forms, be withdrawn from the jury and reserved for the sole consideration and determination of the court. This last is a common ground in the English courts, in the Federal courts of the Union and in the courts of the various States. The only difference upon the subject which appears to exist, is as to the manner in which the conceded end shall be reached. In the federal courts, and in the courts of some of the States, the object is attained by means of the cumbrous and complicated machinery of a demurrer to evidence; in the courts of other States, through the simpler and easier process of motion for nonsuit at the trial. In both cases the same end is arrived at; and the one remedy as well as the other can be applied only where the plaintiff shall have failed to make out a case which the law says is proper to be submitted to a jury. The former practice is constantly passing more and more into disfavor and the latter usurping its place. Thus, at the present day, in the English courts, although it is held in theory to be optional with the plaintiff whether he will be nonsuited or not, and that he may compel the defendant to resort to a demurrer to evidence, yet the constant practice there is for the plaintiff upon the suggestion of the judge that the evidence is insufficient, to submit to a nonsuit, with leave to move the court in banc to set it aside." See also Dalrymple v. Hanson, 1 Cal. 125; Mateer v. Brown, 1 Cal. 221; s. c., 52 Am. Dec. 303; Ensminger v. McIntire, 23 Cal. 593.

Connecticut.—In Naugatuck R. Co. v. Waterbury Button Co., 24 Conn. 468, the court held that, the act of 1852 (Connecticut), authorizing the granting of nonsuits in civil actions, where the plaintiff, who has produced his evidence and rested his cause, shall have failed to make out a prima facie case, is not repugnant to the constitution of this State, as impairing the right of trial by jury.

Georgia.—A motion for a nonsuit at law is like a demurrer in equity; and if, admitting all the facts proved, and all reasonable deductions from them, the plaintiff, on all the proof, ought not to recover, the nonsuit ought to be awarded. Tison v. Yawn, 15 Ga. 491; s. c., 60 Am. Dec. 708. See also Long v. Lewis, 16 Ga. 154.

Iowa.—In an action ex delicto, where there is no evidence against a defendant, or such deficient evidence, that the court would be justified in setting aside the verdict, the court may order a nonsuit without the consent of the plaintiff. Eddy v. Wilson, 1 G. Greene (Iowa) 259.

Illinois.—In the federal courts of Illinois, where, at the conclusion of the plaintiff's testimony, the court would, if he obtained a verdict, set it aside, and motion is made by defendant to direct a verdict for him, plaintiff is not allowed to take a nonsuit, but may withdraw a juror and discontinue. Wolcott v. Studebaker, 34 Fed. Rep. 8.

Ohio.—The courts of this State, in a proper case, have the power to take the evidence given by the plaintiff from the jury, and order a peremptory nonsuit. Ellis v. Ohio L. Ins. etc. Co., 4 Ohio St. 628.

Whenever it appears in the progress declares that the expression common in English books, "that the judge directed a nonsuit," means that the judge having expressed his opinion that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, the plaintiff then voluntarily submitted to a nonsuit.¹

XII. AT WHAT TIME GRANTED.—In those courts where an involuntary nonsuit is allowed, it has been held error to grant a nonsuit before the plaintiff has closed his testimony, for it has been said that a motion for a nonsuit is the same as a demurrer.² It has

of a trial that the plaintiff is not entitled to maintain his action, the court may interpose and direct a nonsuit, although the same objection appears on the face of the declaration, and might have been made upon demurrer. Powell v. Jones, 12 Ohio 35. See also Robinson v. Abell, 17 Ohio 36-44; Jones v. Smith, 14 Ohio 606; Showers v. Emery, 16 Ohio 294.

Oregon.—Grant v. Baker, 12 Oregon 329.

Pennsylvania.—The Pennsylvania act of March 11th, 1875, No. 8, p. 6, authorized the entering of compulsory nonsuits. Prior to this act it seems the court could not compel a plaintiff who has given evidence in support of his case to suffer a nonsuit. See Irving v. Taggart, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 360; Girard v. Gettig, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 234, where the court held that the refusal of the court to order a nonsuit was no ground for a bill of exceptions. Lyon v. Daniels, 14 Pa. St. 197. But see *Myers v. The court may, in its discretion, content itself with a simple refusal of any prayer not sanctioned by the rules of law. Maryland Ins. Co. v. Bathurst, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 159.

"When the court cannot grant the entire prayer as made, though a portion of it, in a separate distinct form, might have been given, it is not error to reject the whole. Doyle v. Baltimore County, 12 Gill & J. (Md.) 484; Gray v. Cook, 12 Gill & J. (Md.) 236.

"The motion of the defendant below, being contrary to the practice established in this State, was properly overruled, however sufficient the reasons might have been for defeating the action, if presented in another form, upon which we do not mean to express an opinion in this case. A nonsuit must be the voluntary act of the plaintiff. Evans' Prac. 304. 'The expressions common in English books that the judge directed a nonsuit, and others of a similar import, mean no more than this, that the judge expressed in that form of words his opinion that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, and that the party submitted to a nonsuit rather than the judge should enforce his opinion by a direction to the jury as to the verdict.' Evans' Prac. 315; Silsby v. Foote, 14 How. (U. S.) 222, and authorities there cited."

2. Walker v. Supple, 54 Ga. 178, 179, 180. "But it was error for the court to have nonsuited the plaintiff until he had closed his evidence, for the reason that he might have introduced testimony which would have taken the case out of the operation of the statute . . . A motion for a nonsuit is in the nature of a demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence; that is to say, admitting all the plaintiff has proved to be true, it is not sufficient in law to entitle him to recover. Inasmuch as the court nonsuited the plaintiff before he had closed his evidence, it was error to overrule his motion to reinstate the case on that ground. Whether the plaintiff will be able to take his case out of the operation of the statute by the introduction of evidence for that purpose we cannot tell, but he is entitled to have the opportunity to do so."

In Clews v. New York Nat. Banking Assoc., 105 N. Y. 398, the court held that where a complaint is dismissed on the opening of counsel, all the facts referred to in his opening, or offers of proof, should be considered, including been held that a nonsuit will be granted at the close of the opening statement; still a nonsuit should not be granted at this stage unless the statement of the plaintiff has been made in a clear manner.¹ In another court it was decided that the plaintiff could be nonsuited at the end of his opening statement, if it contained an admission fatal to his action.² At the very opening of the case a motion for a nonsuit is often made by the defendant on the ground of the misjoinder of plaintiffs.³ In regard to the point of time, a defendant is allowed about the same privileges in applying for an involuntary nonsuit as is a plaintiff when he voluntarily submits to a nonsuit. But not until the trial of the case can a defendant apply for an involuntary nonsuit, and we have seen above that nonsuits usually are not granted at an early stage of the trial. Motions for involuntary nonsuits should be made before the jury retires to consider its verdict. And an involuntary nonsuit consequently will not be granted after the verdict.⁴ This rule is the same as that in voluntary nonsuits, facts not stated in the complaint, as well as those stated, unless objection to proof of such additional facts is made on the specific ground that it is not admissible under the pleadings.

1. Emmerson v. Weeks, 58 Cal. 382, 384.

"It is not the practice to grant a nonsuit on the opening of the plaintiff's counsel." Fisher v. Fisher, 5 Wis. 472.

And it has been held that a nonsuit will not be granted on the ground that the plaintiff's counsel has not stated in his opening facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Stewart v. Hamilton, 3 Robt. (N. Y.) 672.

2. Stewart v. Hamilton, 3 Robt. (N. Y.) 672. "I think it is not good practice to nonsuit upon the plaintiff's opening address to the jury, merely for the reason that he has failed to state to them sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action, although I am aware that such a practice has obtained in some of our courts. In his opening, the plaintiff's counsel may properly, and usually does, state such facts only as he desires to impress upon the minds of the jurors. To hold him, in his address, to the exactness and certainty of a pleading would, in many cases, be to impose upon him a duty which would be exceedingly inconvenient, if not impossible, for him to perform orally. Indeed, I see no reason why he may not state to the jury, or refrain from stating, just so much of the case as his judgment dictates. I do not mean to say that a fatal admission made by the plaintiff's counsel in his opening may not entitle the defendant thereupon to a judgment dismissing the complaint, without the formality of taking evidence which must necessarily be useless." See also Stewart v. Hamilton, 18 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 298; 28 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 265.

3. Such motions will not be granted where the misjoinder appears on the record. In such cases, demurrers, writs of error, motions in arrest of judgment and pleas in abatement are the proper means of taking advantage of the errors. See the case of Bond v. Hilton, 6 Jones (N. Car.) 180; Hammond v. Walker, 1 S. Car. 109; Prunty v. Mitchell, 76 Va. 169.

"Where by a special written contract put in evidence by the plaintiff, as part of the main case, it appeared that the action should have been brought by another party thereon, held, that a nonsuit was properly awarded." Southwestern R. Co. v. Millian, 62 Ga. 607. See also Perry v. Butt, 14 Ga. 699.

4. Magwood v. Milne, 12 Rich. (S. Car.) 474. "In trespass quare clausum fregit on very slight evidence the jury found for the plaintiff. Held, that after the verdict the court would not grant a nonsuit, though a new trial, if asked for, might have been granted."

It has been held that after evidence has been given by both parties, a nonsuit cannot be rightfully ordered. Lyon v. Sibley, 32 Me. 576; Emerson v. Joy, 34 Me. 347. But for a contrary doctrine, see Jansen v. Acker, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 481.

Under the North Carolina practice, and arises from the statute of 2 Henry IV, ch. 7.¹ If a motion for a nonsuit is not made at the trial, the superior court will not consider whether the plaintiff should have been nonsuited or not.²

XIII. HOW ASKED FOR.—The reasons on account of which the judge is asked to grant an involuntary nonsuit must be clearly stated;³ if this is not done the judge should not consider the motion. One object of this requirement is to direct the judge's a motion for nonsuit may, by consent of the parties, be heard and determined out of term time. Gatewood v. Leak, 99 N. Car. 363.

A plaintiff cannot be nonsuited at the return term of the writ in an action in the Circuit Court of Mississippi, for failing to reply to the special pleas of the defendant. If, however, at the term succeeding, the plaintiff fails to perfect the pleadings instantly, the court may enter a judgment of nonsuit against him. Kain v. May, 5 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 368.

3. How Asked for.—Binsse v. Wood, 37 N. Y. 526; Coffey v. Greenfield, 62 Cal. 602, 608.

"On the trial, after the plaintiffs had closed their evidence, Hefner moved for a nonsuit, on the ground that plaintiffs had not introduced any testimony tending to sustain the action. The motion was denied and Hefner excepted. The motion was properly denied. It is settled law in this State, that a party moving for a nonsuit should state in his motion precisely the grounds on which he relied, so that the attention of the court and the opposite counsel may be particularly directed to the supposed defects in the plaintiff's case. People v. Banvard, 27 Cal. 470; Sanchez v. Neary, 41 Cal. 485, 487; Kiler v. Kimbal, 10 Cal. 267; McGarrity v. Byington, 12 Cal. 426, 429. The general ground above stated did not comply with the rule, and therefore the court did not err in denying the motion. We have, however, examined the evidence, and are of opinion that there was testimony tending to sustain the action."

See also Trustees of St. Mary's Church v. Cagger, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 576, 581; Underhill v. Pomeroy, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 603; affirmed upon error, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 388.

"But to say that a plaintiff should be nonsuited because he has shown no right to recover, amounts to little else than to move for a nonsuit on the ground that the plaintiff ought to be nonsuited. No one can say, looking at this first ground of the motion, what question or proposition the defendants' counsel intended to present. If, as may perhaps be inferred from the agreement, though certainly not from anything in the record, it was intended to present the point that the plaintiff was not shown to be the legal representative of William Cagger, it should have been so presented as to apprise her counsel that such was the objection, that he might, if in his power, offer further proof to meet it." Trustees of St. Mary's Church v. Cagger, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 576. See also Castle v. Duryea, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 480; Kiler v. Kimbal, 10 Cal. 267; Booth v. Bunce, 31 N. Y. 246; People v. Banard, 27 Cal. 470; Binsse v. Wood, 37 N. Y. 526.

So in Maryland, where involuntary nonsuits are not allowed, a prayer, offered by defendant asking the court to rule that upon the proof produced the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, was refused because too general. Blair v. Blair, 39 Md. 556. See also Miller v. Luco, 80 Cal. 257; Belcher v. Murphy, 81 Cal. 39; Coffey v. Greenfield, 62 Cal. 602; Brown v. Warren, 16 Nev. 228.

A misjoinder of defendants or of causes of action, not specified by defendants as a ground of a motion for a nonsuit, will not justify an order granting the motion, as it is the settled law of California that the grounds for a nonsuit must be precisely stated by the moving party, and none other can be considered by the court in granting or refusing the motion, or by the appellate court in reviewing the order. Shain v. Forbes, 82 Cal. 527.

Where no grounds for nonsuit were shown by defendant. Silva v. Holland, attention to the particular point and to give fair notice to the opposing counsel. Another object is to make the arguments of the counsel comprehensive, and thus save time and expense. A party who moves for a nonsuit on a specific ground cannot, on appeal, assume a new one.¹

XIV. GRANTED WHERE THE COURT HAS NOT JURISDICTION.—Although usually an objection on the part of the defendant, that the court has not jurisdiction of the case is made in other ways, it may be made by a motion for a nonsuit.²

XV. WHERE THE LAW IS AGAINST PLAINTIFF'S CLAIM.—The most common ground upon which an involuntary nonsuit is granted to a defendant, is where the evidence shows that, as a matter of law, considering the whole case, the plaintiff cannot recover;³ for the court, and not the jury, is the proper tribunal to determine questions of law.

2. Jurisdiction.—Compare, generally, JURISDICTION, 12 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law 306, et seq.; Wilson v. Owens, 1 How. (Miss.) 126, 127.

"It is the question arising upon the motion of the plaintiff to enter a nonsuit in the court below after verdict found. The jury had returned a verdict for the defendant for twelve dollars; and the motion of the plaintiff in error was predicated upon the 18th section of the circuit court law, which provides, that if any suit shall be commenced in any circuit court for a less sum than such court can legally take cognizance of: or if any person shall demand a greater sum than is due on purpose to evade this act, in either case the plaintiff shall be nonsuited and pay costs, provided, etc. In this case there is nothing to show that suit was commenced for more than was due; or that the defendant demanded in his writ a greater sum than was due, on purpose to evade the law defining the jurisdiction of the circuit court . . . judgment will therefore be affirmed."

Vaughan v. Cade, 2 Rich. (S. Car.) 49. "Where in such a matter the plaintiff does not prove himself entitled to more than twenty dollars, or the defendant reduces the demand to or below that sum, by proof of payments made before the action was commenced, there should either be a nonsuit, or a verdict should be rendered for the defendant, semble. Where, however, the verdict is for the plaintiff, the court cannot afterwards grant a nonsuit, or, it seems, arrest the judgment, though it will order the proceedings to be stayed, and might, on proper application, order judgment to be entered for the defendant, as on a verdict in his favor." See also Mera v. Scales, 2 Hawks (N. Car.) 364; Tate v. Blakely, 3 Hill (S. Car.) 297; Pescud v. Hawkins, 71 N. Car. 299.

In Mississippi, a motion by the defendant to enter a nonsuit for want of jurisdiction, after verdict for the plaintiff, will not be sustained, unless the suit was commenced for a sum less than the court can take cognizance of, or for a sum greater than was due, in order to evade the question of jurisdiction. Wilson v. Owens, 1 How. (Miss.) 126.

3. Carpenter v. Smith, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 663, 664. "The plaintiff's proofs showed that he had not procured a purchaser on the terms on which he was authorized, and so proved that as a matter of law he was not entitled to recover for brokerage. The defendant below moved for a nonsuit, which the court refused, and the defendant excepted . . . There was no matter of fact in this case to go to a jury. The evidence showed that as matter of law the plaintiff could not recover . . . The judge in such case should have nonsuited him . . . To allow such a case to go to them, is to make them pass on a question of law, and to deprive the defendant of the right which he has to have, the judge (and not the jury) determine the law." See also Healey v. Utly, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 346, 353; Pratt v. Hull, 13 Johns. (N. Y.)

XVI. FOR INSUFFICIENCY OF PLAINTIFF'S EVIDENCE.—When no sufficient evidence has been adduced by the plaintiff to justify the jury in finding a verdict in his favor, the court may order a nonsuit.¹ But where there is any evidence for the plaintiff, it is improper to grant a nonsuit, and to the plaintiff's evidence must be given the most 334; Foot v. Sabin, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 154; s. c., 10 Am. Dec. 208; Stanley v. Southwood, 4 Phila. (Pa.) 291.

Sacia v. De Graaf, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 356. "The defendant's discharge, under the insolvent act of April 3rd, 1811, will not prevent the statute of limitations running against an account of assumption, upon a contract made before the act; though the money did not fall due upon the contract till after the discharge . . . When the plaintiff proved nothing more than an insolvent discharge, in answer to a plea of the statute of limitations, held that the court should have nonsuited him, and they refusing to do so, error lies upon a bill of exceptions taken to their decision."

"Where a plaintiff fails to make out a case, it matters not upon what grounds a nonsuit is ordered." Pope v. Boyle, 98 Mo. 527.

"After the supreme court, upon review of both law and facts, has held that there can be no recovery in an action for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant because of the gross negligence of the plaintiff, it is not error for the superior court on a second trial to award a nonsuit; the evidence for the plaintiff being precisely the same as that submitted by him on the former trial." Smith v. Central R. & Banking Co., 82 Ga. 801.

"In a clear case the judge should direct a nonsuit, though not asked to do so. Allgro v. Duncan, 24 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 210."

1. Evidence.—Bragdon v. Appleton Mut. F. Ins. Co., 42 Me. 259, 260.

"The nonsuit, in this action, was directed by the judge after the evidence on both sides had been presented to the jury. To this direction the plaintiffs excepted . . . When the plaintiffs' evidence, taken in its full strength, has no tendency, in the opinion of the judge, to maintain the issue for him, it is a useless consumption of time to hear evidence in defence, and after that direct a nonsuit. Bailey v. Kimball, 26 N. H. 351." Mason v. Lewis, 1 G. Greene (Iowa) 494; Ellis v. Ohio L. Ins. etc.

Colt v. Sixth Ave. R. Co., 49 N. Y. 671. "It is not enough to justify a nonsuit that the court upon a case made might in the exercise of its discretion, grant a new trial. It is only where there is no evidence in law, which, if believed, will sustain a verdict, that the court is called upon to nonsuit; and the evidence may be sufficient in law to sustain a verdict, although so greatly against the apparent weight of evidence as to justify the granting of a new trial." Where a plaintiff has pleaded matters sufficient to make out a contract, and others wholly immaterial, he must prove the material parts or he will be nonsuited. Boyd v. Townsend, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 183.

In Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Rogers, 119 Ill. 49; s. c., 59 Am. Rep. 810, the court held, that where no evidence has been offered to prove any material allegation in the declaration, put in issue by the pleadings, and not admitted for the purposes of the trial, or otherwise waived or dispensed with, the court will, on motion, exclude the evidence offered on other issues in the case, and direct the jury to find for the defendant. A nonsuit has also been held proper where the evidence leaves the right of the plaintiff to recover in doubt. Yerké v. Allen, 20 La. Ann. 237; Smith v. Thielen, 17 La. Ann. 239.

The test of the power of a judge to order a nonsuit, does not lie in the absence of all testimony in opposition to the case in favor of which the ruling is made, but whether there is any testimony from which the jury can reasonably conclude that the facts sought to be proven are established. Baldwin v. Shannon, 43 N. J. L. 596.

1. Spensley v. Lancashire Ins. Co., 54 Wis. 433, 439. "From the authorities cited it is manifest that the trial court was not, and this court is not, called upon to weigh and determine the preponderance of evidence. If a plaintiff has no right to have his cause submitted to the jury unless there is a preponderance of the evidence in his favor, then by parity of reasoning the defendant has no right to have it submitted to the jury unless there is a preponderance of evidence in his favor. If this is so, then, as the evidence must always preponderate in favor of one party or the other, or else be equally balanced, it would follow that the court would always be justified in taking the case from the jury on the motion of one party or the other, except when the evidence was equally balanced. Such, however, is not the rule.

The simple question is, whether the evidence in behalf of the plaintiff, had it remained undisputed, and giving it the most favorable construction it will legitimately bear, including all reasonable inference from it, is sufficient to justify a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. In other words, is there evidence, when so construed, tending to prove that lightning was an agency in the destruction of the plaintiff's building, within the meaning of the policy?" the jury to determine the weight of any competent evidence.¹ Where there is a conflict of evidence the court will adopt the view of the contested facts claimed by the plaintiff.² And it has been held that to justify a nonsuit, there must have been such a total failure of proof as would have required a verdict for the plaintiff

An exception to the admissibility of evidence on one point will not ordinarily raise the question of nonsuit for want of evidence on another. Wiley v. Portsmouth (N. H.), 9 Atl. Rep. 220.

A nonsuit ought not to be granted where the effect will be to take from the jury questions of fact which are not free from every reasonable doubt. Gravis v. Santway (Supreme Ct.), 6 N. Y. Supp. 892.

The refusal to order a nonsuit on account of the insufficiency of the plaintiff's evidence affords no ground of exception, it being a matter merely of discretion. French v. Stanley, 21 Me. 512; Wentworth v. Leonard, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 414.

1. Jury Must Pass Upon the Evidence.—Wilkinson v. Scott, 17 Mass. 249, 256, 257. "The plaintiff was nonsuited. . . . If we were called upon to say whether the evidence, as reported by the judge, was sufficient to enable the plaintiff to recover, we should probably not hesitate to decide in the negative. But, as the evidence was legally competent, it was for the jury to pass upon it. The nonsuit therefore must be set aside and a new trial granted."

Where there is any evidence upon the question at issue before the court and jury, upon which the jury may found a verdict, the question should be submitted to the jury, and it is error in the court to grant a nonsuit. Thorn-ton v. Gibson, 43 Ga. 395; Eaton v. Lancaster, 79 Me. 477; Black v. Lewiston (Idaho), 13 Pac. Rep. 80; Green v. Collins, 36 Ga. 581; Woodrow v. Cooper, 3 Iowa 214; *Coleman v. "The prerogative of the court to withdraw from the jury the consideration of facts, is not exercised except in cases where the evidence is so indefinite and uncertain that nothing but wild conjecture . . . could induce the jury to find the verdict that is sought; or where the evidence is all on one side and not controverted." Ferguson v. Shepherd (Ga.), 9 S. E. Rep. 789; Mercier v. Mercier, 43 Ga. 323; Byrd v. Blessing, 11 Ohio St. 362.

2. Where Evidence Is Conflicting.—Shay v. Richmond etc. Turnpike Road Co., 1 Bush (Ky.) 108, 109. "On motion of the defendants, the court instructed the jury, peremptorily, to find for the defendants; and, in accordance with this instruction, a verdict and judgment were rendered, from which Shay had appealed to this court.

To authorize a nonsuit for insufficient evidence, it must appear that, admitting the testimony to be true, and giving the plaintiff the benefit of every inference that is fairly deducible from it, the plaintiff has still failed to support his claim. This, in our opinion, is not such a case; and the jury should have been permitted to determine for themselves what weight was due to the evidence." See also Sheridan v. Brooklyn etc. R. Co., 36 N. Y. 39; s. c., 93 Am. Dec. 490; Wheaton v. Newcomb, 48 N. Y. Super. Ct. 215; Myers v. Dixon, 45 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 48.

"Where an issue of fact is to be determined by a jury, and the evidence is conflicting, or conduces to make out plaintiff's cause of action, it is improper to direct a nonsuit. Lingenfelten v. Louisville etc. R. Co. (Ky.), 4 S. W. Rep. 185. See also Bentley v. Owego Mut. Ben. Assoc. (Supreme Ct.), 5 N. Y. Supp. 223.

Where the plaintiff's evidence makes out a prima facie case, and the deto be set aside for want of evidence to support it.¹ Where a plaintiff, on the evidence, should be allowed to recover nominal damages, it is proper to deny a nonsuit. The court should not consider the evidence of the defendant.² And where the defendant offers evidence in his own behalf, which supplies the defect existing in the plaintiff's proofs, he waives the error in overruling his motion for a nonsuit.³

XVII. INTRODUCTION OF NEW EVIDENCE AFTER MOTION FOR NONSUIT.

—Whether a plaintiff shall be allowed to introduce new testimony after he says he has closed his opening evidence, and the defendant has moved for a nonsuit, generally has been held to be a matter within the discretion of the judge conducting the trial.⁴

defendant's evidence simply raises a conflict, his motions to dismiss the complaint at the close of plaintiff's case, and at the close of the testimony on both sides, are properly denied. Weckmann v. Am Ende, 57 N. Y. Super. Ct. 595.

1. Grant v. Baker, 12 Oregon 329, 331. "The first ground of the motion for the nonsuit was wholly untenable. The question whether the evidence was sufficient to entitle the appellant to a recovery was for the jury, and not the court. To authorize the court to nonsuit a plaintiff, the latter must fail to prove a cause sufficient to be submitted to the jury. It must be such a case that, if the jury were to find a verdict for the plaintiff, the court could be required to set it aside for want of evidence to support it (Civ. Code, §§ 243, 244). It would have to be a case where there was a total failure of proof of some material allegation of the complaint, which appears from the bill of exceptions, not to have been the fact in this case." 2. Evidence Produced by Defendant.—Rose v. Learned, 14 Mass. 154, was a case of assumpsit on a promissory note. At the trial on the general issue after the plaintiff had produced the note declared on, the execution of which on the part of the defendants was not denied, the defendants read in evidence a deposition which went to show that the note was originally given on a condition, which had wholly failed, and that of course nothing was due upon the note." The court said (p. 155): "The nonsuit must be set aside, and a new trial granted; because the nonsuit was ordered, not for the defect of evidence on the part of the plaintiff; but on evidence produced by the defendant, which might not have been believed by the jury." See also Hancock v. Hubbell, 71 Cal. 537; Pillsbury v. Pillsbury, 20 N. H. 90; Chappell v. Bates, 56 Conn. 568; People v. Metropolitan Telephone etc. Co., 64 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 120; s. c., 11 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 304; Ramsey v. O'Leary, 61 Me. 366.

Where the evidence shows that plaintiff is entitled to nominal damages, it is error to take the case from the jury, at least if the recovery of such damages will also entitle him to costs. Potter v. Mellen, 36 Minn. 122.

"On a motion for a nonsuit, the court takes into consideration all the evidence of the plaintiff, whether given on cross-examination or on the examination-in-chief." Eastman v. Howard, 30 Me. 58; s. c., 50 Am. Dec. 611.

But see contra, Rudd v. Davis, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 287, where a nonsuit was granted on evidence furnished by defendant alone.

4. New Evidence.—Larman v. Huey, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 436; Robinson v. Abell, 17 Ohio 36.

In May v. Hanson, 5 Cal. 360, the court held in an action against a ferryman, that it was no error to allow the plaintiff to introduce the ferry licence after motion of nonsuit, as this was a matter within the discretion of the court.

"It is almost a matter of course to let in new evidence for the plaintiff, on a motion for a nonsuit?" McColgan v. McKay, 25 Ga. 631.

It is no abuse of discretion for the court to re-open a case after nonsuit and permit the plaintiff to supply proof omitted by oversight. Remlinger v. Young, 22 Wis. 426; Browning v. Hoff, 2 Bailey (S. Car.) 174; Poole v. Mitchell, 1 Hill (S. Car.) 304.

1. Facts Proved Different from Facts Alleged.—Johnson v. Moss, 45 Cal. 515-517.

2. Walker v. Briggs, 8 Rich. (S. Car.) L. 440. "In a case for malicious prosecution the declaration described the finding of the grand jury to be 'No bill. S. Cannon Foreman.' The finding proved was 'No bill. Richard S. Cannon, Foreman.' Nonsuit for the variance refused." The Court 441. "The finding was sufficiently described by the words 'No bill,' and, indeed, that was the whole finding of the grand jury. It cannot be pretended that the mistake in the name of the foreman showed that the plaintiff had no cause of action, for, with or without it, the declaration sets out a good cause of action. I therefore conclude that the name of the foreman was surplusage; the motion for a nonsuit must necessarily fail." So "A variance between the note set out in justice's return and the one offered in evidence which is corrected by an amended return, is no ground for a nonsuit." Higley v. Bryan, 3 G. Greene (Iowa) 284.

A nonsuit was properly ordered where the only evidence offered by the defendant consisted of city records and deeds, the genuineness of which were admitted, and the force and effect of which alone were disputed. White v. Bradley, 66 Me. 254.

A nonsuit was awarded, where, by a special written contract put in evidence by the plaintiff as part of the main case, it appeared that the action should have been brought by another party thereon. Southwestern R. Co. v. Millian, 62 Ga. 607.

Some Instances in Which Nonsuits Were Refused.—Uncertainty in declaration was held not ground for a nonsuit. Jossey v. Stapleton, 57 Ga. 144.

Failure to separately designate two distinct causes of action stated in a complaint was held not ground for nonsuit, as any doubt might have been remedied by a motion to make more definite. Commercial Bank v. Pfeiffer, 22 Hun (N. Y.) 327.

XX. SETTING ASIDE A NONSUIT.—A nonsuit will be set aside, in the discretion of the court, where justice requires it,¹ and a motion

A variance between allegation and proofs is not ground for a nonsuit under the South Carolina Code. The only remedy is an amendment by affidavit. Ahrens v. State Bank, 3 S. Car. 401.

The refusal of plaintiff to answer interrogations filed by defendant in an action on a note, for the purpose of establishing the fact that the ownership of the note is in a third person, furnishes no sufficient ground for a nonsuit. Knight v. Booth, 35 Tex. 10.

Error Without Injury.—Where a cause was continued "until the next term, with the express understanding that it is to be tried then or dismissed from the docket," held, that a nonsuit entered at the second ensuing term was error without injury. Stewart v. Ross, 58 Ala. 264.

Where plaintiff was adjudged a bankrupt after suit was begun, it was held, not to be ground for nonsuit. But the court may direct the jury, if they find for plaintiff, to find that he recover for the use of his assignee in bankruptcy. Woodall v. Holliday, 44 Ga. 18. See also Austin v. Markham, 44 Ga. 161.

Whenever a defendant is wrongfully dispossessed of his land by legal process, he is entitled to a writ of restitution, and an inquisition of damages in that action, of which the plaintiff is not permitted to deprive him by taking a nonsuit. Lane v. Morton, 81 N. Car. 38.

1. Setting Aside.—Williams v. Sinclair, 3 McLean (U. S.) 289; Boyce v. Mooney, 40 Mo. 104; George v. Taylor, 55 Tex. 97; Peck v. McKellar, 33 Tex. 234; Walker v. Boaz, 2 Rob. (Va.) 485; Wright v. Thomas, 6 Tex. 420; Robinson v. Abell, 17 Ohio 36; Martin v. Van Bergen, 1 Greene (Iowa) 314. A judge may set aside an order of nonsuit made by himself at the same term. Chichester v. Hastie, 9 S. Car. 330.

Surprise.—A party who is surprised by the decision of the court in ruling out his testimony, may take a nonsuit, and afterwards move to set it aside and reinstate the cause on the docket, and an appeal will lie from the judgment of the court overruling such motion. Huston v. Berry, 3 Tex. 235. See also Bank of Illinois v. Hicks, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 128.

"Unavoidable accidents to the plaintiff and his witnesses are a reasonable ground for setting aside a nonsuit, ordered because the plaintiff was not ready for trial when the docket was called." Douglass v. Frizzle, 2 Bailey (S. Car.) 417.

Where a note is filed without a warr., and the defendant pleads, puts the case on the trial list, and obtains a nonsuit, the nonsuit will be set aside on motion. Taylor v. Pearl, 2 Miles (Pa.) 291.

If one insists, on account of the ruling of the judge, on being nonsuited after giving all his evidence, he will not be allowed to make a case on which to found a motion for setting aside the nonsuit. Forbes v. Luyster, 2 Hall (N. Y.) 403.

Trial With or Without a Jury.—A motion to set aside a nonsuit cannot be made, if the case nowhere shows whether the trial was with or without a jury; in such case the rulings at the circuit can only be reversed on appeal. Cronk v. Canfield, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 171.

A nonsuit improperly rendered in the court below will be set aside upon exception, although no request to have the questions submitted to the jury whether such were the facts has been made. Sheldon v. Atlantic etc. Ins. Co., 26 N. Y. 460; s. c., 84 Am. Dec. 23.

After Evidence Given on Both Sides.—A nonsuit granted after evidence given on both sides will not be set aside for that cause alone. Fort v. Collins, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 109.

Death of Plaintiff.—The court will not hear a motion to set aside a nonsuit at the trial, the plaintiff having since died, and the effect obviously being merely to unsettle the question of costs. Seymour v. Deyo, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 289.

The court will not set aside a nonsuit given on a contract where the damages are merely nominal, in order to allow the plaintiff to recover such nominal damages. Brantingham v. Fay, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 255.

A nonsuit improvidently entered may be set aside, but the court cannot order on the trial at the same term, in the absence of the defendant. Fifield v. Leeds, 18 N. J. L. 166.

Mistake of Counsel.—Where the plaintiff was nonsuited through a mistaken construction by his counsel of a certain statute and judicial decision thereupon, to set aside a nonsuit cannot be assigned for error.¹ Where a nonsuit is set aside, the presumption is that it was set aside for sufficient cause, unless the contrary appears from the record.² And a nonsuit will not be set aside, though improperly directed, unless a verdict in favor of the plaintiff will lay the foundation for a legal judgment.³

XXI. REINSTATEMENT OF CAUSE.—Where, after a judgment of nonsuit, a motion is made on specific grounds to reinstate the case, and none of the grounds are sufficient, a judgment denying the motion is proper and will not be reversed, although, it seems, had another ground been presented, the motion to reinstate might have been well founded.⁴ Reinstating a case is a matter in the discretion of the court.⁵ And where a party voluntarily suffers a nonsuit, the cause cannot be reinstated.

XXII. INVOLUNTARY NONSUIT NO BAR TO ANOTHER SUIT.—An involuntary nonsuit is not a bar to a new action, just as we have seen that a voluntary nonsuit is not a bar. It is not a judgment on the the nonsuit was set aside upon payment of costs. Boyce v. Mooney, 40 Mo. 104.

When Voluntarily Taken.—The supreme court will not set aside a nonsuit voluntarily taken by a plaintiff. Dumey v. Shoeffler, 20 Mo. 323; s. c., 24 Mo. 170; Shulter v. Bockwinkle, 19 Mo. 647.

A nonsuit will not be set aside and a new trial granted, where it appears that a verdict in favor of the plaintiff would be against the evidence produced at the trial, if it does not appear that other evidence exists. Hoyt v. Gilman, 8 Mass. 336; Salem Bank v. Gloucester Bank, 17 Mass. 1; Monfort v. Hogland, 2 N. J. L. 144.

Where a party plaintiff in the circuit court in Mississippi, upon the rejection by the court of his testimony, suffers a nonsuit, with leave to set it aside during the term, upon the refusal of the court subsequently to set the nonsuit aside, he cannot prosecute a writ of error thereto. Thornton v. Demoss, 13 Miss. 609; Earwig v. Glidwell, 4 Miss. 332; Copeland v. Means, 10 Miss. 519.

2. Heydon v. Lockhart, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 308.

Although, as a general rule, when a plea in reconvention has been filed, the plaintiff is not entitled to a voluntary nonsuit, yet a motion to set it aside will be refused where no reason is given for not objecting to it at the time, and where no merit is shown in the plea. Brown v. Pfouts, 53 Tex. 221.

"A nonsuit cannot be set aside upon suggestion; an affidavit is necessary." Dearing v. Taylor, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 49.

"It does not require so strong ground to set aside a nonsuit as to grant a new trial." McAlister v. Williams, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 119.

3. Jones v. Smith, 14 Ohio, 606. See also Tompkins v. Phipps, 68 Ga. 155.

Where a nonsuit is ordered for want of evidence, and the plaintiff afterwards offers to introduce the necessary evidence before judgment is entered, and moves to have the nonsuit set aside, it is within the discretion of the court to grant or refuse the motion. Robinson v. Abell, 17 Ohio 36.

4. Reinstatement.—McBride v. Latham, 79 Ga. 661; Shipley v. Eiswald, 54 Ga. 520.

Rules Governing a Case Reinstated.—A case reinstated and standing for trial, is subject to the same rules as any other, and the failure to have the party in court when called having arisen out of a misapprehension as to where he was to be, a motion to open a nonsuit should be allowed. Lindsay v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 63 Mich. 735.

5. George v. Taylor, 55 Tex. 97; McDermaid v. Earnest, 4 Strobb. (S. Car.) 192.

merits.¹ A judgment on a nonsuit before verdict is no bar to another action for the same cause.²

XXIII. NONSUIT ON APPEAL.—Wherever a nonsuit has been granted against the will of the plaintiff, such ruling of the court is always ground for exception, and an appeal can be taken.³ But it has been held that, where a defendant makes a motion for a nonsuit and the motion is refused, he will not be allowed to take an appeal. Such is clearly the law in Pennsylvania, where, since a refusal to enter a compulsory nonsuit is not assignable for error, the remedy of the defendant is by prayer to the court for instruction to the jury upon the insufficiency of the plaintiff's evidence; he may always prepare the particular point on which instruction is desired, and the court is bound to give it.⁴ It

1. No Bar to Another Suit.—Morgan v. Bliss, 2 Mass. 111, 113.

3. Appeal.—Van Wormer v. Mayor etc. of Albany, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 169, 172.

"It is settled in this State, that if the plaintiff fails to make out his case so as to authorize the jury to find a verdict in his favor, the defendant may move for a nonsuit, which the judge is bound to grant, even without the plaintiff's consent. In such a case, therefore, if the plaintiff thinks the decision of the judge in granting the nonsuit erroneous, he has a right to tender a bill of exceptions, for the purpose of raising the question of law upon the evidence adduced, and also to show that the nonsuit was compulsory and not voluntary on his part." See also Cravens v. Dewey, 13 Cal. 40; Spruill v. Trader, 5 Jones (N. Car.) 39.

4. Girard v. Gettig, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 234. "As it seems to be growing into a custom to take an exception, because the court below would not order a nonsuit, it may save future trouble of that kind to declare our opinion, that such exceptions cannot be sustained, because it is out of the power of the court to order a nonsuit against the consent of the plaintiff, who may refuse to enter it, and insist on taking the verdict. This is no injury to the party who wishes the court's opinion, because he may always prepare the particular point on which the opinion is desired, and the court is bound to give it." See also Borough of Easton v. Neff, 102 Pa. St. 474; s. c., 48 Am. Rep. 213; Lehman v. Kellerman, 65 Pa. St. 489; Ballentine v. White, 77 Pa. Greenfield*, 62 Cal. 602.

French v. Stanley, 21 Me. 512, 517. "There is still another ground of exception relied upon. It is that the judge should have nonsuited the plaintiff, because it was not proved in the first instance, directly, that the execution reached Davis within thirty days after the rendition of the judgment against Barker . . . From these facts the plaintiff insisted that the jury would be authorized to presume that it must have reached him in due season. The judge declined to order the plaintiff to be called. This afforded no ground for an exception to be taken. It was purely a matter of discretion with the judge, whether to take or decline to take that course. In Massachusetts and in England, it has been held that a nonsuit cannot be ordered in the course of a trial to the jury, but upon the express or tacit consent of the plaintiff." See also Wentworth v. Leonard, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 414.

NON SUM INFORMATUS—NONUSER—NORTH.

plaintiff may become nonsuit without costs upon the bankruptcy of the defendant.¹

NON SUM INFORMATUS.—A judgment non sum informatus is rendered against a defendant when he enters upon the record that he is not informed of any defence to the action.²

NONUSER.—Omission to assert some privilege; exercise some franchise; exert some right.³

3. Abbott's Law Dict.

As an enjoyment for twenty years is necessary to found a presumption of a grant, the general rule is that there must be a similar nonuser to raise the presumption of a release. The mere nonuser of an easement for twenty years will afford a presumption of a release or extinguishment, but not a very strong one in a case unaided by circumstances. 3 Kent's Com. 448; Wright v. Freeman, 5 Har. & J. (Md.) 477.

A nonuser or cessation for twenty years unexplained, is regarded as a presumption that the right has been surrendered or that it never existed; but a mere nonuser for any time less than twenty years does not amount to an abandonment of the right. Jamaica Pond Aqueduct Co. v. Chandler, 121 Mass. 3; Williams v. Nelson, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 141; Carlisle v. Cooper, 19 N. J. Eq. 256. See also EASEMENT; PRESCRIPTION.

4. Northerly is not, in a description in a deed, synonymous with north. Garvin v. Dean, 115 Mass. 577; Howard v. College of the Holy Cross, 116 Mass. 117.

"The words 'northerly and easterly' may be more comprehensive in their meaning than north and east, depending very largely for that meaning upon the facts to which they are applied. Where there is no object to direct the course they must, at least in the description in a deed, be taken to indicate a direction due north or east; but when there are monuments upon the face of the earth to which they are applicable, they may have their legiti-mate meaning and full force and yet the course incline either way to any distance, so long as it tends toward the north or east, and in connection with these facts retain a definite and unmistakable meaning. The course will still retain its characteristic as northerly, or easterly, or both." Foster v. Foss, 77 Me. 280; Irwin v. Towne, 42 Cal. 329.

Northern Passage.—"What 'the northern passage,' as used in this contract, means, therefore, is either a question of fact or a question of construction applicable to understood facts. If it is, as the court below says it appears to be, a term of art, which, taken by itself, without the aid of the testimony, is unintelligible, then its meaning in 'the art'—the trade—is one of the material facts in the case on which the rights of the parties depend, and it should have been found and put into the findings of fact which the circuit court was required by law to make . . . If, in point of fact, there is no passage to which the name or description of 'the northern' has been given in the trade, then the question becomes one of construction, as applied to the known facts of the business. The enquiry is not as to which passage would be the quickest, or even the best, or which another contract would require of another vessel, but which is 'the northern passage' within the meaning of this contract." WAITE, C. J., in the John H. Pearson, 121 U. S. 469.

As to what constitutes a "northern passage" from Gibraltar to Boston, COLT, J., uses the following language: "In the Mediterranean fruit trade the term 'northern passage' had a distinct meaning, and that was, a course from Gibraltar north of the Azores, if possible; if not, just south of the islands; thence to the southern point or tail of the Great Banks, and then direct to Boston." The John H. Pearson, 33 Fed. Rep. 846.

"Not depart the court without leave" means not depart from the term of the court at which he was recognized to appear. State v. Baker, 50 Me. 56.

Not Exactly.—An insolvent was to have the benefit of the Act, 1 & 2 V. ch. 110, though (§ 93) a debt was specified in his schedule "not exactly," if error was without any culpable negligence, fraud, or evil intention. Hoyle v. Blore, 14 M. & W. 387.

Not Exceeding.—"Not exceeding eighty acres" in a homestead law, see EXCEED, 7 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law 113.

By a Massachusetts statute, a town or city is authorized to "appropriate money for suitable buildings or rooms," and for "the foundation of a library a sum not exceeding one dollar for each of its ratable polls." The words "not exceeding" in that sentence do not necessarily qualify and limit the whole clause. On the contrary, it was held that they restrict the latter provision only. Dearborn v. Brookline, 97 Mass. 469.

"Not Known or Used Before the Application" in Patent Laws.—"What, then, is the true meaning of the words 'not known or used before the application?' They cannot mean that the thing invented was not known or used by the inventor himself, for that would be to prohibit him from the only means of obtaining a patent . . . The words, then, to have any rational interpretation must mean not known or used by others before the application . . . We think, then, the true meaning must be not known or used by the public before the application." Story, J., in Pennock v. Dialogue, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 18. See also PATENT LAWS.

Not Less.—Where time is to be computed as "not less" than a given number of days, that means clear days. Chambers v. Smith, 12 M. & W. 2;

The phrase "clear days" means that the time is to be reckoned exclusive of both the first and last days." Liffin v. Pitcher, 1 Dowl., N. S. 767. See R. S. C., Ord. 64, R. 12.

"The words 'not less than fifty dollars,' and 'not less than one hundred,' may well be construed as 'fifty dollars, and no less,' and 'one hundred dollars and no less,' and it appears to me that it ought to be so construed." ARMOUR, C. J., construing the Canada Temperance act in Reg. v. Smith, 16 Ont. 454.

"Not More Than" in Penal Statute.—The Rev. Stats. of Massachusetts enumerated all cases of malicious mischief, and fixed the penalty in each case; and further provided that, for all offences of a like kind, not particularly described, the punishment should be imprisonment in the state prison for a term not exceeding five years, etc. A subsequent statute provided that the punishment in the cases of malicious mischief, not enumerated in the Revised Statutes, should be imprisonment, etc., "not more than thirty days." Held, these negative words, in a subsequent statute, do limit and restrain the operation of the Revised Statutes as to all cases within such statute, as effectually as any words of repeal could do. Britton v. Com., 1 Cush. (Mass.) 302.

Not Otherwise Hereinbefore Provided for.—See 9 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law 360.

Not Settled.—A devise of lands, "not settled," or "out of settlement," or "not by him formerly settled or thereby disposed of," will pass an unsettled reversion in fee, of lands of which a lesser estate or interest is in settlement. 1 Jarm. 654, 655.

"Not to be Paid by Us," etc.—The words "but not to be paid by us in any event within one year from date," added to the endorsement of a non-negotiable note, do not waive due presentment, but merely postpone the time of payment by the endorsee. Hart v. Eastman, 7 Minn. 74.

"Not to be Performed Within a Year."—See STATUTE OF FRAUDS, 8 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law 85.

Not to be.—An agreement "not to be performed within the space of one year from the making thereof" means one which, you can see from its terms, cannot be so performed. Peter v. Comp-ton, Skinner 353; 1 Sm. L. C. 359; Boydell v. Drummond, 11 East 142; Souch v. Strawbridge, 2 C. B. 808; McGregor v. McGregor, 21 Q. B. D. 424. The last case shows that Davey v. Shannon, 4 Ex. D. 81, was not well decided. See further McManus v. Cooke, 35 Ch. D. 681; s. c., 35 W. R. 754; 51 J. P. 708.

Not to My Knowledge.—Where a proper requisition on title is made on a question of fact, "an answer by the seller's solicitor, 'not to his knowledge,' is not satisfactory; he should apply to his client for information before he answers the enquiry, and, if necessary, search amongst the title deeds." Sug. V. & P. 416.

I. DEFINITION—GENERAL CHARACTER.—An officer who publicly attests deeds or other writings to make them authentic in another country. Also an officer who confirms and attests the truth of writings to render them available as evidence.¹

The office is one of great antiquity, having originated under the early Roman jurisprudence, notaries being first known as Tabelliones forenses. The offices of scriba, exceptor and notarius existed previous to the tabellio, but were of a different character, though they somewhat approached it. The powers and duties of the tabelliones were very similar to those of the notaries of the present day.² In England the office of notary existed before the Conquest; and is frequently referred to in history. The general nature of the office has come down from that time, changed only as the character of the age has made it requisite.³

A notary is a public officer, and the act of one who is such de facto though not de jure cannot be collaterally assailed.⁴ Upon his death or resignation his records pass, rather by usage than by law, to his successor, and such successor does not usually fill his unexpired term, but holds office for the usual term from the time of his appointment.⁵

Not Worth the Expense.—"Where a Scotch lease (of mines) gave liberty to determine if the minerals became 'not worth the expense of working,' and they became so through a fall in the market price, the lessees were held entitled to determine." MacS. 244, n. 4, citing Shotts Co. v. Deas, 8 Sess. Ca. (4th series), 530. See also Jones v. Shears, 7 C. & P. 346; Newton v. Nock, 43 L. T. 197.

Another definition is "an officer appointed to draw up and attest deeds and contracts and to perform other and similar functions." Notary Public, American Encyc. (Appleton's), vol. 12.

3. Proffatt on Notaries, § 6, et seq.; Burke's Office and Practice of a Notary 6.

Thus, in Shakespeare's "Merchant of Venice," Art I, Sc. 3, we find the notary referred to as a very common officer where the veteran Shylock insists, "Go with me to a notary and seal me there your single bond."

Notaries public exist in every country of Europe, and their powers and duties are prescribed by the respective laws thereof and by the civil and mercantile law. All official acts done by them which fall within the rules of law-merchant are respected under the law of nations.

Therefore a deposition or acknowledgment taken by a de facto notary cannot be suppressed on the ground that such notary had not qualified as required by law. Keeney v. Leas, 14 Iowa 464; Hamilton v. Pitcher, 53 Mo. 334.

A notary public is not a magistrate within the meaning of a policy of insurance requiring proof of loss to be accompanied by a certificate of a magistrate nearest the place of fire. Cayon v. Dwelling-house Ins. Co., 68 Wis. 510.

Where, as in Georgia, notaries public are appointed for four years, the act of a notary who, after that time, attests an affidavit in good faith, is that of an officer de facto. Smith v. Meador, 74 Ga. 416.

5. Kelley v. Gilly, 5 La. Ann. 534; State v. Percy, 5 La. Ann. 282; Guzman v. Walker, 11 La. Ann. 693.

Where the plaintiff held a commission as notary public in the parish of Orleans when an act was passed affecting

As a rule, the duties of a notary public are ministerial and not judicial,¹ though not always; for example, in taking an acknowledgment to a deed he acts in a judicial character in determining when a person representing himself to be or represented by some one else to be the grantor named in the conveyance, is actually the grantor.²

When a notary's term of office has expired and by ceasing to perform a notary's duties he ceases to be a de facto officer, he becomes functus officio, and all acts performed by him are of no more force than those of a private citizen;³ therefore he may not then alter or amend his certificate.

II. WHO ELIGIBLE.—It is required that the notary be a citizen of the State in which he is to act, and also that he be a person of good moral character. In some States a certain length of residence is required before one can qualify.⁴ It seems that it is not necessary that one be of the age of twenty-one in order to be eligible to the office.⁵ The principal question which has arisen in this connection is, whether members of the female sex can be the office of every notary in the parish and providing that the governor should appoint not less than forty nor more than sixty notaries for the same, and forty-eight notaries were thereupon appointed, it was held that the plaintiff was functus officio, although no one had been appointed specially to take his records. Cragg v. Westmore, 13 La. Ann. 344. See also Halliday v. McDougal, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 81, 264.

In Louisiana, however, the fact that one is a notary public does not entitle him to any property in, or control over, the records of a deceased notary. State v. Laresche, 24 La. Ann. 148.

When a person appointed a notary public for the parish of Orleans ceases to be such, La. Stat. 1857, ch. 85, § 3, makes it the duty of the governor to designate by order, under the seal of the State, the notary to whose custody the records of the former notary shall be consigned; and courts are bound to presume, when a notary of the parish of Orleans certifies that he has in his custody the record of a former notary of the parish, that the governor has properly discharged his official duty, and has designated him (the notary) as the custodian thereof. Ledoux v. Jamieson, 18 La. An. 130.

But in the case of Bours v. Zachariah, 11 Cal. 281, it is said that he may not amend his certificate of acknowledgment after making delivery and return. See also post, sub. tit. TO TAKE ACKNOWLEDGMENTS, 8 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law 2.

4. Proffatt on Notaries, § 13.

In New York no bond is required, and appointments are made very indiscriminately; a large proportion of the members of the bar are notaries. In Maryland, the applicant must have had a residence of two years in that State. So in Pennsylvania, with the additional qualification of one year's residence in the city or county, and it is almost the universal requisite that a bond varying in amount from $500 to $2,000 be taken. See Proffatt on Notaries, § 13, where the laws relative to this matter in every State are given in detail.

Where a constitution or statute declares that certain disqualifications shall render a person ineligible to an office he must get rid of his disqualification before he is appointed or elected. But if the law merely forbids him to hold or enjoy the office, it is sufficient if he qualifies himself before he is sworn. Com. v. Pyle, 18 Pa. St. 519.

5. In the case of United States v. Bixby, 10 Biss. (U. S.) 520, it is said allowed to qualify as notaries. In Massachusetts, they are not so eligible, and the same opinion is held in most of the other States.¹

III. APPOINTMENT—1. In England.—In England notaries are appointed by the "court of faculties," which is called a court, "although it holdeth no plea of controversie."² that there is nothing in the constitution or statutes of Indiana making minors ineligible to the office of notary public, such office not being a county office within the meaning of the constitution, wherein it is provided that none but electors shall hold county offices. See also People v. Dean, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 438.

1. In the Opinion of the Justices, 150 Mass. 586, it was said that the statute of Massachusetts which authorizes the appointment of women who are attorneys at law, as special commissioners to administer oaths, to take depositions and acknowledgment of deeds, and that the statute which permits these special commissioners, in addition, to administer all oaths which may be administered by the justice of the peace, and to issue summons for witnesses—interpreted with reference to the history and nature of the office, and the long-continued and constant practice of the government here, and the usage elsewhere—cannot be considered as showing any intention by the legislature that women should be appointed as notaries public.

In re House Bill 116 (Col.), 21 Pac. Rep. 473, it was held that the constitution of Colorado prohibiting the election or appointment "to any civil or military office in the State," of any person except a qualified elector, and providing that no person shall be eligible to a county office unless he be a qualified elector, women cannot be appointed notaries public. See also In re Notaries Public, 9 Col. 628.

In National Bank v. Conway, 1 Hughes (U. S.) 37; s. c., 41 Alb. L. J. 244, is found a strong argument in favor of the eligibility of women to the office of notary public in New York. In the course of the argument it is said "the performance of the duties of a notary public are ministerial and not judicial. An acknowledgment may be taken by a relative who could not act judicially because of the relationship." Lynch v. Livingstone, 6 N. Y. 422; National Bank v. Conway, 1 Hughes (U. S.) 37. Compare Reed v. Newcomblers (Vt. 1890), 19 Atl. Rep. 367.

"So every member is interested as one of the beneficiaries in the trust, if not in fact a grantee or grantor in the deed. National etc. Co. v. Conway, 1 Hughes (U. S.) 37. A married or single woman may be appointed by rule of court as arbitrator under a statute authorizing a submission "to any person or persons." Evans v. Ives, 1 Luz. Leg. Reg. 461, the court in this case citing Kyd on Awards, p. 70, where it was said that an unmarried woman may be arbitrator and where the case of Duchess of Suffolk, 8 E. 41; s. c., 1 Br. 37, is cited as authority.

"The term 'person,' unless restricted, includes in its natural meaning a woman. Matter of Hall, 50 Conn. 131; s. c., 47 Am. Rep. 626.

"In the Opinion of the Justices, 115 Mass. 602, the court said: 'The common law of England, which was our law upon the subject, permitted a woman to fill any legal office of an administrative character, and the duties attached to which were such that a woman was competent to perform them.'

"Again, ministerial offices may be granted to any person, and even to women, if they are capable of performing them properly." Chitty's Prerog. of the Crown 84. In Alabama, by act of 1887, women are made eligible to the office.

2. Proffatt on Notaries, § 11; Brooke's Office and Practice of a Notary 6, 9.

By 18 & 19 Vict., ch. 42, ambassadors and British diplomatic and consular agents in foreign countries and places, are enabled to do abroad all such notarial acts as public notaries may do in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

The Master of the Faculties, in exercising the discretion given to him by 3 & 4 Wm. IV, ch. 70, § 2, in the appointment of notaries public, will, while paying due regard to vested interests, above all things, consider the convenience and accommodation of the merchants, shipowners, and bankers carrying on business in the town where it is proposed to appoint additional notaries. Increase of population alone, unless accompanied by an increase of shipping

2. In America.—In nearly every State of the Union, notaries public are appointed by the executive, sometimes without the necessity of the appointment being approved by the senate.¹ In some States certain public officers are constituted notaries by virtue of their office.² The length of time for which they are appointed is regulated by statute and varies in the different States. An official bond is always required varying in amount from five hundred to two thousand dollars.³

IV. JURISDICTION.—Notaries have a local jurisdiction in the State. As a general rule they can only exercise their functions in the county or district for which they are commissioned; but in some places they are authorized to act with full official powers throughout the State so long as they reside in the place for which they were appointed.⁴ Courts will take judicial notice of and mercantile business, is no sufficient ground for the appointment of additional notaries. Graham v. Smart, 9 Jur., N. S. 387.

Apprenticeship and Articles.—A party bound apprentice for the term of seven years, who, during the whole of that term, acted as a banker's clerk daily till five o'clock in the evening, and after that hour went to the notary and presented bills of exchange, and prepared protests, was not actually employed by the public notary during the whole period of seven years, within 41 Geo. III, ch. 79, § 7, and consequently he was not entitled to act as a notary; and the court refused a mandamus to the Scriveners' Company to admit such a party to the freedom of the company, in order that he might be admitted to practice as a notary. Rex v. Scriveners' Company, 10 B. & C. 511.

1. Proffatt on Notaries, § 12, where the usages and statutes of every State are collected.

In Texas it seems that the appointment must be ratified by the senate. Brown v. State, 43 Tex. 349, 478. So also in New York.

2. For example, in Mississippi it is enacted that "all justices of the peace in this State, mayors of incorporated cities and the clerks of the circuit and chancery courts, shall be notaries public by virtue of their office."

The authority of a notary, who is lawfully such by virtue of his holding some other office, is fully as ample to authenticate conveyances for the purpose of registration as if he were notary by direct appointment. Wilson v. Simpson, 68 Tex. 306.

3. Proffatt on Notaries, § 13.

In Alabama there are two classes of notaries whom the governor is authorized to appoint, viz: those having justice's jurisdiction, who hold for three years only; and others who hold for three years and until their successor qualifies. Cary v. State, 76 Ala. 78.

The term of office of a notary, appointed before La. Const. 1845, was limited to four years after it went into effect. State v. Pecry, 5 La. Ann. 282. Compare Guzman v. Walker, 11 La. Ann. 693.

The clause in the bond of a notary public that he will "well and truly perform and discharge the duties of a notary public according to law," embraces every act which he is authorized or required by law to do in virtue of his office. Fogarty v. Finley, 10 Cal. 239; s. c., 70 Am. Dec. 714.

4. The office of notary public is recognized either in the constitution or by statute in every State.

In Arizona, Connecticut, Indiana, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, New York, Oregon, South Carolina, Vermont, Washington and Wisconsin, he may act throughout the State, and is not confined to his own county. In Indiana, while they are authorized to act throughout the State, they cannot be compelled to act outside of the county. In New York, a notary public for either of the counties of Kings, Queens, Richmond, Westchester, Putnam, Suffolk, Rockland, Orange, Dutchess or the city and county of New York, may take acknowledgments and exercise any of the functions of his office in any of these counties, by procuring from the clerk of his county a certified copy of his appointment and the official character of a notary of the State and of his jurisdiction.¹

In several of the States notaries are invested with judicial powers and have concurrent jurisdiction in civil and, in some few instances, criminal matters with justices of the peace.²

V. NOTARIAL SEAL—WHEN REQUISITE.³—Judicial notice is taken of the seal of a notary public as an officer recognized by the commercial world;⁴ although the general rule as to a seal outside filing the same with his autograph signature in the clerk's office of any of the other of said counties. Ex parte Booth, 11 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 145; Produce Bank v. Baldwin, 49 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 277; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Corey (Supreme Ct.), 7 N. Y. Supp. 939.

In the States of Alabama, Illinois, Kansas, Kentucky, Montana, Nebraska, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, West Virginia and Wyoming, he is confined to his own county or locality named in his commission. In such cases a protest must be by the notary of the county in which the place of payment is fixed. Neely v. Morris, 2 Head (Tenn.) 596; s. c., 75 Am. Dec. 753. In the remaining States, the matter of jurisdiction is not mentioned in the statutes, except in Missouri, where a notary public can act only in the county for which he was appointed and in which he resides. Silver v. Kansas City etc. R. Co. 21 Mo. App. 5. The authority of a foreign notary will be presumed to be limited to the county of his appointment. Silver v. Kansas City etc. R. Co., 21 Mo. App. 5. See Proffatt on Notaries, § 22, et seq., where the statute of every State relative to notaries public are collected. See also Maxwell v. Hartmann, 50 Wis. 660; Governor v. Gordon, 15 Ala. 72; Hill v. Bacon, 43 Ill. 477; Wood v. American L. Ins. etc. Co., 7 How. (Miss.) 609; Smith v. Meadow, 74 Ga. 416; Woods v. Polhemus, 8 Ind. 60; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Corey (Supreme Ct.), 7 N. Y. Supp. 939.

Under the statute of New York, providing that notaries public of the State may administer oaths, make proof of acknowledgments, etc., in all cases in which the same may now be taken by commissioners of deeds, a notary may, within his county, take acknowledgment and proof of deeds, etc., though the county be one in which there is no commissioner of deeds. People v. Hascall, 18 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 118.

1. Rowland v. Brown, 15 Iowa 679.

Therefore, where the jurat to an affidavit was signed "C. B. S., Notary Public," and neither the signature nor the jurat indicated for what county the notary was authorized to act or did act, it was held that the jurat was nevertheless sufficient. Stoddard v. Sloan, 65 Iowa 680.

But the signature to a certificate of acknowledgment must show the county for which the notary was appointed, which must be that one in which the certificate purports to have been taken; the name of a county being deemed a part of the official signature of the notary. The fact that the name of the county appears on the seal is not sufficient, that not being a matter required to be shown by the seal. Willard v. Cramer, 36 Iowa 22.

2. Notaries public appointed by the governor "to have and exercise the same jurisdiction as justices of the peace" are considered to have no authority in Alabama to issue original attachments, returnable to the city or circuit courts, that being a special power conferred upon justices; the notary, however, may issue attachments returnable before himself. Vann v. Adams, 71 Ala. 475; Rice v. Watts, 71 Ala. 593; Griffin v. Appleby, 69 Ala. 409; Carroll v. State, 58 Ala. 396.

See also Jackson v. Bain, 74 Ala. 328; Wilcox v. Mitchell, 4 How. (Miss.) 272; Dennistown v. Potts, 26 Miss. 13; Georgia Ice Co. v. Porter, 70 Ga. 637.

The statute recognizing justices of the peace as notaries, does not necessarily abrogate the office of notary. Gilleland v. Drake, 36 Tex. 676.

By special statutory authority, a notary public in the State of Georgia may take an affidavit to hold to bail; and he need not affix his seal merely because he is a notary, since only notarial acts require a seal. Jowers v. Blandy, 58 Ga. 379.

3. See SEAL.

4. Greenleaf on Evid., § 5; 4 Minor's

the State or country of the officer using it is that it must be proven before it can be accepted as the seal it purports to be. It seems, therefore, that the signature of the notary to an instrument going to a foreign country, must be authenticated in some other official manner, which is usually done by the consul or other representative in that country.¹ But in the case of a protest made upon the nonacceptance or nonpayment of a commercial paper, the notarial seal is always sufficient of itself.²

The requisites of a notarial seal are determined by the law of Insts. (2nd ed.); Yeaton v. Fry, 5 Cranch (U. S.) 335.

It is evidence also, prima facie, that the officer is properly commissioned by the executive. Brown v. Philadelphia Bank, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 484.

Notary.—The seal of a notary attached to a document he is authorized to execute, is received, by force of commercial usage or positive law, as sufficient evidence of his official character; but it is not the highest evidence, and the record of his appointment is receivable to prove that character. Hence, where a deposition was taken in another State by a notary public, who neglected to affix his notarial seal to his certificate, but his official character was proved by a certificate of the secretary of the State, annexed to his certificate, the deposition was held to be admissible. Ashcraft v. Chapman, 38 Conn. 230.

The court will judicially notice the seal on a notarial certificate, verifying an affidavit sworn before a magistrate abroad. Cole v. Sherard, 11 Exch. 482.

Where it is necessary to produce a notarial certificate, a court of equity will dispense with an affidavit verifying the notary's handwriting. Hayward v. Stephens, 15 L. T., N. S. 173; 36 L. J., Ch. 135.

Where a power of attorney has been executed before a notary public in a British colony, an affidavit verifying the notarial signature is not necessary under 15 & 16 Vict., ch. 86, § 22. In re Goff, 12 Jur., N. S. 595; 14 L. T., N. S. 727.

Upon a trial for engaging in the slave trade by carrying two blacks from a port in Africa to Brazil, the defendant alleged that the blacks whom he received on board had free papers, purporting to show that they had been manumitted. The court held that it was evidence of the genuineness of the manumission papers, that they were tested and sealed by persons purporting to be Portuguese notaries public on that coast, and who had acted as such in other business; that they were on the kind of paper and under the stamp used in the public offices; were lodged with the proper authorities in Brazil; and the Portuguese consul there certified to the notaries being regular officers of his government, and that the American consul in Brazil obtained and sent to this country all these papers with translations. United States v. Libby, 1 Woodb. & M. (U. S.) 221.

2. Brewster v. Arnold, 1 Wis. 268; Schneider v. Cochrane, 9 La. Ann. 235; s. c., 41 Am. Dec. 204; Crowley v. Barry, 4 Gill (Md.) 194.

Under the law-merchant, a notarial protest is not required to be made in the presence of witnesses, or to be signed by them. The act of the notary, certified by his signature and official seal, is sufficient. Bradford v. Cooper, 1 La. Ann. 325.

Thus it is said in Orr v. Lacy, 4 McLean (U. S.) 343, the notarial seal proves itself in all countries where the law-merchant prevails; it is only necessary that it shall conform to the law of the place where the notary acts. An impression upon paper is as good as upon wax or any other tenacious substance.

Also in Pierce v. Indseth, 106 U. S. 546, it is said judicial notice is taken of the seal of a notary public from any part of the world if impressed upon paper or wax. Such seal authenticates an act of protest, and entitles it to full faith and credit. This case was where a certificate was offered in evidence which had been made in Norway, and which had impressed upon the paper a seal purporting to be that of a notary public in Norway.

the locality from which the official derives his authority; or, if there be no law prescribing what the seal shall be, then by the rules of common law.¹

In the absence of statutory provision, an official seal is the impression on the paper directly or on wax or wafer attached thereto; hence the seal impressed upon a document by a notary public signifies authentication of his official character. It is a seal and not its composition or characters or words and devices which raises the presumption of official character of which courts take judicial notice.² The statutes of nearly every State, however, prescribe accurately what shall constitute the notarial seal and how it shall be used.³

2. Bac. Alar. Obligation (c.); Warren v. Lynch, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 239; 1 Minor's Inst. 536; 4 Id. 19.

Accordingly where a notarial seal affixed to a jurat contained the words "notarial seal Lucas Co., Ohio," the name of the notary being omitted, it was considered sufficient. In re Phillips, 14 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 219.

It seems that the notarial seal should be legible. Donegan v. Wood, 49 Ala. 242; s. c., 20 Am. Rep. 275; Todd v. Neal, 49 Ala. 266.

An impression in ink, in the form of a notarial seal, stamped on the paper, is a sufficient seal to authenticate the certificate of marine protest to which it is attached. The Gallego, 30 Fed. Rep. 271.

Where the copy of a record of the condemnation of property insured, was offered in evidence without the seal of the notary who made the copy, there being merely flourishes of the pen on the margin of each page, it was held that no proof being given that the notary had a seal, the evidence must be rejected. Talcott v. Delaware Ins. Co., 2 Wash. (U. S.) 449.

Official Character.—The court will take judicial notice of the official character of a notary public, and of the county for which he is appointed to act. Rowland v. Brown, 75 Iowa 679.

The statute of Nebraska requires that a notary public shall have the seal containing the words "Notarial seal," the name of the county, and "Nebraska;" and in addition, at his option, his name or the initial letters of his name. It was held that the seal need not have on it the name or initials, unless the notary so chooses, the statute being permissive only. Weeping Water v. Reed, 21 Neb. 261.

In Iowa the form and character of the seal is accurately prescribed by statute, and it is required to be fixed to all certificates by the notary; the absence of such seal will invalidate certificate. The courts of the State do not take judicial notice of the statutes of other States, but in the absence of all proof presume them to be the same as its own; therefore, where the certificate of a notary was attached to a deposition coming from Michigan and with no seal affixed, it was held that this deposition must be suppressed. Stephens v. Williams, 46 Iowa 54.

And a defect in the impression is not sufficiently supplied by writing. Gage v. Dubuque etc. R. Co., 11 Iowa 310.

Each clerk of the county in and for which the notary is appointed, may certify to the fact of his appointment, but cannot certify to the genuineness of the notary's signature, which can only be evidenced by the proper notarial seal. Stephens v. Williams, 46 Iowa 54.

3. It is generally provided that an impression stamped on paper by the notary's die, is a sufficient seal. Connolly v. Goodwin, 5 Cal. 220; Bank of Manchester v. Slason, 13 Vt. 334.

In Indiana the notarial seal need not contain the name of the county, Lange v. State, 956 Ind. 114. Compare, however, Muncie Nat. Bank v. Brown, 112 Ind. 474.

One seal to the certificate of a notary is sufficient, although it is placed in the middle of the page, between the two parts of the certificate. Olcott v. Tioga R. Co., 27 N. Y. 546; 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 179; s. c., 84 Am. Dec. 298.

In Louisiana a notary is not re-

As to when it is necessary that a notary affix his seal to his certificate, the rule is not well fixed. It seems, however, that in all cases in which he exercises authority derived from the law-merchant or from international law, his certificate, in order to be received as evidence, should be authenticated by his official seal as well as by his signature.¹

As to an authority which he exercises under various State statutes, the rule has been laid down that while it is preferable that the seal be used, still the want of it may be supplied by proper proof of his official character and signature.²

In Illinois it is said that his signature is sufficient, provided the quired to have a particular style of seal to give authenticity to his copies. Flemming v. Richardson, 13 La. Ann. 414.

1. Rindskoff v. Malone, 9 Iowa 540; s. c., 74 Am. Dec. 367; Orr v. Lacy, 4 McLean, 9 U. S. 343; Pierce v. Indseth, 106 U. S. 546; Schneider v. Cochrane, 9 La. Ann. 235; s. c., 41 Am. Dec. 204; Brewster v. Arnold, 1 Wis. 268; Pape v. Wright, 116 Ind. 502.

A notary's protest is inadmissible in evidence unless his seal be affixed; though it is allowable for him to affix the seal when this objection is made. Rindskoff v. Malone, 9 Iowa 540; s. c., 74 Am. Dec. 367; Tunis v. Withrow, 10 Iowa 305; s. c., 77 Am. Dec. 117.

But this rule is not universally accepted. Thus, it is held in Palmer v. Whitney, 121 Ind. 58, that the signature of the notary public to the notice of protest of a bill or note, is sufficient without his attestation by his seal of office, because in so doing he does not act officially, but only as agent of the latter.

In Kentucky, it is held that the official signature of a notary is all that is required to the protest to make it valid. Tyler v. Bank of Kentucky, 7 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 555; Bank of Kentucky v. Pursley, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 238; Hufaker v. National Bank, 12 Bush (Ky.) 287.

Also, in Missouri it is held that a notary's certificate purporting to be executed under his hand and official signature is valid, although the seal be not mentioned. Dale v. Wright, 57 Mo. 110.

In West Virginia, the want of the notarial seal does not prevent a notary's certificate of demand and notice of non payment of note from being received in evidence. Second Nat. Bank v. Chancellor, 9 W. Va. 69.

The acknowledgment of a deed by a notary public of another State without a seal or certificate of his appointment, will be altogether unavailable. Booth v. Cook, 20 Ill. 129; Thielman v. Burg, 77 Ill. 293.

2. Mills v. Dunlap, 3 Cal. 64.

Thus, where the written statement required by the statute was entered on a mortgage of personal property, and was verified before a notary public duly authorized to administer oaths, but the certificate was not authenticated by the notarial seal affixed, it was held, that such verification was sufficient without authentication by seal. Ashley v. Wright, 19 Ohio St. 291.

Under Rev. Stat. of Ill., 1874, conferring upon notaries authority to administer oaths, the jurat to an affidavit sworn to before a notary need not be authenticated by his official seal.

Schæfer v. Kienzer, 123 Ill. 430.

In Texas, it is held that no notarial act is valid unless the seal of office of the notary is affixed. The seal of the county court will not supply its place. McKellar v. Peck, 39 Tex. 381.

Where a chattel mortgage purports to have been acknowledged before a notary, but the certificate is not authenticated by a notarial seal, the filing of the instrument is held to be no notice to subsequent purchasers or mortgagees in good faith; under general statutes of Minn. 1878, which require mortgages in order to constitute such notice, to be acknowledged before some officer authorized to take the acknowledgment of deeds, in ch. 26 requiring that each notary shall provide himself with an official seal with which he shall authenticate his official acts. Thompson v. Scheid, 39 Minn. 104; DeGraw v. King, 28 Minn. 118; Colman v. Goodnow, 36 Minn. 9.

certificate is to be used only in the county in which he is authorized to act; but if to be used elsewhere the seal is necessary.¹

Another rule is stated that the affixing of the notarial seal is not essential to the validity of the notary's acts except in cases where it is required by some rule of common law or statute; in all other cases its want may be supplied by other evidence.²

VI. NOTARIAL FUNCTIONS UNDER THE LAW-MERCHANT.—The law-merchant is a system of law which does not rest exclusively upon the positive institutions and local customs of any particular country, but consists of stated principles of equity and usages of trade, which general convenience and the common sense of justice have established to regulate the dealings of merchants and mariners in all the commercial countries of the civilized world.³

It is practically the general body of commercial usages in matters relative to commerce.⁴ Blackstone designates it the custom of merchants, and ranks it under the head of particular customs of England, which go to make up the great body of the common law; this principle, however, may be well doubted,⁵ since its character is not local, nor is this obligation confined to a particular district, and it cannot therefore with propriety be considered a custom in the technical sense.⁶ These usages, being general and extensive, partake of the character of rules and principles of law, in matters of fact, as do usages which are local and special. They constitute a part of the general law of the land, and their existence therefore, cannot be proven by witnesses, but the judges are bound to take official notice of them; and this application is not

In Georgia, it is held that when a notary takes an affidavit under a special statutory authority, he need not affix a seal merely because he is a notary. Only notarial acts require a seal. Jowers v. Blandy, 58 Ga. 379.

In Michigan, the notary's seal is essential to a notarial act to establish a plat and to prove the existence of a highway. Grand Rapids v. Hastings, 36 Mich. 122.

In Indiana, official acts of a notary public must be authenticated by his official seal; a scrawl is not sufficient. Hinckley v. O'Farrel, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 185; Dumont v. M'Cracken, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 356.

Where a deposition is taken by a notary public, but his seal is not attached to his certificate, but there is a certificate by the clerk of the county under seal, reciting that his official acts are entitled to credit, and that his signature is genuine, it is properly received. Pape v. Wright, 116 Ind. 502.

In Maine the statute of 1821, ch. 101, requires all copies furnished by the notary to be under his hand and seal; but it does not require that the record itself should be under seal, or that the clerk of the court should affix a seal to his copies thereof. Homes v. Smith, 16 Me. 181; s. c., 33 Am. Dec. 650.

confined to merchants, but extends to all parties in any mercantile transaction.¹

While the several functions which devolve upon a notary public at common law are mostly left to be determined and applied by the courts, there are various statutes which provide for numerous other duties, and in some instances declare what shall be deemed commercial paper and provide the manner in which it shall be protested.²

Inland bills of exchange and promissory notes are not commercial paper within the usages of the law-merchant, and it is therefore no part of a notary's duty under the common law to protest them, and his certificate to that effect is not evidence of dishonor;³ nor, except as it may be required by transactions under the law merchant, does the common law authorize a notary to administer

1. Bouvier's Law Dict., Law-merchant.

The commercial law appertains more directly to those branches which relate to the rights, property and relations of persons engaged in commerce, and the subjects with which it deals even as administered in any one country, or dispersed throughout the globe; but the terms "law-merchant" and "commercial law" are often apparently used as meaning the same thing

2. The creation of the office of notary public by statute authorizes the officer to act in the form prescribed by the common law, as it is impossible for him to use the seal required by the legislature; the right to perform notarial acts having also been recognized by several subsequent statutes. The requisites of the seal prescribed by the act of 1803 must be regarded as obsolete by the omission to declare what are the arms of the States. Kirksey v. Bates, 7 Port. (Ala.) 529.

The certificate in the protest of a notary, setting forth the demand and refusal of an inland bill and notice, to the drawer and endorsers, is made evident by statute, yet it is not conclusive; and it is competent for the party to show such a state of facts as prove that the certificate is untrue. Bank of Mobile v. Marston, 7 Ala. 108.

The courts of the State as organized in 1870 would not recognize as valid the official act of a notary public in New Orleans in 1862, who assumed to act under the authority of the Confederate government. When notice and protest of a bill of exchange is sent through the postoffices as authorized by our statute, it must be sent by the mail regularly established by the laws of the United States, which are judicially known to have been suspended in Louisiana prior to Feb. 1, 1862.

No authority is given by statute to a notary public to certify a fact in regard to a bill of exchange independent of the protest. Whitman v. Farmers' Bank, 8 Port. (Ala.) 258.

Until the contrary is shown, the presumption is that in a sister State a notary public has no other authority than that which is derived from the common law. Chandler v. Hanna, 73 Ala. 390.

A notary in protesting a note for non-payment in New York is not bound to give notice to the endorsers. Morgan v. Van Ingen, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 204; Bank of Rochester v. Gray, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 227.

It is no part of official duty of a notary to give notice to prior endorsers of a note when he protests it for nonpayment; and if he promise the holder, but omit to do so, such promise will not enure to the benefit of a prior endorser. Morgan v. Van Ingen, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 204.

The Kentucky law of 1864, intended to alter the law-merchant as to notice of protest, is so indefinite in its mandatory clause that judicial construction was necessary to enable notaries to know their legal duties thereunder. Accordingly, where an indorser was released by a notary's mailing a notice according to custom, and his and the bank officers' construction of the law, the notary was not liable. Neal v. Taylor, 9 Bush (Ky.) 380.

3. At common law, the protest of a notary public is not evidence of the notice of the dishonor of an inland bill of oaths or affirmations.¹ All those acts sanctioned by the local authority which a notary public, in common with other officers, may perform are not within the powers which he exercises by virtue of the law of nations. It is under this law that the notary exercises the most important of his duties, that of protesting foreign bills of exchange—his duties concerning which are treated elsewhere.

1. As to Commercial Paper.—The duties of a notary public in regard to commercial paper are of an official character, and a due administration of his powers, in this regard, is required by substantially the same rules² of responsibility that govern in other official transactions.³

exchange, although it might contain averment that notice was given. It is by statute alone that such evidence is admissible. Rives v. Parmley, 18 Ala. 256.

A protest is not required on inland bills or promissory notes unless by a local law or usage; and such protest is not of itself evidence of demand, non-payment or notice. Bond v. Bragg, 17 Ill. 69; MacAllister v. Smith, 17 Ill. 328; s. c., 65 Am. Dec. 651; Choteau v. Jones, 11 Ill. 300; s. c., 50 Am. Dec. 460. See also, as confirming the text, Swayze v. Britton, 17 Kan. 625; Bowling v. Arthur, 34 Miss. 41; Union Bank v. Humphreys, 48 Me. 172; Vandewater v. Williamson, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 140.

1. Hill v. Norris, 2 Ala. 640, where it is said that independent of any statutory regulation extending the power of a notary public, his certificate is only evidence of such acts as he does under lex mercatoria. See also Chandler v. Hanna, 73 Ala. 390; Jenks v. Jenks, 47 Tex. 221.

A marine protest is considered merely a voluntary affidavit, for a notary public has no authority to take such protest under the lex mercatoria; a notary's duty relates only to commercial transactions which occur in one country and which are to be proved in another, or in which foreigners are interested; it is founded on the comity of nations. Patterson v. Maryland Ins. Co., 3 Harr. & J. (Md.) 71; s. c., 5 Am. Dec. 419.

2. PROTEST, Am. & Eng. Encyc. See also DUNAND, BILLS AND NOTES.

3. By accepting the office and entering upon the discharge of its duties, a notary public contracts with those who employ him that he will perform such duty with integrity, diligence and skill, and a party employing a notary is not obliged to determine upon the validity or legality of his acts. Fogarty v. Finlay, 10 Cal. 239.

It is well settled in this State, that a bank receiving commercial paper as agent for collection, properly discharges its duty, in case of nonpayment, by placing the paper in the hands of a notary public, to be proceeded with in such manner as to charge the parties to it and receive the rights of the owner; and that the bank is not liable for the failure of the notary public to discharge his duty; in such case, the notary public is the subagent of the holder, and is responsible directly to him. Tiernan v. Commercial Bank, 7 How. (Miss.) 648; s. c., 40 Am. Dec. 83; Agricultural Bank v. Commercial Bank, 7 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 592.

Every intendment is to be in favor of the performance of his duty by a notary who certifies to the protest of negotiable paper for nonpayment. McAndrew v. Radway, 34 N. Y. 511.

The authority of a notary to demand payment of a bill and give the requisite notices, is to be inferred from the fact that the bill was in his possession. Burbank v. Beach, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 326; Succession of Tete, 7 La. Ann. 95.

A notary public is an officer appointed by public authority, and parties have a right to assume, in the absence of notice to the contrary, that he is a fit and proper agent for the discharge of the duties of that office. A note sent for collection to a bank located in a town at considerable distance from the residence of the maker, may properly be delivered to a notary public, at the place where the maker resides, for presentment and protest, and if so delivered in due season, that will be a good defence for the bank, in an action

The requisites of a presentment or demand for acceptance or payment, also of a protest and notice of protest are set forth elsewhere.¹ Proof of the dishonor and of protest for nonpayment are made by the notary's certificate of protest.²

(a) Due Diligence Required.—In the discharge of all his duties, but particularly as regards commercial paper, a notary is required to exercise due diligence. It is a part of the exercise of due diligence to resort to all proper sources of information within his reach to obtain what information is necessary for the proper exercise of his duties.³

against it for the loss of the debt occasioned by the premature presentment and protest of the note and notice to endorsers and the insolvency of the maker. Stacey v. Dane Co. Bank, 12 Miss. 629.

In Mississippi, a notary public is a public officer and becomes the agent of the holder of negotiable paper entrusted to him for demand and protest, and is alone liable to the holder for any failure or negligence in the discharge of his official duties, even though the paper is entrusted to him without the knowledge or authority of the holder by a bank to which it has been sent for the purpose of collection. Britton v. Niccolls, 14 Otto (U. S.) 757.

Notarial protests of foreign notaries are received in evidence as making proof of themselves, and bills drawn from one State on another are regarded as foreign bills to that extent; but beyond this, the acts of foreign notaries or notaries of other States, are not admissible in evidence without proof of the signatures and capacity as notaries. Notice to parties sought to be charged as drawers or endorsers of bills must be proved, like all other facts; and the Louisiana statute of 1827, which makes the certificate of notice by notaries in Louisiana competent evidence of such notice, has no effect beyond such instruments executed within that State, and by officers whose acts are thus clothed by law with the authority of authentic evidence. Schneider v. Cochrane, 9 La. Ann. 235; s. c., 61 Am. Dec. 204.

In order to charge an endorser of a bill of exchange, drawn in this and payable in another State, it is not required that the notary should attach to the protest a certificate of protest, except for the purpose of recovering statutory damages; notice of demand and nonpayment is sufficient to charge the endorser. Estep v. Cecil, 6 Ohio St. 536; Case v. Heffner, 10 Ohio 180; McMurchev v. Robinson, 10 Ohio 496.

2. The notarial certificate of protest is sufficient proof of the dishonor of a foreign bill. Williamson v. Turner, 2 Bay (S. Car.) 410, 411; s. c., 1 Am. Dec. 652, S. P. elsewhere; Bryden v. Taylor, 2 Har. & J. (Md.) 396, 399; s. c., 3 Am. Dec. 554; Nicholls v. Webb, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 326, 333; Townsley v. Sumrall, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 170, 179; Lonsdale v. Brown, 4 Wash. (U. The minutes of proceedings of a foreign notary public are held records by courtesy of nations; and a copy, under the hand and notarial seal of the notary, is sufficient evidence of the protest of a foreign bill of exchange for nonacceptance. Bryden v. Taylor, 2 Har. & J. (Md.) 396; s. c., 3 Am. Dec. 554.

The fact that a notary's certificate of presentment and protest of a draft for nonpayment was not dated at the time of protest, does not render it incompetent to prove such presentment and dishonor. Chatham Bank v. Allison, 15 Iowa 357.

Where a notary's clerk testified that he had no recollection of giving a certain notice, but from seeing his endorsement to that effect was satisfied in his own mind that he had done so, this evidence was held competent and sufficient to prove notice. Worley v. Waldran, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 548; Cole v. Jessup, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 395.

3. Marston v. Bank of Mobile, 10

It is a general rule that due diligence is the exercise of the same degree of care usually observed by prudent business men in relation to their own immediate interests.¹

Whether or not the notary has used the proper diligence, is a mixed question of law and fact, and the facts once having been ascertained, is a question of law purely.²

VII. POWERS AND DUTIES UNDER UNITED STATES LAWS—In United States Courts.—By authority of several acts of congress to that effect, United States courts and officials accept as valid the acts of notaries public in administering oaths and taking acknowledgments which are authorized to be taken by justices of the peace;³ also all acts in taking testimony, including deposi-

Ala. 284; Whitridge v. Rider, 22 Md. 548. In this case it appeared that the notary, having ascertained from proper persons that the residence of an endorser was in Baltimore county, but failing to obtain from them information of his actual or nearest postoffice, neglected to apply to the makers of the note, although he knew them and their place of business was within convenient reach, on the ground of their presumed interest not to give him correct information; but subsequently directed his notice to the endorser at Baltimore city and placed it in a postoffice there. The court held, that the notary in neglecting to apply to the makers for the information sought, failed in his duty, and did not exercise sufficient diligence to charge the endorsers. L. 28; s. c., 36 Am. Rep. 505.

A written notice to the endorser addressed to him properly and put into the postoffice in due season, amounts to due diligence, even though the letter should never be received. *Washington Banking Co. v. In the case *United States v. John D. where, by special statute it is authorized to be taken by a notary public; therefore, a notary public being a State officer cannot administer oaths to United States officials except where the statute specifically states that an oath may be so made before a State officer. United States v. Hall, 131 U. S. 50.

3. Rev. Stat. U. S., §§ 863, 864. Depositions in admiralty cases may properly be taken before a notary public. The United States statutes providing for thus taking depositions is to be construed, and the certificate of the notary, if required to show that the witness was duly cautioned as the statute requires. *Phelps v. VIII. POWERS AND DUTIES IN THE STATES.—Besides the powers which are conferred upon them by the law-merchant and the acts of congress, notaries in the several States possess by virtue of statutes, a certain authority in other matters. In the absence of proof to the contrary, the courts of a State will presume that the notaries of other States have the same power as those of their own.¹

1. To Take Acknowledgments.—A notary is authorized by statute in every State to take acknowledgments of deeds, conveyances, etc. His power in this respect is concurrent with that of other officers, and is governed by the same rules.²

The evidence of the fact that a deed or other paper was acknowledged before him, is generally by his notarial certificate, executed in such form as is provided for such cases. This certificate is presumed to be correct and cannot be attacked collaterally, and can only be impeached by a direct proceeding instituted for that purpose, by showing that the notarial statements it contains are untrue; to establish which, the proof must be clear and satisfactory. The presumption in such case of the regularity of official acts applies in all its force.³

English assignees in bankruptcy, is sufficient to enable them to be admitted as defendants in a suit against bankrupts in this country. Wilson v. Stewart, 1 Cranch (C. C.) 128.

Notaries public have not, under the act of Congress of Sept. 16th, 1850, nor the act of July 29th, 1854, the judicial power to take legal proof of claim by deposition or otherwise against the estate of a bankrupt under the Bankrupt act. In re Strauss, 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 48.

A petition in involuntary bankruptcy was verified before a notary public, proceedings instituted, and an adjudication of bankruptcy made by default. Upon petition by a creditor to vacate the adjudication because the petition was verified before a notary, it was held that the verification before a notary public was irregular, but as the question of proper verification was one of practice and not jurisdiction and the verification had been recognized as proper and an order of adjudication entered, it was too late for the debtor or any creditor to raise the question. In re Getchell, 8 Ben. Compare, however, Keefer v. Mason, 36 Ill. 408, where it is maintained that the court will not presume, in the absence of proof, that a notary of another State has any authority except that which belongs to him by virtue of the general law-merchant, authority, for example, to administer oaths.

Under *McClell. Dig. Amending the Certificate.—In the

Where an acknowledgment is taken by a notary in one State to be used in another, some proof of his official character is generally required, and in some States this rule applies as to different counties in the same State in which the acknowledgment is made; but usually the notary's certificate and seal will entitle the instrument to be received in any county of his own State without further authentication.¹

As to the requisites of the certificate by the notary, see ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.²

2. To Take Affidavits.—Authority is given in most of the States to notaries to administer oaths and to take affidavits; but this authority is one derived from statute law and did not belong to the office originally; therefore courts do not take judicial notice of the fact that notaries are authorized to take affidavits outside of the jurisdiction of those courts.³

If an affidavit is taken out of the jurisdiction of the court, it case of Bours et al. v. Zachariah, 11 Cal. 281, it was held that the certificate of acknowledgment of a notary public to a deed is not an act in pais which he may exercise by virtue of his office, at any time while in office. That he derives his power to take and certify acknowledgments to deeds from the statute; he acts as under a special commission for that particular case, being clothed with limited statutory power to take the acknowledgment and certify it as a part of the same transaction. After taking the acknowledgment and making and delivering the return, his functions cease, and he is discharged from all further authority and cannot alter or amend his certificate. Compare Chicago etc. R. Co. v. Lewis, 53 Iowa 101.

1. The notary's capacity to take acknowledgments, being entirely founded upon statute law and not upon the law-merchant, he has no authority in this respect beyond his own State. See Johnson v. McGehee, 1 Ala. 186.

A certificate of acknowledgment taken in one county of New York and properly authenticated by seal, etc., is admissible all over the State. People v. Hascall, 18 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 118; Utica etc. R. Co. v. Stewart, 33 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 312.

Where the court has to say: "Power to administer oaths is not one of the incidents of the office of notary public under the general law-merchant, nor was it, as far as we can ascertain, under the Roman law, of which this office is derived. If that power is annexed to the office, it is so by virtue of positive enactment, and we cannot presume its existence in the absence of all proof or ground for presumption." See also Paige v. Price, 78 N. Car. 10.

It is not usual for notaries to have this power in other countries; they do not exercise it in Canada—for example, there are "commissioners of affidavits" appointed for that purpose. See Proffatt on Notaries, § 50.

An affidavit made out of the State verifying the return of the service of summons in pursuance of the regulation of the Code, § 74, may be made before any officer authorized to take depositions, and by § 341 a notary public is so authorized. Fitch v. Campen, 31 Ohio St. 646.

An affidavit to be used within the State where it is taken, may be executed before a notary public in every State of the Union. When it is made in the United States, but out of the State where it is to be used, an affidavit may be made before a notary public for use. cannot be recognized unless the authority and official character of the officer are authenticated.¹

The legal presumption of the regularity of acts done by a de facto officer, applies to the performance by the notary of his duties in taking affidavits;² and his authority cannot be questioned collaterally.³

He should, however, sign his name to the certificate; and it seems generally, that the certificate should also state his official character and be authenticated by his notarial seal.⁴ The power to take affidavits includes the power to administer the oath in cases where it is requisite.⁵

An affidavit is defined to be a voluntary oath reduced to writ-

Oath.—In Ohio, in an arbitration under the statute, the oath to the witnesses must be administered by a judge or justice of the peace; therefore, perjury cannot be assigned on the testimony of a witness in such case where the oath was administered by a notary, although the general language of the statute empowered notaries to administer oaths in all cases required or authorized by law. State v. Jackson, 36 Ohio St. 281.

A notary public in another State will be presumed to have authority to administer oaths, in the absence of proof that he has no such authority. Pinkham v. Cockell, 77 Mich. 265.

1. Behn v. Young, 21 Ga. 207. Thus it was held in England, that when an affidavit is made before a notary abroad, the signature of the notary must be verified before the affidavit can be admitted. The verification is generally required to be by the consul or other representative. In re Davfs' Trusts, L. R., 8 Eq. 98; Lyle v. Ellwood, L. R., 15 Eq. 67. See also Haggard v. Iniff, 31 Eng. L. & Eq. 202.

As a notary public, under existing Massachusetts statutes, has the same authority as a justice of the peace to administer oaths, the certificate of entry made for the breach of a condition of a mortgage which the statute requires to be made before a justice of the peace may be made before a notary public. Murphy v. Murphy, 145 Mass. 224.

But a notary public has no authority to administer an oath, such as is required by the act of congress, to a deputy surveyor of the United States, and to take and certify his affidavit in regard to the manner in which he had fulfilled a contract for surveying, to be used in procuring pay for such services. United States v. Hall, 131 U. S. 50. Compare United States v. Neale, 14 Fed. Rep. 767.

The authority of a notary public to administer oaths extends to the verification of statements of witnesses which the parties to a cause have stipulated may be sworn to before the notary, for the purpose of being used as evidence in the cause. Crone v. Angell, 14 Mich. 340.

2. Conolly v. Riley, 25 Md. 402. In the case of Johnson v. Cocks, 12 Ark. 672, it appeared that the transcript of the register of one notary was authenticated by another acting for him in his absence. Under a statute of Louisiana providing for such authentication, it was held, that upon proof of the law allowing this substitution being made, the presumption of law as to persons who act in official stations would apply here.

3. For example, where the question was whether a woman before whom an affidavit was taken, was qualified for the office, it was held, that the sufficiency of the affidavit could not for that reason be enquired into collaterally. See also Findley v. Thorn, 1 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 76.

ing and taken before some officer who has authority to administer and certify the same.¹ The distinction between an affidavit and a deposition should be well observed; it has been thus set forth: "A deposition is a distinct expression, embracing all written evidence verified by oath, and thus includes affidavits;" but in legal language a distinction is maintained in the courts of law and chancery between depositions and affidavits. A deposition is evidence given by a witness under interrogatories, oral or written, and usually written down by an official person; while an affidavit is a mere voluntary act of the party making the oath, and generally is taken without the cognizance of him against whom it is to be used.²

As to the character and requisites of the notary's certificate, see AFFIDAVITS.³

3. To Take Depositions.—Notaries also have power in common with other officers to take depositions; generally by virtue of their office.⁴

This power carries with it the power to issue subpoenas for witnesses, but it seems that it does not confer the power to compel their attendance or to compel them to answer interrogatories by punishing them for contempt of court; the power to do this must be specially conferred by statute.⁵ Nor does the fact that

2. Stimpson v. Brooks, 3 Blatchf. (U. S.) 456; Proffatt on Notaries, § 51; Cal. Code Civ. Proc., § 2003.

In the case of Conolly v. Riley, 25 Md. 402, it appeared that the affidavit to a bill for injunction was made before a notary public of the District of Columbia in respect to whose legal competency to administer the oath, there was no evidence on either side. The court held that the certificate of the administration of the oath and the authentication of it by the notarial seal, were facts from which it might be presumed that these acts were done in the regular exercise of powers conferred by the laws of the district. Also, that in the absence of proof of the statutory qualifications of the notary to administer the oath, it would, according to the practice of this State, be supported by the presumption that he had the same power under the laws of the district as that class of officers have under the laws of this State.

3. 1 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law 310, 311.

4. In more than two-thirds of the States, notaries exercise this power by virtue of their position; in the others it is conferred by statute. Proffatt on Notaries, §§ 20, 70.

As to the general duties of officers taking depositions, see DEPOSITIONS, 5 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law 588, 617.

5. In Kansas it is held that the notary may punish, as for contempt of court, a witness refusing to attend or to answer. In re Abelles, 12 Kan. 451; in that case a party appeared before the notary, but refused to be examined, thereupon he was committed to the custody of the sheriff as keeper of the common jail for contempt; was then brought up on habeas corpus, and it was decided that such commitment was legal. This power, in Kansas, is not expressly conferred by statute, but is incidental to the authority conferred on the officer to take depositions. The same power is given to notaries in Nebraska. Dogge v. State, 21 Neb. 272.

This same question has arisen in Missouri on three separate occasions. In Ex parte McKee it was held that the notary, by virtue of his authority to take depositions, might commit witnesses for refusing to answer interrogatories other than those it was his personal privilege to refuse to answer. In Ex parte Mallinkrodt, it was held that a notary public had no power to commit a witness for refusing to produce books and papers under a subpœna duces tecum; this decision not only seems to be opposed to that in Ex parte McKee, but is also inconsistent with Ex parte Munford, decided later, where it was held that in a pending suit a notary public has power to enforce the attendance of witnesses, and may compel them by imprisonment to answer any questions not violated by personal privilege. See also Ex parte Kreiger, 7 Mo. App. 367, 370.

4. Relative to Negotiable Paper.—By legislation, in many of the States, inland bills of exchange and promissory notes are made commercial paper; in some instances, to the full extent of the common law, while in others only certain things are required to be officially performed in order to fix the liabilities of parties to these instruments, the duties of the notary in relation to them being prescribed by statute.³ It follows, that, whenever the rules of the common law are changed by legislative enactment, the proper exercise of the notarial functions, in such cases, is controlled accordingly.⁴ Thus where a protest is required to charge

The code of California gives special power to notaries to enforce obedience to their subpœnas. Cal. Code of Civ. Proc., § 2031. But it was held in Lezinsky v. Contra Costa Co., 72 Cal. 510, that the superior court in which an action is pending had no power under §§ 1986 and 1991 of the Code, to punish a person for contempt because he had refused to obey a subpœna issued by a notary public, before whom his deposition was to have been taken. See generally United States v. Anonymous, 21 Fed. Rep. 771.

3. It is not necessary, since the enactment of ch. 141, Laws of 1855, that a notary public should specify in his certificate of mailing notice of protest, the reputed place of residence of the party notified or the postoffice nearest thereto. Treadwell v. Hoffman, 5 Daly (N. Y.) 207. To charge endorsers of a promissory note, demand may be made by the agent of the holder instead of by the notary. Merchants'

Bank v. Spicer, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 443; Baer v. Leppert, 12 Hun (N. Y.) 516.

The presentment may be made by any person, and the possession of the note is sufficient authority. Sussex Bank v. Baldwin, 17 N. J. L. 487. A notary in whose hands a negotiable note is placed for demand and protest, must inform the holder with promptness, if he does not give notice of dishonor; and if he undertakes to give notice, he must do so in such a manner as to make it effectual in law. Mars-ton v. Bank of Mobile, 10 Ala. 284.

A notary public is not justified in protesting a note from hearsay information from his clerk. Williamson v. Turner, 2 Bay (S. Car.) 410.

4. The power of a notary public to make protest of a promissory note is plainly recognized in this State, by the act of 1833 (Hutchinson's Digest, p. 868); and in case of the protest of such paper, the duty is clearly enjoined on him to give such notice or notices as are necessary and requisite to charge all the parties sought to be made liable, and who are by law entitled to notice. Where a notary public undertakes to give notice to an endorser on a promissory note, and charges and receives compensation therefor from the holder, and upon his failure to do so, he is liable for the damages occasioned by his neglect. Bowling v. Arthur, 34 Miss. 41.

The protest of a promissory note is governed by the law in force when it falls due, not when it is made. Levering v. Washington, 3 Minn. 323.

In Kansas, a notary public cannot, as a notary public, or as a public offiendorsers on an inland bill or promissory note, but the holder is left to take his own course as to presentation and demand, if this be made by the notary, which is usual, as a matter of convenience, he acts in this respect as the agent of the holder, and not in an official capacity.¹

As to the character of the notary's duties in regard to such paper, see BILLS AND NOTES, 2 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law 365; DEMAND, 5 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law 528; NOTICE; PROTEST.

cer, give notice of the non payment of a promissory note; but if he gives any such notice, he does so merely as the agent of the holder of the note, or as the agent of the person employing him for that purpose. Bank of Lindsborg v. Ober, 31 Kan. 599.

The statute in Tennessee changes the rule of the common law, and it is the official duty of a notary public to give notice of protest for nonpayment of a promissory note. The act is that of a public officer under his official oath, and not as the mere agent of the holder of the paper. A failure to discharge his duty is a breach of his bond. Wheeler v. State, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 393; White v. German Nat. Bank, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 475; Barr v. Marsh, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 255.

1. The relation which exists between a notary and the holder of a negotiable note, with regard to the protest of the note and notice to the endorsers, is that of principal and agent, and no more strict performance of duty is required of the former than is indicated by the uniform practice of the place where the note was protested. Park v. Lowrie, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 507; Vandewater v. Williams, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 140.

Where a bank placed a note left for collection at the bank in the hands of a notary public, he will be regarded as the agent of the bank for whose omission or mistake the bank is liable. Thompson v. Bank of the State, 3 Hill (S. Car.) 77.

A bank which assumes the duty of a collecting agent, is absolutely liable for any negligence or default of a notary or correspondent, as well as its own immediate servants, in relation to it. Davey v. Jones, 42 N. J. L. 28.

A notary public appointed by a bank to do its notarial business by the year, and giving bond to the bank for the faithful performance of his duties, is an agent and officer of the bank; and the bank is responsible for his failure to give notice to an endorser of a note left with it for collection, whereby such endorser was discharged. Gerhardt v. Boatman's Sav. Inst., 38 Mo. 60.

The relation existing between a notary and the holder of commercial paper, with regard to the protest thereof, and notice to the drawer or endorser, is that of principal and agent; and a son of the holder of such paper, if he be a notary public, may act as the agent of his father in his notarial capacity. Fason v. Isbell, 42 Ala. 456.

A notary public does not incur any responsibility to the holder of a promissory note in consequence of his neglect to present the same to the maker and demand payment, unless the latter's place of residence is communicated to him. Vandewater v. Williamson, 6 W. N. C. (Pa.) 350.

The bank at which a bill or note is made payable or left for collection, although having no interest in it, and also a notary public having it as agent of the owner, for the purpose of making demand and protest, are to be regarded as holders, within the meaning of the rule requiring notice to be personal or to be sent through the mail. But, if the notice in such case is put into the postoffice, and it is shown to have been actually received in due season, it would seem to be sufficient. Manchester Bank v. Fellows, 8 Fost. (N. H.) 302.

The owner of a domestic note left it with a bank for collection, and if not collected to fix the liability of an endorser. It not having been paid at maturity, the bank, according to a general usage of the place, handed it to a reputable notary for presentment and protest. Held, that the notary was the subagent of the owner, and the bank is not answerable for a default of a notary in making presentment for payment, whereby the liability of the endorser was released. Bank of Gallipolis v. Butler, 41 Ohio St. 519.

It is no part of the official duty of a notary public to demand payment of

IX. AUTHORITY OF DEPUTY TO ACT.—While, in general, the notary must make the demand for acceptance or payment and perform his other duties personally,¹ yet it is sufficient if the protest conform to the law of the place where it is made;² hence, where the law authorizes the appointment of deputy notaries and provides that they may act in the place of their principal in certain cases, their acts in such cases may be received as valid and binda note placed in his hands for protest. In making such demand he acts simply as the agent of the holder, and if the holder fails to furnish him information as to where the maker can be found, he cannot be charged with negligence in failing to find him. Vandewater v. Williamson, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 140.

It cannot be done by another, even though such other be a notary, as notaries are public officers and as such cannot act as partners. Commercial Bank v. Barksdale, 36 Mo. 563.

Hence, where the protest states that the notary caused the bill to be presented, it is insufficient. Onondaga Co. Bank v. Bates, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 53; Warnick v. Crane, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 460. Also in Sacri-der v. Brown, 3 McLean (U. S.) 481, it is said that a demand for payment of a foreign bill of exchange and protest for nonpayment by the clerk of the notary is of no effect, the notary who acts under oath being clearly the only one who can make the protest.

The certificate of a notary is not evidence of the facts certified, when it appears that he did not perform the service. Demand of payment and notice of protest may, however, be proved by the clerk who did it for him. Hunt v. Maybee, 7 N. Y. 266.

A certificate of protest signed by a notary, but founded upon a presentment and demand made by his clerk, is void. Gawtry v. Doane, 51 N. Y. 85.

2. Tickner v. Roberts, 11 La. Ann. 14; s. c., 30 Am. Dec. 706; McClane v. Fitch, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 599; Ellis v. Commercial Bank, 7 How. (Miss.) 294; s. c., 40 Am. Dec. 63; Bank of Rochester v. Gray, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 227; Raymond v. Holmes, 11 Tex. 54; Rothschild v. Currie, 1 Q. B. 43. See also Dupre v. Richard, 11 Rob. (La.) 495; s. c., 43 Am. Dec. 217, note.

As a general rule a foreign bill must be presented for payment by the notary in person and not by the deputy; but it is otherwise when the law of the place where the bill is payable, authorizes the employment of the deputy and requires that the protest be certified by him by whom the demand was made. Carter v. Union Bank, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 548; s. c., 46 Am. Dec. 89; Union Bank v. Foulkes, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 558; Whitehead v. Jones, 2 McLean (U. S.) 28.

A protest signed by a notary, which certifies that the presentation was made by his deputy, is prima facie evidence that the presentation and protest have been made according to the law and usage of the place where made. Bank of Kentucky v. Garey, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 630.

A bill drawn in one State on a person in another being regarded as a foreign bill, that protest of such bill must be made according to the law of the place where they are made payable. Thompson v. Commercial Bank, 3 Coldw. (Tenn.) 46.

A notice bearing the signature of the notary, though the body of it is in the handwriting of his clerk, is good, and the court will not presume that it was signed in blank. Browning v. Andrews, 3 McLean (U. S.) 576; S. P. Kock v. Bringier, 19 La. Ann. 183; Dwight v. Richardson, 12 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 325.

ing.¹ And where such clearly appears to be the local usage, a presentment or similar act made by the notary's clerk would not be rejected on that ground.²

X. NOTARIAL CAPACITY AFFECTED BY INTEREST.—There is sometimes a restriction imposed by statute upon a notary's capacity to act in certain cases on account of the relationship which he sustains to the party interested or by the fact that he himself is interested otherwise. The rule seems to be that his capacity in regard to the taking of affidavits and acknowledgments, these being purely ministerial acts, is not at all affected by the fact that he is interested in any way;³ but in other cases, particularly in the taking of depositions and in making protests upon the nonpayment or nonacceptance of notes, the fact that he is interested either personally or by reason of his relationship to the parties, disqualifies

1. For example, in New Orleans notaries public, being authorized by law to appoint deputy notaries, and it being their duty to keep a record of the protests in which all acts done by them in relation to protests and giving notice of protest are required to be entered, it is the rule that upon proof of the death of the notary public an original entry in his handwriting made at the time, in such record, is competent evidence to prove the facts of demand, protest and notice under the law of New York. Fassin v. Hubbard, 61 Barb. (N. Y.) 548. See also Manouvrier v. Marvel, 15 La. Ann. 396. Also in Louisiana a protest by a notary after presentment by his deputy is authorized; and a certificate of protest by the notary showing that payment was demanded by his deputy is valid. Lee v. Buford, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 7.

2. Chenowith v. Chamberlain, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 61; Bank of Kentucky v. Garey, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 629; Abrams v. Ervin, 9 Iowa 87; Kemp v. Porter, 7 Ala. 138; Hope v. Sawyer, 14 Ill. 254; Gibbons v. Gentry, 20 Mo. 468; Muller v. Boggs, 25 Cal. 175; McCraren v. McGuire, 23 Miss. 100.

If the law of the place where the bill is payable sanctions the demand by the clerk of the notary, and the making out and signing the protest by the notary himself, it will be regarded as a valid protest. McClane v. Fitch, 4 B. Mon. (Ky.) 600.

Where the presentment and demand of payment of a bill of exchange, payable in Louisiana, were made by a deputy of the notary, and in the protest it was so stated, in an action in Mississippi upon the bill, the presentation and demand were held sufficient under the statute of Louisiana of 1844. Chew v. Read, 11 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 152.

3. Reavis v. Cowell, 56 Cal. 588; Lynch v. Livingston, 6 N. Y. 422; Kuhland v. Sedgwick, 17 Cal. 123. Compare, however, Collins v. Stewart, 16 Neb. 52; Taylor v. Hatch, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 340; King v. Wallace, 3 T. R. (Eng.) 403.

Thus, where a notary public was an employee of a bank in which a member of the firm desiring an attachment was also an employee and stockholder, it was considered that this fact shown, created such a relation between the two as to make it improper for the notary to issue the attachment or to render the writ usually issued void. Georgia Ice Co. v. Porter, 70 Ga. 637.

In the case of National Bank v. Conway, 1 Hughes (U. S.) 37, it was held that a notary is not incompetent to acknowledge and certify a deed of trust by reason of his interest as one of the beneficiaries in the trust, such acknowledgment being merely a ministerial duty.

But in Texas the rule has been stated to be that one who identifies himself with a transaction evidenced by written instrument, by placing his name on the face thereof, as agent for one of the parties thereto, is disqualified to act as a notary public in taking the acknowledgment of any of the parties. Sample v. Irwin, 45 Tex. 567; Brown v. Moore, 35 Tex. 645.

That the attorney of a party who is also a notary public may take the affidavit to a pleading in the cause is, as a

him from acting.¹ The rule has also been laid down that a notary cannot certify or record as matters of fact things which, as being hearsay, he could not testify to as a witness.² A notary certainly cannot take an acknowledgment of a deed to himself or for his own use.³

XI. NOTARIAL ACTS AS EVIDENCE.—All the acts of a notary as such, must be authenticated by his accompanying certificate, and such certificate is evidence of facts stated therein wherever (i. e., within his jurisdiction) produced; provided it be executed in proper form;⁴ but it must be remembered that it is evidence general rule denied. Taylor v. Hatch, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 340; Den v. Geiger, 9 N. J. L. 225. But if he only be counsel in the cause and not the attorney of record, it seems that he is not disqualified. Willard v. Judd, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 531; People v. Spalding, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 326.

In the case of Kuhland v. Sedgwick, 17 Cal. 123, it was held that the attorney of the plaintiff, being a notary public, may take an affidavit verifying the complaint; and in Minnesota in the case of Young v. Young, 1 Minn. 190, that the attorney of record, though a notary public, could take an affidavit of the service of summons. See also Proffatt on Notaries, § 55.

1. Where a notary public because of the relation he holds towards one of the parties is not competent to make a protest, his protest in such case would not charge the endorser. Thus, where the holder is a bank, a protest by a notary who is a stockholder in the bank is incompetent evidence to bind the endorser. Herkimer Co. Bank v. Cox, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 119; s. c., 34 Am. Dec. 220; Bank v. Porter, 2 Watts (Pa.) 141.

The statute of Vermont of 1880, providing that no person shall act in a judicial capacity in any cause or matter wherein "he is related to the other party within the fourth degree of consanguinity or affinity," a notary public is not rendered incompetent to take a deposition in the cause by the fact that the plaintiff is his second cousin, the degree is a relationship being reckoned according to the civil and not the canon law. Reed v. Newcomb (Vt. 1890), 19 A. 367.

In Collins v. Stewart, 16 Neb. 53, it is said, "If a deposition must be taken before an entirely disinterested party, one having no motive to color the evidence, how much more important that the person before whom an ex parte affidavit is taken shall be free from interest and bias." The court should have stricken the affidavit.

2. Adams v. Wright, 14 Wis. 408; Herkimer Co. Bank v. Cox, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 119; s. c., 34 Am. Dec. 220.

4. 1 Greenleaf Ev., § 5, Hutchens v. Mannington, 6 Ves. (Eng.) 825; Browne v. Philadelphia Bank, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 484. See also Townsley v. Sumrall, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 178; Porter v. Judson, 1 Gray (Mass.) 175; Wright v. Barnum, 2 Esp. (Eng.) 700; Lloyd v. McGarr, 3 Pa. St. 474; Schorr v. Woodlief, 23 La. Ann. 473. See also Proffatt on Notaries, § 136.

In the case of Donegan v. Wood, 49 Ala. 242; s. c., 20 Am. Rep. 275, the court refused to recognize as valid the official acts of a notary public in making protest in New Orleans in February, 1862, who was appointed by the Confederate States.

In Mississippi, by the statute of 1833, a certificate of protest by a notary is not evidence unless verified by oath. Dorsey v. Merritt, 6 How. (Miss.) 390.

But the oath need not be made at the time of making up the record. Fleming v. Fulton, 6 How. (Miss.) 473.

Pennsylvania act of 1815—authorizing the notarial acts of notaries public to be given in evidence—is not obligatory in the circuit courts of the United States. Craig v. Browne, 3 Wash. (U. S.) 503.

A certificate made by a notary public that he had given the parties to the bill notice of its dishonor, must be made at the time, and as a part of the protest. Such a certificate, made four and a half years after the date of the protest, is not proof of notice. Boggs v. Branch Bank, 10 Ala. 970.

A notarial copy of an agreement is only of such acts as it is the notary's duty to certify—not of extraneous matters.¹

Therefore, in considering the effect of a notary's acts as evidence, it must be borne in mind what are his powers and duties with regard to the subject matter. Hence, independently of statute, a notary's certificate of the protest of a promissory note is no evidence of that fact since it is no part of his duty under the law-merchant to protest such notes.² So also of inland bills of exchange;³ of the acknowledgment of the release of a debt or not admissible in evidence, where the original is in the hands of the agent of the party producing the copy. Donath v. Insurance Co., 4 Yeates (Pa.) 275.

Sustaining the rule as to the admissibility of the notary's certificate in case of protest as evidence, are many cases. See Ticonic Bank v. Stackpole, 41 Me. 302; s. c., 66 Am. Dec. 246; Loud v. Merrill, 45 Me. 516; Orono Bank v. Wood, 49 Me. 26; Pattee v. McCrillis, 53 Me. 410. Shanklin v. Cooper, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 41; Schoneman v. Fegley, 7 Pa. St. 433; Coleman v. Smith, 26 Pa. (Pa.) 487; Walker v. Bank of Augusta, 3 Ga. 486; Wetherall v. Garrett, 28 Md. 450; Smith v. McManus, 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 477; s. c., 27 Am. Dec. 519; Seneca Co. Bank v. Neass, 5 Den. (N. Ketchum*, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 444; Bank of Kentucky v. Goodale, 20 La. Ann. 50; Bank at Decatur v. Hodges, 9 Ala. 631; Fisher v. State Bank, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 610; Maxwell v. Hartmann, 50 Wis. 660; Turner v. Rogers, 8 Ind. 139; Pyron v. Butler, 27 Tex. 271; Robinson v. Johnson, 1 Mo. 434.

And it is not necessary that the certificate should appear to have been a transcript from some record or register of what took place at the time of sending notice. Starr v. Sanford, 45 Pa. Stat. 193. Compare Randall v. Smith, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 452; Sullivan v. Deadman, 19 Ark. 484; Bank of Mobile v. King, 9 Ala. 279.

1. Schmidt v. Drouet, 42 La. Ann. —; s. c., 8 So. Rep. 396; Drum v. Bradfute, 18 La. Ann. 680; O'Connell

v. Walker, 1 Port. (Ala.) 263; Dutchess Co. Bank v. Ibbotson, 5 Den. (N. Y.) 110. Thus where the protest of a notary public stated that the notice was given to the agent of the party of the protest of his paper, this is not sufficient evidence of such agency, and the agency must be proved aliunde before the protest can be received as evidence of notice. Drum v. Bradfute, 18 La. Ann. 680; O'Connell v. Walker, 1 Port. (Ala.) 267; Castles v. McMath, 1 Ala. 326; Proffatt on Notaries, § 140; Turner v. Rodgers, 8 Ind. 139; Dumont v. Pope, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 367; Bradshaw v. Hedge, 10 Iowa 402. But it is presumptive evidence. Bell v. Lent, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 230.

Where a notary states, in the protest, that he notified the endorsers by addressing notices to them at a place named, proof is requisite that they resided at that place. Turner v. Rogers, 8 Ind. 139.

2. Nicholls v. Webb, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 326; White v. Englehard, 2 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 38; Schmidt v. Drouet, 42 La. Ann. —; s. c., 8 So. Rep. 396.

Therefore a protest by a foreign notary, is not evidence of demand and notice, in an action against endorsers of a promissory note. Schoneman v. Fegley, 7 Pa. St. 433; Coleman v. Smith, 26 Pa. St. 255.

The statute of Mississippi making notarial certificates evidence of demand and notice in such cases is held not to apply to notaries out of the State. White v. Englehart, 2 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 38.

In the case of Williamson v. Patterson the protest of a deceased notary, his handwriting being proved, was held inadmissible to prove a demand and notice by the holder of a promissory note. Williamson v. Patterson, 2 McCord (S. Car.) 132.

unliquidated demand,¹ or of a contract in a foreign country,² or of a certificate of incorporation,³ or of certificates in other and similar cases.⁴

The admissibility of such acts as evidence is not affected by the fact that the notary has no remembrance of them.⁵ It is said that the presentment of a bill or note and the giving of notice to endorsers cannot be proved by showing that a notarial certificate stating those facts once existed and has been lost or destroyed;⁶ but this principle may well be doubted.⁷

After his death the books, records and memoranda of a notary public, proved to have been regularly kept, are admissible in evidence to prove the facts stated therein.⁸

4. Thus where a man enters into a covenant to transact business in a foreign country, a notarial certificate of his being a citizen of the United States, etc., such as is usually obtained by persons going abroad, is not evidence for him of his having made preparations for leaving the United States. Foster v. Davis, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 71.

A statement in a protest of a bill for nonacceptance, that the reason given by the drawee for nonacceptance was, that he had no effects of the drawer, is no evidence of the want of effects. Dumont v. Pope, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 367.

The code of California provides that service of process by a sheriff may be proved by his certificate; but service by any other must be shown by his affidavit. Therefore a notary's mere certificate of service of a summons is insufficient to prove such service. Co. Yolo v. Knight, 71 Cal. 431.

Where a statute requires tax deeds to be acknowledged before the county clerk, a certificate of acknowledgment before a notary public is worthless. Dunlap v. Henry, 76 Mo. 106.

A notarial protest is evidence only of the facts therein recited; and where it merely states that the notice was mailed to the endorser's address, at a certain place, it will not be presumed that the endorser resided in that place. Bradshaw v. Hedge, 10 Iowa 402.

5. Sherer v. Easton Bank, 33 Pa. St. 134; Span v. Baltzell, 1 Fla. 301; s. c., 46 Am. Dec. 346.

The protest of a notary public under seal is evidence of notice of nonpayment to the endorser of a promissory note. If the notary has derived his information merely from a clerk, the jury are to judge whether notice has been given or not. Stewart v. Allison, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 324; s. c., 9 Am. Dec. 433; *Browne v. Thus a duplicate protest of a bill may be given in evidence without producing the original bill, if it be shown that the bill was lost after protest. Usher v. Gaither, 2 Har. & M. (Md.) 457; Chase v. Taylor, 4 Har. & J. (Md.) 54.

If the act of a mortgage be partially destroyed by fire, owing to the burning of the office of the notary who was custodian thereof, but the original document is sufficiently preserved so that its purport and extent are easily comprehended, words used by a notary in his certificate explaining how certain defects occurred will not so change its character from that of an authentic document to that of an act under private signature that the judge cannot issue executory process thereon. Marrero v. Barker, 23 La. Ann. 302.

8. They were held admissible to prove a demand of payment and notice of nonpayment of promissory note. Nicholls v. Webb, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 326.

In some cases the notary may testify as a witness concerning facts connected with the protest, even though no mention of such matter is made in the protest.¹

Where a notary public's certificate shows that he has mailed notice of protest, a prepayment of postage and the performance of similar minor details, as required by postoffice regulations, will be presumed.²

The written memoranda of deceased notary public stating the time and manner of demand and notice of protest are admissible in evidence to prove such facts. Bodley v. Scarborough, 5 How. (Miss.) 729; Barnard v. Planter's Bank, 4 How. (Miss.) 98; Bank v. Cooper, 1 Harr. (Del.) 10; Ogden v. Glidewell, 5 How. (Miss.) 179.

Entries by a notary, made in his books in the ordinary course of his business, are evidence of demand and notice; but the notary must be called, if living; and the mere certificate of a notary of a protest is not sufficient evidence. Hatfield v. Perry, 4 Harr. (Del.) 463.

A memorandum without date, on the back of a protest by the notary, thus, "Notices of the written protest put in the postoffice at Jackson, addressed to" (naming the individuals), is inadmissible as evidence to prove the notice. Hagler v. M'Means, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 278.

Where a notary is dead, a sworn copy of the protest taken from his record of notarial protest together with the original protest is abundant evidence of presentment and refusal. Halliday v. McDougal, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 81.

A memorandum, in the margin of a notary public's book, opposite the entry of the protest of a note of "the endorser duly notified in writing," was held to be good evidence to go to a jury, of notice to the endorser, the notary being dead, and it having been his custom so to record such acts. Bell v. Perkins, Peck (Tenn.) 261; s. c., 14 Am. Dec. 745; S. P. M'Neil v. Elam, Peck (Tenn.) 268.

It is not essential that the entire record of the notary should be made at the very moment of the transaction;

but it is sufficient if done within a few days, in the ordinary course of business. Austin v. Wilson, 24 Vt. 630.

Likewise service of notice of the dishonor of a note may be proved, by calling the notary himself to prove it. Adams v. Wright, 14 Wis. 408; Terbell v. Jones, 15 Wis. 253.

In an action on notes against an endorser, the defendant denied that certain collateral bonds were tendered to the maker at the time the notes were presented for payment, as required by an agreement endorsed on said notes. In such case the notary who had protested the notes could testify to facts connected with the tender, although no mention was made of it in the protest. Butler v. Murison, 18 La. Ann. 363.

But he cannot be allowed to increase his legal fees for those acts which he does in his official capacity, by testimony as to the value of extra services. Hawford v. Adler, 12 La. Ann. 241.

Testimony of a notary, that it appeared from entries in his register that a certain note was presented and dishonored, and notice sent by mail to certain parties, was held admissible. Bliss v. Paine, 11 Mich. 92; Loud v. Merrill, 45 Me. 516.

The statements of persons, to whom the notary was referred, are competent, not as proof of the facts stated, but on the question of diligence of the notary in making enquiry. Adams v. Leland, 5 Bosw. (N. Y.) 411.

1. Effect of Such Evidence.—The certificate or the records of a notary are conclusive evidence as to himself and sureties,¹ but in all other cases they are only prima facie evidence subject to be rebutted either by evidence establishing contrary facts or by proof of malpractice in office, etc.²

XII. LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OR MISCONDUCT IN OFFICE.—For negligence or misconduct, occurring in the line of official duty, and causing loss or damages to the parties employing them, liability attaches to notaries public in like manner as to other officers, under similar conditions.³ And where the notary certifies Shallcross*, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 377; Parry v. Almond, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 284.

2. That the certificate of a notary, in his protest, that he had given notice to the endorser of the nonpayment of a note, is prima facie evidence only of that fact, and may be contradicted by other evidence is established by many cases. See Booker v. Lowry, 1 Ala. 399; Curry v. Bank of Mobile, 8 Port. 1 Ala. 360; Rives v. Parmley, 18 Ala. 256; Union Bank v. Middlebrook, 33 Conn. 95; *McFarland v. Compare the case of Sullivan v. Deadman, 19 Ark. 484, where the court held that the certificate of the notary, who protests a bill of exchange for nonpayment, that he has given notice thereof to the drawer, is not sufficient to charge the drawer with notice. There must be actual proof of notice according to the law-merchant, or of facts which excuse the want of notice. Also compare Bank of Mobile v. King, 9 Ala. 279.

The certificate of a notary, of demand, protest, and notices, verified by oath, according to the statute in Mississippi, is not conclusive, but may be impeached by proof of particular or general acts of malpractice in office, and in making up his records. Wood v. American L. Ins. & Trust Co., 7 How. (Miss.) 609. See Seltzer v. Fuller, 6 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 185.

Where an endorser denies, by affidavit, according to his "knowledge, information, recollection, and belief," the receipt of notice, it is sufficient, under the statute, to destroy the presumption arising from a notarial certificate of the fact. Barker v. Cassidy, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 177.

3. A notary public, having jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, before whom is pending a garnishment in aid of a judgment rendered by him, acts outside of his official duty in collecting that he performed any act which the law includes within the purview of his official duties, knowing such material statements to be false, it is a breach of the conditions in his bond which renders the notary and his sureties liable to the party sustaining damages thereby.¹ So, in verifying an acknowledgment of a deed or mortgage, if the grantor did not, in fact, execute the instrument and in consequence the title or security fails, the party from the garnishee, prior to judgment against him, the amount admitted in his answer to be due by him to the defendant; and in the absence of statutory provisions, the collection would impose no liability on the sureties on the official bond of such notary. But where the notary falsely represents and pretends to the garnishee that he had rendered judgment against him, and thereby pretends that he has the authority to receive the money, and, under such representations and pretences collects the money, such notary, being a bonded officer, and having authority under the statute to collect from the garnishee on rendering a judgment against him, in collecting the money, commits a wrongful act under the color of his office, which renders him and his sureties liable under the statute, in a suit brought against them by the defendant in the original judgment on which the garnishment is founded, for the restitution of the money and interest thereon. Mason v. Crabtree, 71 Ala. 479.

A notary who falsely certified an acknowledgment to a forged satisfaction piece, of a chattel mortgage, is liable to the party injured for all damages sustained, although there was no provision of law authorizing the filing of such an instrument. Lesser v. Wunder, 9 Daly (N. Y.) 70.

A notary will not be held individually responsible for paying the price of sale deposited by the purchaser to the ostensible owner and vendor, in absence of proper instructions accepted by him to pay it otherwise. La. Code, art. 2988, making a mandate incomplete until accepted by the mandatory. McCoy v. Weber, 38 La. Ann. 418.

The provisions of sections 2520, and 2505 of La. Rev. Stat., declaring the consequences of breaches of official duty by a notary, are declared to be both consistent and operative. Therefore an offending notary may be fined under the first mentioned section and suspended from office under the other. State v. Laresche, 28 La. Ann.

In general the holder of a bill is authorized to give full credence to a notary's certificate of demand and notice, and may look to the notary to repair any injury resulting from its falsity. Bank of Mobile v. Marston, 7 Ala. 108. S. P. Fogarty v. Finlay, 10 Cal. 239; Bowling v. Arthur, 34 Miss. 41; Belle-mire v. Bank of United States, 1 Miles, (Pa.) 173.

1. Under Iowa Code, § 1964, making liable any officer who "knowingly misstates" a fact in a certificate, it is held that a notary could not be held liable for simply negligently misstating. Scotten v. Fegan, 62 Iowa 236.

A notary officially certifying as true what he knows to be false, may be prosecuted for a misdemeanor, under La. act of June 7, 1806. Succession of Tete, 7 La. Ann. 95.

The sureties on the official bond of a notary public are liable for any loss or damage caused by his affixing his notarial paraph to any mortgage note which he knew to be forged; and any one injured by his act has a right of action on the bond against his sureties. Rochereau v. Jones, 29 La. Ann. 82.

Where a notary public, in taking and certifying an acknowledgment to a mortgage, neglected to state in his certificate that the party acknowledging the same was known to him or was identified by the testimony of the witness examined by him for that purpose, such notary was guilty of gross and culpable negligence, and is responsible to the party injured for the damages resulting from such negligence.

Such neglect on the part of the notary is not excused by the fact that the certificate was a printed one with blanks which had been partially filled by the attorney of the grantee. For, if the notary read the certificate before signing it, the omission must have been known to him; if he did not read it, he is equally guilty of negligence.

A notary holds himself out to the world as a person competent to perform the business of his office by accepting the office, and entering upon the dis-injured may look to the officer for redress.¹ And, where the notary certifies to personal knowledge of the grantor, and the party is a stranger, the officer gives such assurance at his peril, and may be held to answer for all damages resulting from the fact that the party proved to be an impostor.²

In such case, it is held to be the duty of the notary to call witnesses to prove the identity of the person desiring the certificate, and a failure to employ such precaution, constitutes gross negligence of the officer.³ In like manner, the notary is responsible for neglecting to give notice of protest of negotiable paper, or for making a false certificate of the same, from which failure or mis-charge of the duties he contracts with those who employ him that he will perform such duties with integrity, diligence and skill. A party in employing such a notary is not obliged to determine upon the validity or legality of his acts. Fogarty v. Finley, 10 Cal. 239; s. c., 70 Am. Dec. 714.

The holder of a bill is authorized to give full credence to the notary's certificate of demand and notice, and may look to the notary to repair any injury resulting from its falsity. Bank of Mobile v. Marston, 7 Ala. 108; Fogarty v. Finley, 10 Cal. 239; s. c., 70 Am. Dec. 714; Bowling v. Arthur, 34 Miss. 41; Belmire v. Bank of U. S., 1 Miles (Pa.) 173.

It is not the official duty of a notary in Louisiana to receive money to erase mortgages, and a vendor of real estate that is charged with a general mortgage, who deposits with the notary, passing the title, valuable securities as a guarantee that he will procure the erasure of the same, incurs the risk of the deposit, and must stand the loss if the notary embezzles the securities. Saloy v. Hibernia Nat. Bank, 39 La. Ann. 90.

1. Recovery may be had on a notary's bond for his misfeasance in knowingly certifying the acknowledgment of a mortgagor who has not appeared before him or without reading it; and his liability cannot be made to depend upon whether the mortgagee might have redeemed a prior mortgage, and so reduced the damages. People v. Colby, 39 Mich. 456.

The sureties on the official bond of a notary public are liable for any loss or damage caused by his affixing his notarial paraph to any mortgage note which he knew to be forged. And any one injured by his act has a right of action on the bond against his sureties. 1877, Rochereau v. Jones, 29 La. Ann. 82.

2. Assuming Personal Knowledge of a Grantor.—When the notary, in certifying to "personal knowledge," assumes it, he does so at his own risk. The law warns him, when he has not such actual personal knowledge of his own, to resort to certain precautions to prevent imposition. The very lowest of these observances is proof by two witnesses, who possess such knowledge of the identity of the grantor. State v. Meyer, 2 Mo. App. 413.

3. A notary public, who, in taking acknowledgment of deed, certifies that he is personally acquainted with the grantor when he is not, is liable, if the person acknowledging is an impostor, to all the damages which may be caused by his certificate. It is not a defence that he believed the certificate was true. His official duty is, where he has not personal knowledge of the identity, to ascertain it by credible witnesses who are known to him. State v. Meyer, 2 Mo. App. 413.

May Swear Grantor in His Own Behalf.—The petitioner appeared before a notary public to acknowledge the execution of a deed signed by one Bouchard as grantor. The notary having no personal knowledge of the petitioner, administered to him an oath, as a witness in his own behalf, for the purpose of determining whether he was the person who had signed the deed, and the petitioner testified that he was Bouchard, the person named in and who executed the deed. The petitioner having been committed by a magistrate to answer a charge of perjury in having falsely testified, sought a discharge on habeas corpus. It was held that the notary had the power to administer the oath to the petitioner, as a witness in his own behalf, and his testimony being conduct the endorser is discharged;¹ or for failing to file a mortgage which he had drawn up and agreed to have recorded, where by reason of his neglect the party lost his security, from another mortgage having obtained priority on the record.² But, in all cases, the negligence complained of must be gross and palpable, or the act in question malicious or corrupt, and even then a party who sustains no loss therefrom has no right of recovery against the notary;³ and a reasonable excuse for failing material and false, he is not entitled to a discharge on habeas corpus. Ex parte Carpenter, 64 Cal. 267.

1. The failure of a notary public to give notice of protest of a promissory note is a breach of his official bond. Tevis v. Randall, 6 Cal. 632; s. c., 65 Am. Dec. 547.

A notary who employs another to make presentment of a foreign bill of exchange instead of doing it personally, and makes the protest and gives the notice of nonpayment in his own name, thereby failing to charge the endorser, is guilty of misconduct, which makes him liable, in New York, under the Revised Statutes 284, to the party injured for the damages sustained. Commercial Bank v. Varnum, 3 Lans. (N. Y.) 86.

Security Given Upon False Assurance of Payment of the Note.—Where the endorser of a negotiable note, after its protest for nonpayment, upon the note being shown him by the maker, with the false assurance that it was paid, delivered up to the latter a security which he held for his indemnity, the fact that such a security existed when the note was protested will not excuse the neglect of the notary to give notice of the dishonor to the endorser, nor relieve the notary in an action against him for damages. Marston v. Bank of Mobile, 10 Ala. 284.

2. Negligence of an attorney who was also a notary public, in failing to record a mortgage by filing it with the recorder within the time agreed upon, under a contract made by him "to deliver the mortgage to the recorder for record, and to cause the same to be recorded within ten days," is ground for a cause of action against him for damages incurred. The fact that the certificate of acknowledgment did not contain his seal as notary, when it was a part of his duty on his employment to draw up the mortgage and procure its acknowledgment, is no defence on the ground that the mortgage, if it had been recorded would have been void. Such defence would be bad for another reason. He agreed to "cause the mortgage to be recorded," therefore it was his duty to annex his seal. Stott v. Harrison, 73 Ind. 17.

In a suit against the succession and the surety of a notary, to hold them liable on account of the latter's failure to register, reasonably, an act of mortgage, another act having been in the meantime recorded, cannot be sustained, when it is not alleged that the property has proved insufficient to pay the claims, or that the drawer of the note and the succession of the notary are insolvent; that the debt has not been paid, in whole or in part, and that injury has been suffered. It is not until such facts are alleged and proved, and the dereliction of duty by the notary is established, that damages like those claimed, can be recovered. Dwyer v. Woulfe, 40 La. Ann. 46.

3. Dereliction of duty must be wilful, where notary acts judicially, to render him liable. Therefore, for defectively taking and certifying a married woman's acknowledgment, that being a judicial act, the notary is not liable unless he acted maliciously or corruptly. Henderson v. Smith, 26 W. Va. 829; s. c., 53 Am. Rep. 139.

The liability of an officer for making a false certificate of acknowledgment is fixed by statute, and, to become liable therefor under the statute, he must make the false certificate, not only negligently, but "knowingly." Scotten v. Fegan, 62 Iowa 236.

The certificate of a notary of the acknowledgment of a deed or mortgage is a judicial and not a ministerial act; therefore, where an action is brought against a notary for a false certificate of acknowledgment, the presumption is that the defendant, acting in his judicial capacity, did so on reasonable information, and discharged his full duty. The burden is upon plaintiff to prove to perform the act required may exonerate the officer from liability;¹ and the same is true where the party is himself at fault.²

To enable the plaintiff to maintain his action, the failure by a clear and intentional dereliction of duty. Com. v. Haines, 97 Pa. St. 228; s. c., 39 Am. Rep. 805.

The negligence of a notary public in making his certificate of acknowledgment to a chattel mortgage, by reason of which the lien of the mortgage was lost, will not entitle a mortgagee to recover damages against him, when the property intended to be secured by the mortgage was wholly valueless. McAllister v. Clement, 75 Cal. 182.

Although a notary who gives defective notice is not liable to the holder, where the latter sustained no loss, or need not sustain any with ordinary attention to his case against the endorser, if the holder comes to trial in his action against the endorser without any intimation that the notice will be questioned, he may be deemed to be entitled to rest on the notice; and if defeated on that ground, his recovery against the notary may be sustained. Franklin v. Smith, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 624.

The official act of taking and certifying the acknowledgment and privy examination of a married woman to a deed, whether done by a court, justice or notary, is in the nature of a judicial act; and therefore the officer is not liable in damages for such act, however imperfectly he may perform it, unless he acted from malicious, impure or corrupt motives. Where a notary takes and certifies the acknowledgment and privy examination of a married woman, but omits from the certificate the words, "declared she had willingly executed the same and does not wish to retract it," the certificate is fatally defective; yet, as it is not alleged in the declaration, or proved that the notary acted maliciously or corruptly, he is not liable in damages to the person injured for the loss occasioned by such invalid certificate. Henderson v. Smith, 26 W. Va. 829; s. c., 53 Am. Rep. 139.

1. An instrument not under seal, is not the character of security which is required to be given by the statute by notaries public. If such an instrument be considered as a good contract at common law, yet, as it is payable to the State, and not assigned to the plaintiff, the latter has no right of action in his own name. Castele v. Cornwall, 5 Cal. 419.

A forged B's name to a mortgage given to C, and, appearing before a notary, personated B, and acknowledged the instrument. The notary appended the usual certificate of acknowledgment, and C thereupon paid over to A the amount for which the pretended mortgage from B was given. Subsequently, on discovering the fraud, C sued the notary for having issued a false certificate of acknowledgment. On the trial, C showed that A had personated B, and then called the defendant, who testified: "I do not know B. The paper was undoubtedly signed before me. I don't remember that I did or did not take any precaution to identify the person making the acknowledgment, but I know I must have been satisfied at the time." Held, that under these circumstances, a nonsuit was rightly awarded. Com. v. Haines, 97 Pa. St. 228; s. c., 39 Am. Rep. 805.

Need Not Make a Second Demand.—

Where due demand upon the promisor had been made by a bank, with which a note had been left for collection, held, that the notary, by whom the note was protested, was not liable for negligence in not making further demand. Warren Bank v. Parker, 8 Gray (Mass.) 221.

2. Therefore a party cannot recover from a notary public for having neglected to protest a note legally, when, by his own laches, he has put it out of his power to subrogate the notary to his rights as they existed at the date of protest. Emmerling v. Graham, 14 La. Ann. 390. Compare Franklin v. Smith, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 624, where it was held that recovery could not be had against a notary for negligent omission to give notice of protest to an endorser where the holder could but would not resort to other grounds for fixing the endorser's liability. See also 1 Sutherland on Damages 154.

It is provided by the California Civil Code, that whenever a person has, by his own declaration or act, intentionally and deliberately led another to believe a particular thing true, and to act on such belief, he cannot, in any litigation arising out of such declaration or act, the notary to perform his duty in the premises must have been the direct or proximate cause of the loss or damages sustained.¹ Where a notary acts as agent of a bank which has assumed the responsibility of collecting negotiable paper, the bank is primarily liable to the party injured by a failure of the notary to perform his duties in regard to protest and notice of dishonor.² Assuming without authority to act as a notary public may be punished as a usurpation of the office;³ and where an action lies against the sureties of a notary, the statute of limitations as to them commences to run from the date of the default, and not from the

be permitted to falsify it. Therefore, where a person executing a mortgage has been introduced to a notary by the mortgagee's agent, and the notary sees the person so introduced execute the mortgage by signing it with the name given him by the mortgagee's agent, who witnesses the signature, the mortgagee cannot, on discovering that the mortgage was not executed by the owner of the land, sue the notary's sureties for his alleged negligence in taking and certifying to the acknowledgment of the pretended owner. Overacre v. Blake, 82 Cal. 77.

1. A went to a notary public and falsely representing himself to be B, executed a deed in B's name, and the notary took his acknowledgment, certifying that B was known to him, etc. A took the deed to a savings bank, and, on the strength of his representation and the bank's examination of the record procured money on a mortgage. The bank sued on the notary's bond. It was held that the action was not maintainable, the notary's negligence not being the proximate cause of the bank's loss. Oakland Sav. Bank v. Murfey, 68 Cal. 455. See also People v. Butler, 74 Mich. 643.

In the case of People v. Butler, 74 Mich. 643, a notary public applied to the attorney who was agent of plaintiff's intestate, and also acting as agent in the loaning of money of intestate, for a loan for his brother-in-law, A, on the latter's farm; the notary and the agent went together and examined the farm. They procured abstracts, and a day was fixed on which the parties should meet. On the day named the notary took the mortgage and the note, which the agent had prepared, to his house, where he claimed that A, his brother-in-law, was, and afterwards brought it back to the agent, with the names of the brother-in-law and his wife signed to it, and also a certificate of acknowledgment by the notary. Upon his representation that he was authorized to receive the money, the agent paid it over to him and received in return the note and mortgage, which proved to be forgeries. Upon an action against the notary and his sheriff, it was held that the false certificate was the proximate cause of the loss, and that the surety on the notary's bond for the faithful discharge of his duties was therefore liable.

2. A bank receiving negotiable paper for collection undertakes that the necessary means shall be taken to charge the drawer, endorser or other parties, upon the default or refusal to pay or accept, and is liable for the neglect of the notary employed by it to purchase them, to give notice. Montgomery Co. Bank v. Albany City Bank, 7 N. Y. 459; Walker v. Bank of New York, 9 N. Y. 582; Commercial Bank v. Union Bank, 11 N. Y. 203; Ayrault v. Pacific Bank, 47 N. Y. 570; s. c., 6 Rob. (N. Y.) 337; s. c., 7 Am. Rep. 489.

This liability of the bank may be varied by express contract or general usage, but not by the practice of single banks adopted for their own convenience for the transaction of business. Ayrault v. Pacific Bank, 47 N. Y. 570, s. c., 7 Am. Rep. 489.

3. On the trial for falsely assuming and pretending to be a notary public, against one appointed by the governor, without the advice and consent of the senate, it was held to be error for the judge to instruct the jury "that if the defendant acted as a notary and was not legally entitled to do so, they should find him guilty unless he had reasonable ground to believe that he was entitled to exercise the functions of the office," the guilt or innocence of the accused depended upon his "belief, intent or honesty of purpose," and not on the reasonableness of such belief. Brown v. State, 43 Tex. 349.

time of its discovery by the plaintiffs.¹ So, in a similar action, the admissions of the notary, made since the right of action accrued, are not evidence against the defendants as sureties upon the notary's official bond.²

Where a notary is directed to protest a bill on the wrong day, he is not presumed to be a lawyer who is to revise or reverse the decision of his employer as to the character of the bill, and cannot be held liable for following his instructions.³

1. Measure of Damages.—In an action against a notary for failing to give notice of the dishonor of a paper according to his undertaking, the measure of damages must be the injury sustained by the neglect, in estimating which the solvency of the party to whom notice should have been given is a material element.⁴

NOTES—(See also BILLS AND NOTES; SALES; MEMORANDUM.)—A brief statement in writing; a memorandum.⁵

The certificate of a notary public as to the protest of a bill or note is not admissible against a defendant in a criminal case, as he is entitled to be confronted with the witnesses against him. State v. Reidel, 26 Iowa 430.

1. Thus, where a notary public fails to give to the endorser of a negotiable note the notice requisite to charge him, the statute of limitations of six years commences to run in favor of the sureties on his official bond from the date of the default, and not from the time of its discovery, or the ascertainment of the damage by the injured party. Governor v. Gordon, 15 Ala. 72.

In an action against a notary public and his sureties for damages sustained by reason of a false and fraudulent certificate of acknowledgment to a mortgage taken by the notary, it was alleged that the falsity of the fraudulent certificate was not discovered until a time stated, which was within the statute of limitations—held, that the cause of action accrued at the time of the making of the false certificate; and that on the face of the petition the action is barred. Bartlett v. Bullens, 23 Kan. 606.

2. Admissions of Notary Not Evidence Against the Sureties.—In an action against the surety on the official bond of the notary for breach of official duty, admissions of the notary subsequent to the act complained of, are not evidence against the surety. Wheeler v. State, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 393; White v. German National Bank, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 475; Snell v. Allen, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 208; McNichol v. Philips, 2

"Note Its Contents" or "Noted Its Contents."—In the correspondence of merchants: "The terms note or noted its contents are used apparently in the first place as an acknowledgment of having perused the letter of their correspondent, and that the communications of the letter are understood and considered. The words are in their nature distributive, and are to be applied to the several subjects of the letter about to be answered. And in relation to the duties growing out of these several subjects, they may, and often do, imply obligations; but we do not think they necessarily, ex proprio vigore, import a promise which may be enforced at law. And it may perhaps be generally said, that when these words imply obligation, such obligations would exist by force of the law-merchant without the use of the words." Wildes v. Fessenden, 4 Met. (Mass.) 18.

"Notes" and "References."—In the New York act of April 9th, 1850, relating to the State law reports, "the word note has many significations. Among the fifteen definitions given of it by Webster, the greatest lexicographer of the English language that has yet appeared, the twelfth is this: 'Annotation; commentary; as the notes in Scott's Bible; to write notes on Homer.' This is the definition insisted on by the defendant's counsel, but which, for the reasons already assigned, I hold to be inadmissible. The third definition given by Dr. Webster is this: 'A short remark; a passage or explanation in the margin of a book;' and his fourth definition is this: 'A minute, memorandum, or short writing intended to assist the memory.' These are all the definitions which it is pertinent to notice, and the two last mentioned furnish, in my opinion, the proper guide in determining the scope of the word note in the statute."

In accordance with this, it was held that the term comprised the summary of points decided by the court, which immediately follows the title in each case, the foot notes and the arguments of counsel; but not the abstracts of the pleadings and statements of facts which form the basis of the decisions reported.

Definition.

53; Cain v. Cox, 23 W. Va. 594; United States v. Foote, 13 Blatchf. (U. S.) 420.

Statutory Notice—Must be Written.—"The rule is well settled, that where a notice is required or authorized by statute, in any legal proceeding, it means written notice." Pearson v. Lovejoy, 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 407; Gilbert v. Columbia Turnpike Co., 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 107; Miner v. Clark, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 429; Lane v. Cary, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 539; Matter of Cooper, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 533; McEwen v. Montgomery Mut. Ins. Co., 5 Hill (N. Y.) 104; People v. Croton Aqueduct Board, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 240; s. c., 6 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 56; Rex v. Surry, 5 B. & Ald. (Eng.) 539. Compare Lee v. Bowman, 55 Mo. 400.

"The statute required notice to be served in writing, and the court held the notice insufficient because it was not signed, but said that it was not prepared to hold that in certain cases the want of a signature might not be cured by service in person." Eaton v. Manitowoc Co., 42 Wis. 317.

The act of Rhode Island (Digest of 1822, p. 246, § 3) provides "that no guardian shall be appointed or removed under this act, unless all persons interested shall have had reasonable notice in writing, signed by the clerk, and served by the town sergeant or constable, that he, she, or they may appear to object to the same." Held, that a notice by reading the order of the court is not a "notice in writing," in the sense of the statute, and that the appointment of a guardian, with such notice only, was a nullity. Hart v. Gray, 3 Sumn. (U. S.) 339.

A city ordinance, which requires the city council, before laying out a drain across private property, to "give notice in writing to the several owners" of the property, appointing a time and place for hearing all parties interested, and to post two or more copies of such notice at public places in the city, is complied with, by serving notice upon all known owners personally or at their usual places of abode, and publicly posting two copies thereof, and therein describing the premises as a passageway, without adding that they are private property. Hildreth v. Lowell, 11 Gray (Mass.) 345.

Must be Actual.—Knapp v. Bailey, 79 Me. 195; Com. v. Martin, 130 Mass. 465; Winter v. Mannen, 81 Ky. 123; Enders v. Williams, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 351.

Must be Personal.—"It is competent for the legislature to prescribe the mode and manner of giving notice, where they require as a condition precedent to the doing of an act that notice shall be given . . . In the absence of any such legislative provision [as to the manner of giving the notice] whenever the legislature requires notice to be given, it must be personal notice." McDermott v. Board of Police, 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 635; Rathbun v. Acker, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 393; St. Louis v. Goebel, 32 Mo. 295; People v. Lockport etc. R. Co., 13 Hun (N. Y.) 211.

Must be Reasonable.—Where a statute gives a summary remedy by motion, and is silent with respect to the notice to be given to the defendant, he is entitled to reasonable notice. And to support a judgment in such case it must appear affirmatively that such notice was given; and it is not sufficient that the record finds that the parties came by their attorneys. Brown v. Wheeler, 3 Ala. 287.

"Notice, in legal proceedings, means a written notice." Gilbert v. Columbia Turnpike Co., 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 107; Miner v. Clark, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 429; Lane v. Cary, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 539; Pearson v. Lovejoy, 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 407; Fry v. Bennett, 7 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 352.

"The word 'notified' is generally, if not universally, used as importing a notice given by some person, whose duty it was to give it, in some manner prescribed, and to some person entitled to receive it, or to be notified." Potwine's Appeal, 31 Conn. 381.

Due Notice.—"The term 'due notice' is not susceptible of a fixed definition, and must be construed in each case by its circumstances." Lawrence v. Bowman, 1 McAll. (U. S.) 419.

Under a law requiring notice to be given in certain cases to the obligors in an execution bond, if such notice is so explicit as to render mistake impossible, it will be sustained, though liable to technical objections. Alexander v. Brown, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 683.

1. Actual Notice.—Notice is actual when one either has knowledge of a fact, or is conscious of having the means of knowledge, although he may not use them.¹ Actual notice may be divided into express and implied.

2. Express notice embraces not only what may fairly be called knowledge, from the fact that it is derived from the highest evidence to be communicated by the human senses; but also that which is communicated by direct and positive information, either written or oral, from persons who are personally cognizant of the fact communicated.²

3. Implied Notice.—The implication of notice arises when the party to be charged is shown to have had knowledge of such facts and circumstances as would lead him, by the exercise of due diligence, to a knowledge of the principal fact.³

1. Speck v. Riggin, 40 Mo. 405; Maupin v. Emmons, 47 Mo. 304; Vaughn v. Tracy, 22 Mo. 417; Lemay v. Poupenez, 35 Mo. 71; Roberts v. Moseley, 64 Mo. 507; Musick v. Barney, 49 Mo. 458; Masterson v. West End R. Co., 5 Mo. App. 64; Porter v. Sevey, 43 Me. 519; Hull v. Noble, 40 Me. 459; Wilson v. Miller, 16 Iowa 111; Musgrove v. Bousser, 5 Oreg. 313; Curtis v. Mundy, 3 Met. (Mass.) 405; Williamson v. Brown, 15 N. Y. 359; Brinkman v. Jones, 44 Wis. 498; May v. Chapman, 16 Mees. & W. 361.

Restricted Meaning.—Many of the courts have given a much narrower construction of the meaning of actual notice. In Lamb v. Pierce, 113 Mass. 72, it was held in construing a statute requiring "actual notice" that this was equivalent to actual knowledge of the fact itself, and that knowledge of facts sufficient to lead one to the principal fact was not enough. To the same effect are Pomroy v. Stevens, 11 Met. (Mass.) 244; Parker v. Osgood, 3 Allen (Mass.) 487; Dooley v. Wolcott, 4 Allen (Mass.) 406; Sibley v. Leffingwell, 8 Allen (Mass.) 584; White v. Foster, 102 Mass. 375; Crassen v. Swoveland, 22 Ind. 428; Jordan v. Pollock, 14 Ga. 145; Van Metre v. Mitchell, 2 Wall. Jr. (C. C.) 317.

Such Notice as Makes Subsequent Action Fraudulent.—It has been held in a number of cases that in order to constitute actual notice, the party to be charged shall have such information as would render any subsequent action, on his part, in contravention of the interest disclosed, fraudulent. Dey v. Dunham, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 182; Jackson v. Van Valkenburgh, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 260;

M'Mechan v. Griffing, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 149; s. c., 15 Am. Dec. 198; Porter v. Sevey, 43 Me. 519; Loughridge v. Bowland, 52 Miss. 546; Lord v. Doyle, 1 Cliff. (U. S.) 458; Hine v. Dold, 2 Atk. (Eng.) 275; Jolland v. Stainbridge, 3 Ves. (Eng.) 478.

Distinction Between Notice and Knowledge.—To constitute actual knowledge there must be direct and positive information of the fact itself, but a knowledge of such facts as will lead upon enquiry to actual knowledge is sufficient to constitute actual notice. Cleveland Woolen Mills v. Sibert, 81 Ala. 140; Brinkman v. Jones, 44 Wis. 498.

Actual notice, as applicable to conveyances, does not necessarily mean actual knowledge; the notice may be implied, and from indirect or circumstantial evidence. The doctrine of actual notice implied from circumstances supports the rule that if one has knowledge of such facts as would lead a fair and prudent man, using ordinary caution, to make further enquiries, and enquiry is avoided, the party is chargeable with notice of the facts, which by ordinary diligence he would have ascertained. Knapp v. Bailey, 79 Me. 195.

There is a difference between want of knowledge and the want of notice. CLOPTON, J., in Cleveland Woolen Mills v. Sibert (Ala.), 1 So. Rep. 773, citing 2 Pom. Eq. Jur., § 594, on the subject of notice.

2. Wade on Notice (2nd ed.), p. 5.

3. "The doctrine of actual notice implied by circumstances (actual notice in the second degree) necessarily involves the rule that a purchaser before buying should clear up the doubts which apparently hang upon the title, by making

4. Constructive notice, properly so called, is the knowledge which the courts impute to a person upon a presumption so strong of the existence of the knowledge that it cannot be allowed to be rebutted, either from a duty to know, imposed by the law, or from his knowing something which ought to have put him upon further enquiry, or from his wilfully abstaining from enquiry to avoid notice.¹

due enquiry and investigation. If a party has knowledge of such facts as would lead a fair and prudent man, using ordinary caution, to make further enquiries, and he avoids the enquiry, he is chargeable with notice of the facts which by ordinary diligence he would have ascertained. He has no right to shut his eyes against the light before him. He does a wrong not to heed the 'signs and signals' seen by him. It may be well concluded that he is avoiding notice of that which he in reality believes or knows. Actual notice of facts which to the mind of a prudent man indicate notice is proof of notice." Knapp v. Bailey, 79 Me. 195.

1. Espin v. Pemberton, 3 De G. & J. (Eng.) 547.

"Constructive notice is defined to be in its nature no more than evidence of notice, the presumption of which is so violent that the court will not even allow of its being controverted." Plumb v. Flintt, 2 Anstr. (Eng.) 432; Kennedy v. Green, 3 My. & K. (Eng.) 699; Hiern v. Mill, 13 Ves. (Eng.) 121; Nelson v. Allen, 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 367; Townsend v. Little, 109 U. S. 504.

One who purchases land from an administrator, and takes a deed made by the administrator in that capacity, is chargeable with notice of the trust. Rafferty v. Mallory, 3 Biss. (U. S.) 362.

Notice that a person claims an interest, as heir in land which has been devised to another, on the ground that the will is invalid, is no notice that such person also claims an interest in the land under such will. Bates v. Gillett (Ill.), 24 N. E. 611.

"Constructive notice is a legal inference from established facts, and when the facts are not controverted, or the alleged defect or infirmity appears on the face of the instrument, and is a matter of ocular inspection, the question is one for the court . . . The rights of a purchaser are not to be affected by constructive notice, unless it clearly appear that the enquiry suggested by the facts disclosed at the time of the purchase would, if fairly pursued, result in the discovery of the defect existing, but hidden at the time. There must appear to be, in the nature of the case, such a connection between the facts discovered and the further facts to be discovered, that the former may be said to furnish a clue, a reasonable and natural clue to the latter." Birdsall v. Russell, 29 N. Y. 249; Page v. Waring, 76 N. Y. 463; Clafin v. Lenheim, 66 N. Y. 306. See also Williamson v. Brown, 15 N. Y. 354; Cambridge Valley Bank v. Delano, 48 N. Y. 326; Booth v. Barnum, 9 Conn. 286; s. c., 23 Am. Dec. 339; French v. Loyal Land Co., 5 Leigh (Va.) 627.

Two Kinds of Constructive Notice.—In Griffith v. Griffith, Hoff. Ch. (N. Y.) 153, it is said that "constructive notice is of two kinds—that which arises upon testimony and that which results from a record." Instances of the latter are the contents of all public records which are declared to be notice to all persons. The former embraces those cases in which notice arises from facts not in themselves conclusive, but may be so construed by the law according to peculiar circumstances.

The principle of the doctrine of constructive notice is that when a person is about to perform an act by which he has reason to believe that the rights of a third party may be affected, an enquiry into the facts is a moral duty, and diligence an act of duty. Hence he proceeds at his peril when he omits to enquire, and is chargeable with a knowledge of all the facts that by a proper enquiry he might have ascertained. This neglect is followed by all the consequences of bad faith, and he loses the protection to which his ignorance, had it not proceeded from neglect, would have entitled him. Pringle v. Phillips, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 157.

When the Doctrine Is Applied.—The principle of constructive notice is always resorted to in order to prevent the person having it from doing an act to the injury of another, and does not apply

(a) DISTINCTION BETWEEN IMPLIED AND CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE.—The distinction between implied and constructive notice is, that implied notice is always a question of fact and may be rebutted, while constructive notice is a question of law which cannot be rebutted.¹

II. WHAT WILL CHARGE WITH NOTICE.—Whatever puts a party upon enquiry amounts, in judgment of law, to notice, provided the enquiry becomes a duty, and would lead to the knowledge of the requisite fact by the exercise of ordinary diligence and understanding.²

where the question is, whether one was barred by his assent to a fraud practiced on him. Spencer v. Spencer, 3 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 404.

"Constructive notice is resorted to from the necessity of finding a ground of preference between equities otherwise equal, but cannot be applied in support of a charge of direct personal fraud." Wilde v. Gibson, 1 H. L. Cas. (Eng.) 605; 12 Jur. 527, reversing s. c., sub. nom. Gibson v. D'Este, 2 G. & Coll. (Eng.) 542; 8 Jur. 94. See also Gill v. Hardin, 48 Ark. 412; Groton Sav. Bank v. Batty, 30 N. J. Eq. 131.

The law of constructive notice can never be so applied as to relieve a party from responsibility for actual misstatements and frauds. Converse v. Blumrich, 14 Mich. 109; s. c., 90 Am. Dec. 230.

Suspicious Circumstances.—A sale of property under circumstances in themselves suspicious, such as for a very inadequate price, will be held sufficient to charge a party with notice. Singer v. Jacobs, 3 McCrary (U. S.) 638; Runkle v. Gaylord, 1 Nev. 123; Hoyt v. Hoyt, 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 511; Beadles v. Miller, 9 Bush (Ky.) 405; Eck v. Hatcher, 58 Mo. 235; Hoppin v. Doty, 25 Wis. 573; Tillinghast v. Champlin, 4 R. I. 173; s. c., 67 Am. Dec. 510. But it was held in Le Gierse v. Whitehurst, 66 Tex. 244, that unless a merchant who sells his stock of goods is insolvent, the character of the sale does not necessarily put the purchaser on enquiry.

Subsequent Transactions.—Notice to a party, actual or constructive, in a particular transaction, of a fact which exempts a defendant from liability in that transaction, is notice of all subsequent transactions of the same character between the same parties. Cox v. Pearce, 112 N. Y. 637. Compare Hamilton v. Royce, 1 Sch. & Lef. (Eng.) 315; Warrick v. Warrick, 3 Atk. (Eng.) 294.

Withdrawal of Deed After Filing.—The statement of the fact that a deed was filed for record, but that before being recorded it was withdrawn is sufficient to put a third party, who proposed to purchase the property, upon enquiry. Lawton v. Gordon, 37 Cal. 202.

Refusal to make full and ordinary assurance is sufficient to excite suspicion and put the party upon enquiry. Woodfolk v. Blount, 3 Hayw. (Tenn.) 147; s. c., 9 Am. Dec. 736. So also a refusal to give a general warranty of title is sufficient to put one on enquiry. Lowry v. Brown, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 456.

Provision for Liens.—Where provision is made, in a sale of land, for a credit for an amount sufficient to satisfy such claims as shall be ascertained to be legally chargeable as liens thereon, sufficient notice of an attorney's lien is afforded. Fry v. Calder, 74 Ga. 7.

Inaccurate Description.—A mortgage of "one bay horse, eight years old, weight about 1,200," describes the horse sufficiently to put a purchaser on enquiry even though the horse is in fact many years older. Peters v. Parsons, 18 Neb. 191.

Statement of Debtor.—The mere statement of a debtor to his creditor, who is enquiring after the debtor's property, with a view to compelling payment of his debt out of it, that his property or any particular part of it is mortgaged for all it is worth, is not notice of the existence of any particular mortgage, so as to give an unrecorded mortgage precedence over a judgment subsequently obtained. Condit v. Wilson, 36 N. J. Eq. 370.

Notice of intention to execute a deed is not notice of the contents of the deed as executed. Ponder v. Scott, 44 Ala. 241; Cothay v. Sydenham, 2 Bro. C. C. (Eng.) 391.

All Other Lands in the State.—A conveyance of lands without description of boundary or location, but merely as "all other lands owned by the vendor in the State of Louisiana," is not notice as to any particular tract conveyed. Green v. Witherspoon, 37 La. An. 751.

Facts Held Insufficient to Charge with Notice—Equitable Interest of Devisee.—Where, after the estate in fee of a widow had become, by her election to take under her husband's will, reduced to a life estate, with an equitable fee in remainder to her grandson, she mortgaged the premises, held, that the probate of the will and her election was not constructive notice to the mortgagee of the grandson's equitable interest, and that the mortgage was the first lien. Hibbs v. Union Central Life Ins. Co., 40 Ohio St. 543.

Incorrect Description.—The fact, that a purchaser of land, known as section 21, residing ten miles therefrom, had seventeen years before, resided in the vicinity—held, not to put him on enquiry as to a mortgage conveying the same as section 19. Slattery v. Rafferty, 93 Ill. 277.

Overdue Coupons.—The mere fact that coupons for interest upon bonds of a municipal corporation are overdue and unpaid when such coupons are purchased is not of itself sufficient, without other circumstances, to put the purchaser on his guard, to charge such purchaser with notice of defences to the bonds, especially where the record shows that the sale of the bonds, during all of the time when the coupons were maturing, was restrained by an injunctive order, which was dissolved after the coupons had become due, but before the purchase of the same. Preble v. Portage Co., 8 Biss. (U. S.) 358. See also 4 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law 438.

Real Estate the Property of Partnership.—The fact that real estate is purchased with money of a firm and title taken in the name of the firm is not sufficient to charge with notice that it is held as partnership property. To accomplish this as to strangers, purchasers, mortgagees and creditors it should be expressed in the deed or in some instrument to that effect duly executed and recorded. Kepler v. Erie Dime Sav. Bank, 101 Pa. St. 602; Lefevre's Appeal, 69 Pa. St. 122; s. c., 8 Am. Rep. 229.

Change of Partnership Name.—The change of the name of a partnership from "Davis Creamery" to "Beloit Creamery" does not import notice that D. J. Davis has retired from the firm, nor does it, aided by the fact that, whereas checks were formerly signed "Davis Creamery by W. J. Davis," after the change they were signed simply "W. J. Davis." Cogswell v. Davis, 65 Wis. 191.

Unrecorded Mortgage on Crop.—Knowledge of the existence of a debt for unpaid purchase money of land does not affect a purchaser of cotton grown thereon with notice of an unrecorded mortgage to secure said purchase money. Bell v. Tyson, 74 Ala. 353.

Verdict, but No Judgment Entered.—One buying land is not bound to notice a verdict, the judgment, which

1. Duty of One Put on Enquiry.—It becomes the duty of one who has received knowledge of such facts as should put him on enquiry to make such enquiry with all due diligence and in good faith, and anything short of this will impose upon the negligent party the same liability as though he had acted with full knowledge of all that the enquiry would have disclosed.¹ The question of diligence in making enquiry is one of law, and should not be submitted to the jury.²

2. Limitation of the Rule.—The rule, as stated above, has been limited by many of the courts to those cases only where the failure to make the enquiry suggested amounts to gross negligence.³ A mere suspicion of notice is not sufficient to charge one with the consequences of notice.

3. When Due Enquiry Has Been Made.—If one who has been put upon enquiry investigates the matter diligently and in good faith, but is unsuccessful in his search, he will be protected as a bona fide purchaser.⁴

may create a lien, not having been rendered. Miller v. Wolf, 63 Iowa 233; Ware v. Lord Egmont, 4 DeG. M. & G. (Eng.) 460; Fort v. Burch, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 78; Peck v. Mallams, 10 N. Paying Extraordinary Rate of Discount.—Where A, being engaged in extensive business operations, pays an extraordinarily large discount for a loan, such fact is not notice, to the parties making the loan, of his insolvency, although commercial paper similar to A's was at the same time selling at high rates, if it appear that A's pressing need of money, by reason of his desire to hold large quantities of salable products for more favorable prices, was not inconsistent with his pretensions as a man of means. Golson v. Neihoff, 5 Nat. Bank Reg. 56.

Reasonable Time to be Given.—One put upon enquiry is to be allowed a reasonable time to make it before he is held chargeable with notice. Carr v. Hilton, 1 Curt. (U. S.) 390.

2. Pollak v. Davidson, 87 Ala. 551. Compare Nute v. Nute, 41 N. H. 60.

3. In Acer v. Westcott, 46 N. Y. 384; s. c., 7 Am. Rep. 355, PECKHAM, J., quoting from Jones v. Smith, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 244, and commenting said: "Undoubtedly in the present case a cautious, prudent, circumspect person would not have advanced the money without the production of the deed. But that is not the principle on which cases of this sort have been decided." Again 'I do not consider this a case of gross negligence: but the party having only omitted that caution which a prudent, wary and cautious person might and probably would have adopted,' is not to be charged with notice. The majority of men are not 'wary,' and where no bad faith is found the law does not usually require such conduct as can be expected only from the 'wary' to protect an innocent purchaser from loss." Buttrick v. Holden, 13 Met. (Mass.) 355; Jackson v. Van Valkenburgh, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 260; Woodworth v. Paige, 5 Ohio St. 70; Briggs v. Rice, 130 Mass. 50; Dexter v. Harris, 2 Mason (U. 4. Question for the Jury.—As to whether the circumstances are sufficient to charge one with notice is a question for the jury,¹ and should always be strictly proven.²

5. Statements by Interested Parties and Third Persons.—A direct statement by one having a right, or by his representative, of the existence of such right is sufficient to charge a person with notice.³ If a person about to acquire a right receives information from a third party tending to show the existence of a prior adverse right, which information, considering its character and source, is sufficient, if acted upon with reasonable diligence, to lead to a discovery of such right, then the reasonable inference is that the interested party acquired such knowledge, and he will be chargeable with notice thereof.⁴ When a person has been put

Notice by Owner When Title Is in Dispute.—Notice of the true owner's claim to property, given while the title was in dispute to one who assisted by request of the other claimant in removing it, was held, in an action for indemnity by such assistant, not to be conclusive evidence that the assistant knew that the property was not in his employer. Avery v. Halsey, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 174.

Statement Made a Long Time Before.—O was the creditor of H. T having purchased land of H consulted O and asked his opinion of the transaction. Subsequently O examined the record to ascertain what property H possessed upon which he might levy, and found that the title to the property appeared to be in H, but that there was a mortgage from T to H. The court held that while the information given by T to O, about two years before, in relation to the purchase of the land, would not of itself be sufficient after such a lapse of time, the facts disclosed by the record were sufficient to recall the circumstance to the memory of O, and that he was chargeable with both actual and constructive notice. Ogden v. Haven, 24 Ill. 57.

Source Immaterial.—"It is not material in what manner information is acquired so long as it be shown that the party had knowledge at the time of the transaction." Philips v. Bank of Lewistown, 18 Pa. St. 394; Trefts v. King, 18 Pa. St. 157; Lewis v. Bradford, 10 Watts (Pa.) 67; Rowan v. Adams, 1 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 624; Roberts v. Stanton, 2 Munf. Such Knowledge as Men Usually Act upon enquiry he does not fulfil his obligation by simply making enquiry of one whose interest would induce him to misrepresent matters;¹ but, on the other hand, there are cases in which one acquiring a right is justified in relying upon the representations made by his vendor.² The information must be credible in its character and source, and sufficiently circumstantial to furnish one with a palpable clue or guide by means of which the truth may be ascertained; mere general statements or vague reports and rumors are insufficient.³

On.—"It is notice, not knowledge, which is required, and it can only be required to be such as men usually act upon in the ordinary affairs of life; and whenever it is sufficient to direct the attention of a purchaser to the prior rights or equities of third persons, and to enable him to ascertain their nature by enquiry, should be held sufficient." Wilcox v. Hill, 11 Mich. 256.

"In equity, a purchase with notice of a secret trust is regarded as a fraud, and therefore it must be made out by clear proof of actual notice. 'My opinion is,' said DUNCAN, J., in Peebles v. Reading, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 484, 'that in such a case the notice should be actual, circumstantial in the transaction and by the party in interest. It must be proved that he knew exactly the state of the party having the equity, and knowing that, acquired the legal estate. Nothing short of this, which is actual fraud, will postpone his legal title; and the fraud must be very clearly proved.' This is a pretty strong statement of the rule, and must be taken with the modification settled in subsequent cases already referred to, that what is sufficient to lead to the fact is notice of the fact." Wilson v. McCullough, 23 Pa. St. 440; s. c., 62 Am. Dec. 347.

Contra.—Information by a stranger, or even a general claim by a party, may be disregarded. Woods v. Farmere, 7 Watts (Pa.) 382; s. c., 32 Am. Dec. 772; Kerns v. Swope, 2 Watts (Pa.) 75; *Epley v. 3. Even a general rumor of a conveyance would not have been enough to have made it the duty of the plaintiff to search the record. Notice of such a rumor is not considered as either actual or implied notice. Indeed, to set on foot an enquiry into the foundation of mere rumors would in most cases be a vain and impracticable pursuit. There must be some act, some declaration from an authentic source, which a person would be careless if he disregarded, which is necessary to put a party on enquiry, and call for the exercise of reasonable diligence." Maul v. Rider, 59 Pa. St. 172. See also Jacques v. Weeks, 7 Watts (Pa.) 261; Kerns v. Swope, 2 Watts (Pa.) 75; Churchee v. Guernsey, 39 Pa. St. 86; Peebles v. Reading, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 484; *Lewis v. 6. Recitals in Muniments of Title.—A purchaser of real estate is bound to take notice of all recitals in the chain of title through which his own title is derived. Not only is he bound by everything stated in the several conveyances constituting that claim, but he is bound fully to investigate and explore everything to which his attention is thereby directed.¹ This is constructive

Reference to Unrecorded Instrument.

—Where an instrument in the chain of title refers to some other instrument as affecting the rights of the parties, all persons claiming through that chain of title will be affected with notice of the contents of the instrument referred to, though it is not recorded. Etna L. Ins. Co. v. Bishop, 69 Iowa 645; Baker v. Mather, 25 Mich. 51; Dunham v. Dey, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 556; Childs v. Clark, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 52; s. c., 49 Am. Dec. 164; Central Trust Co. v. Wabash etc. R. Co., 29 Fed. Rep. 546.

Collateral and Immaterial Deeds.

—The general rule that a party is held to have constructive notice of what appears in the deeds and instruments referred to in the title papers constituting his claim of title does not, in principle, apply to collateral and immaterial deeds or instruments incidentally referred to, not as relating in any way to the title or land conveyed, but only to the consideration. Kansas City Land Co. v. Hill, 87 Tenn. 589.

Instrument Purporting to be Executed by Virtue of Decree or Order.—Where a bond or other instrument purports to have been issued by virtue of a certain order named and referred to, but not copied or described, every one claiming any rights by virtue of that bond or instrument is chargeable with notice of the contents of the order. Lewis v. Bourbon Co., 12 Kan. 186; Martin v. Neblett, 86 Tenn. 383.

Vendor's Lien.—"A declaration in a deed of conveyance that the purchase money, or any part thereof, remains unpaid is notice of the existence of a lien for it, in the absence of language indicating a waiver or extinguishment of the lien." Tydings v. Pitcher, 82 Mo. 379; Major v. Buckley, 51 Mo. 227; Orrick v. Dunham, 79 Mo. 179; Wiseman v. Hutchinson, 20 Ind. 40; Lytle v. Turner, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 641; Willis v. Gay, 48 Tex. 463; s. c., 26 Am. Rep. 328.

Knowledge of Encumbrance from Previous Transaction.—Where a party takes a conveyance of a moiety of land in which the existence of an encumbrance upon the whole tract is recited, he is chargeable, upon the purchase of the remaining portion, with notice of the encumbrance before mentioned, though there is no mention of it in the second conveyance. Bellas v. Lloyd, 2 Watts (Pa.) 401.

Compare.—A recital is not notice to the purchaser of title to any other land than that conveyed. Boggs v. Varner, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 469.

Inadequate Consideration.—The recital of an inadequate consideration in the assignment under which Rice, the assignor of Gooding, claimed, if brought to the knowledge of the latter, might be competent as one circumstance in connection with other evidence to charge him with gross negligence or a fraudulent purpose, but it is not alone sufficient to put him on enquiry or prove fraud on his part. It is not easy to see in it anything calculated even to arouse suspicion. Briggs v. Rice, 130 Mass. 50. Contra, Hume v. Franzen, 73 Iowa 25.

Instrument Capable of Two Interpretations.—If within itself a repugnancy in a deed contains the elements of correction, one taking under it must read it as it should be read. He cannot read it the other way and claim protection as a bona fide purchaser. Shoemaker v. Chappell, 4 Mackey (D. C.) 413.

Contents of One's Own Deed.—Where a wife executed a deed conveying, beside other lands, the homestead, without reading it, relying on her husband's false statement that it did not convey the homestead, and would not have signed it had she known that this was included, it was held that, as between herself and innocent parties who acted in good faith in the transaction, she could not take advantage of such negligence, and make it the ground of relief against her own signature. McHenry v. Day, 13 Iowa 445; s. c., 81 Am. Dec. 438.

Recitals in a Subsequent Mortgage.—The recitals in a subsequent mortgage cannot prejudice the rights of a prior mortgagee acquired before its execution. Clabaugh v. Byerly, 7 Gill (Md.) 354; s. c., 48 Am. Dec. 575. See also Cook v. Travis, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 338.

Statements in Certificates of Stock.—Where it appears in a certificate of stock that the stock is held in trust for another, persons purchasing or loaning upon such stock are put upon enquiry by such statements, and are bound to investigate the authority of the person claiming a right to sell or pledge the stock. Jaudon v. Nat. City Bank, 8 Blatchf. (U. S.) 439; s. c., 82 U. S. 165; Shaw v. Spencer, 100 Mass. 382; s. c., 1 Am. Rep. 115; Bayard v. Farmers' etc. Bank, 52 Pa. St. 232.

Fraud Apparent on Face of Instrument.—"After the best reflection that I can bestow upon the question, I am constrained to hold that all who claim through a fraudulent deed, when the fraud is apparent on the face of the instrument, must be charged with notice of the fraud, otherwise we could lay down no rule upon the subject. And in determining whether one was chargeable with notice or not, we should have to take into consideration, perhaps, the mental capacities of those sought to be charged with notice; yet there may be a case of such doubtful equity, under the circumstances, that it ought not to be enforced against such a purchaser. 1 Story Eq., § 400. Now I will not say that a purchaser shall be charged with notice of the fraud if the provision of the deed merely throws suspicion upon the transaction, which is capable of being explained by proof, and thus shown notice, and, therefore, cannot be rebutted.¹

(a) MUST BE DEFINITE.—To charge a purchaser, the recital must be such as explains itself by its own terms, or refers to some deed or circumstance which explains it or leads to its explanation.²

(b) RECITALS IN INSTRUMENTS OUTSIDE THE CHAIN OF TITLE.—A purchaser is not chargeable with notice of anything contained in instruments lying outside of his chain of title.³

7. Possession.—Where one purchases property in the possession of one not the vendor, the purchaser is bound to make enquiry concerning the rights of the one in possession: and, failing to do so, is chargeable with notice of all that a proper enquiry would have disclosed.⁴ Possession is not notice, however, except during

to be consistent with good faith. That question, however, is not before us. But when the impress of fraud is conclusively fixed upon the deed from its own provisions, a purchaser cannot escape from the consequences of notice." Johnson v. Thweatt, 18 Ala. 741.

When Doctrine May be Invoked.—“The doctrine of constructive notice from possession, however broad or limited its application, is applied only as a shield to protect him who has equitable rights, and not for the benefit of one who is without equity. Gill v. Hardin, 48 Ark. 409.

(a) WHAT IS SUFFICIENT POSSESSION.—The possession must be actual, open and visible; it must not be equivocal, occasional, or for a special or temporary purpose; nor must it be consistent with the title of the apparent owner by the record.²

Possession is actual, when there is an occupancy, according to its adaptation to use; constructive, when there is a paramount title to it, and adverse, when there is such an appropriation of it as will inform the vicinage that it is in the exclusive use of some known person. Morrison v. Kelly, 22 Ill. 610, s. c., 14 Am. Dec. 169.

All the characteristics of adverse possession are not necessary in order that possession may constitute notice. Smith v. Jackson, 76 Ill. 254.

Question for Jury.—Whether the possession of a vendee with an unrecorded deed is of such a character as to amount to constructive notice, is a question for the jury. Ponton v. Ballard, 24 Tex. 619.

Acts Held Sufficient to Show Possession.—Fencing and cultivating, and building on lots by those claiming under contracts of purchase. Bright v. Buckman, 39 Fed. Rep. 243. Plowing land in view of any who might pass on a public road. Lyman v. Russell, 45 Ill. 281. Cutting willows annually for a long time. Krider v. Lafferty, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 303. Fastening up doors and windows and leaving furniture in the house after removal of the tenant. Wrede v. Cloud, 52 Iowa 371.

Acts Held Insufficient.—Breaking a few acres of unoccupied land, fencing the same and cording rock. Sandford v. Weeks, 38 Kan. 319. Erection of a dam and occupation for six months of the year. Boynton v. Rees, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 329; s. c., 19 Am. Dec. 326. Occupation of one of a cluster of buildings under a parol contract and keeping silent after knowledge of bona fide purchase by another. Billington v. Welsh, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 129; s. c., 6 Am. Dec. 406. Improvement of one of two lots not sufficient as to the unimproved one, though both sold at one time and at one sale. Dickey v. Lyon, 19 Iowa 544. Making survey but not erecting house or division fence. Meehan v. Williams, 48 Pa. St. 238. Use for pasture by the grantee and others. Coleman v. Bark-

(b) WHEN POSSESSION IS NOT NOTICE.—When possession is consistent with the record title,¹ or the grantor remains in possession after a conveyance of the property,² or the vendor and vendee remain in joint possession,³ or a mortgagor continues to occupy the premises after foreclosure sale,⁴ or when one has been in possession for a long time without claim of title and then acquires one, but without any change in the mode and character of his occupancy,⁵ such possession is not notice to a subsequent purchaser of any right acquired since the first entry, for the first entry de-

Possession Not Clearly Defined.—A person had an equitable title to one half of a certain tract of land. The line of the government survey did not divide the tract in accordance with his right, and it was not shown that the parties had ever run the line or that it had ever been marked, or that there had been any cultivation or actual possession up to the line claimed as the correct one. Held, that such person's possession could only operate as notice of his claim within the lines of the government survey. Hanrick v. Thompson, 9 Ala. 409.

Must be Such as to Affect Conscience.—Constructive notice, arising from the first purchaser's being in possession, must be taken to extend to all the circumstances attending the equity, and where these are such as do not affect the conscience of the second purchaser, the court will not vacate his purchase. Taylor v. Kelly, 3 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 240.

Grant of Part of Premises.—"Where there has been an actual change of possession given by the grantor to the grantee, which purports to be for the purpose of carrying the grant into effect, and where the premises granted are a portion of a larger tract owned by the grantor, his retention up to a certain line, and his surrender beyond it, would naturally indicate that he claimed ownership to that boundary. *Bower v. termines the character and quality of the possession.¹

(c) POSSESSION OF A TENANT.—The possession of a tenant is notice to a purchaser of any interest the tenant may have in the premises.² There is a conflict of opinion as to whether the possession of the tenant is notice of anything more than his own rights, one line of cases holding that it is not,³ while another class holds that the occupation of the tenant is notice of the rights of the person under whom he claims.⁴

Compare the following: A dowress in possession of land and slaves purchased the reversionary interest of one of the reversioners, which in the slaves was conveyed by a direct bill of sale, but as to the land remained in the form of an executory contract; execution against the reversion was levied upon the land, and it was held that the possession of the dowress was sufficient notice of her equitable right therein, and would prevail against the title of the purchaser under the execution. Russell v. Moore, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 436. See also Smith v. Gibson, 25 Neb. 511.

Equitable Right of Tenant.—Where a person is a tenant of the vendor and after a sale takes a lease from the vendee, he cannot be heard to set up his possession at the time of sale as notice of an equitable title in himself of which he had no knowledge when he took the lease. Smith v. Miller, 63 Tex. 72.

Duty to Make Enquiry as to Occupant's Right.—A purchaser having notice that another person, or his undertenant, is in possession of the property, is not justified in presuming the possession of that person to be the possession of the vendor; but is bound to make enquiries of the person who, by himself or his undertenant, is so in possession, or he will be deemed to have notice of the title of such person. Bailey v. Richardson, 15 Eng. L. & Eq. 218.

Enquiry as to How Possession Is Held.—Possession will put a purchaser on enquiry as to title, but when the party in possession is in under a lease, a knowledge of the lease dispenses with the enquiry how the possession is held. One is not bound to enquire of the tenant in possession if the lease was fair or fraudulent, or whether there was a trust notwithstanding. Leach v. Ansbacher, 55 Pa. St. 85.

When Tenant Asserts that He Is Owner.—If a tenant, in possession, affirms himself to be the owner, he will, as to third parties having no actual or constructive knowledge of his tenancy, be regarded as the owner. Jeffersonville etc. R. Co. v. Oyler, 82 Ind. 394. Compare Clarke v. Beck, 72 Ga. 127.

Defects in Title.—"While possession is notice, at least so far as to put the vendee upon enquiry to ascertain by what right the occupant holds, this rule is not extended so far as to give notice of the defects existing in his title, nor

(d) RIGHT OF PURCHASER TO RELY ON STATEMENT OF TENANT.—When a purchaser has been put upon enquiry by the possession of a tenant, and upon making such enquiry receives information as to the tenant's claim, he may rely on such information in the absence of anything to give notice of its falsity.¹ If information be refused the person so refusing will be estopped from setting up any right in himself to the injury of the person to whom he refused information.²

(e) PRESUMPTION MAY BE REBUTTED.—The presumption of notice from possession by one claiming an adverse right may be rebutted.³

8. Notice to Agent or Attorney.—(See also AGENCY; ATTORNEY AND CLIENT).—Notice to an agent,⁴ attorney,⁵ or trustee⁶ is yet of the defects in the title paramount to the person in possession." Suiter v. Turner, 10 Iowa 517. See also Fassett v. Smith, 23 N. Y. 252.

Possession of an Intruder.—"The possession of one either in person or by his tenant is notice of his unrecorded title; but the possession of an intruder cannot be held to be notice of the title of a stranger. Wright v. Wood, 23 Pa. St. 120. See also Munn v. Burges, 70 Ill. 604.

The denial of the title of the landlord by the tenant, or the denial of the tenancy by the tenant, cannot operate to the prejudice of the landlord; the possession of the tenant is still the possession of the landlord." *Clarke v. Knowledge Acquired in Business of Another Client.—An attorney took a mortgage on property on which he had previously taken one for another client, he having neglected to have the mortgage first taken recorded. It was held that the holder of the second mortgage could not be charged with notice of the first unless the attorney was shown to have recollected it when he took the second mortgage. Constant v. University of Rochester, 111 N. Y. 604; s. c., 7 Am. St. Rep. 769. See Dunlap v. Wilson, 32 Ill. 517; McCormick v. Wheeler, 36 Ill. 115; s. c., 85 Am. Dec. 588; *Hood v. When Mortgagor Is Solicitor and Draws Mortgage.—The circumstances of a mortgagor being a solicitor, and preparing the mortgage deed, and of the mortgagee employing no other solicitor, are not sufficient to constitute the former the solicitor of the latter, so as to affect him with notice of an encumbrance known to the solicitor. *Espin v. Facts Which Partner Is Not Under Obligation to Communicate.—A man called upon one member of a firm and stated that he was the agent of another for whom he desired to purchase. The partner stated that they had not the goods for sale at that time. The agent replied that he would call again, which he did in about four weeks and made a purchase of another member of the firm without disclosing his agency. Held, that as the first partner was under no duty to report the call of the agent the first time, the statement as to the agency made at the first call was not notice to the firm. *Baldwin v. 4. "We do not understand the rule to be that, in case of the purchase of property by two or more persons, each will be charged with notice of facts known to another. There doubtless may be cases in which such a result will follow, as when one of the purchasers is made the agent of the others to consummate the purchase, and in the transaction of the business pertaining to his agency acquires notice or knowledge of facts which vitiate the purchase; 'but unless one has been made the agent of the other, by virtue of partnership relations, or of some other means, neither can, ordinarily, be charged and held accountable for the knowledge of the other. If an encumbrance, or conveyance, be in existence affecting the title to land, and a purchase be made by several jointly, or as tenants in common, those who have notice of the encumbrance, or conveyance, will hold their title in subordination to it, while those who did not have such notice will obtain their title free from the claim to which their cotenants are subjected.'" Rippetoe v.

10. Knowledge Acquired as Scrivener or Witness.—The fact that a person drew certain papers will not, in a subsequent transaction a considerable time afterwards, charge such person with notice of the contents of the papers so drawn by him;¹ nor is the fact that a party attested a document sufficient to charge him with notice of its contents.²

11. Statutes and Ordinances.—The laws of the State are in force without notice to individuals, and are supposed to be known by all; and all are charged with notice of their contents and rights arising thereunder.³

III. WHEN NOTICE IS NECESSARY—1. Generally.—In all proceedings of a judicial nature notice is indispensable;⁴ and the term “due process of law” is held to imply notice of all proceedings which affect the rights of a person with an opportunity to be heard in relation thereto.⁵ But it is not always necessary to “due process of law” that the notice be personal.⁶

2. Facts Within the Knowledge of Both Parties.—When a fact is equally well known to both parties, or when one party is bound to know, or actually does know it, it is not necessary that notice be given to him.¹

(a) FACTS PECULIARLY WITHIN KNOWLEDGE OF ONE PARTY.—Where the facts are peculiarly within the knowledge of one party to a transaction, he must give notice to the other.²

3. Summary Proceedings.—There are a few instances in which it is held that proceedings may be summarily taken without giving notice, as in the case of summary process by the government to collect a debt due to itself,³ or in certain cases where sureties are summarily proceeded against,⁴ or where officers act in a purely ministerial capacity, wherein they could not act differently though notice and a hearing were given.⁵

IV. FORM OF NOTICE.—Unless some form is especially prescribed it is not necessary that a notice be given in any particular form,⁶ and mere informalities will not vitiate so long as the notice does not mislead and gives the necessary information.⁷

Intent to Remove from State.—Where a citizen left the State intending to take up his residence elsewhere, but after a few months returned without having acquired a residence elsewhere, held, that a notice served by publication during his absence was valid. Fernandez v. Casey, 77 Tex. 452.

Real Property the Subject of the Action.—Under a statute allowing service by publication when the subject of the action is real property, or a lien or interest therein, such notice may be given in an action to abate a liquor nuisance on the property of a bankrupt estate. Radford v. Thornell (Iowa), 45 N. W. Rep. 890. So also an action against an assignee in bankruptcy to set aside an alleged fraudulent transfer of real estate to the assignee, is one in which notice may be given by publication. Lane v. Innes, 43 Minn. 137.

Action for Possession of Railroad Bonds.—Where an action was brought for the possession of bonds of a railroad company having offices in the State in which the action was brought, it was held that the court having jurisdiction over the obligor could acquire jurisdiction by publication, though the bonds and some of the defendants who claimed them were in France. Von Hess v. Morton, 5 N.Y. Supp. 790; 16 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y.) 333.

Property in the State.—It is held in a number of the States that nonresidence does not give the court power to order service by publication, unless the party has property within the State at the time the order is made. Action Fully Brought.—In Iowa the action must be fully brought before the code gives authority to serve by publication. Verified Complaint Filed.—The Wis. Rev. St., § 2640, requires that a duly verified complaint be filed with the clerk of the court before an order of publication can issue. Cummings v. Tabor, 61 Wis. 185.

Service of Attachment.—Under the Michigan statute, service of an attachment must first be made in the county where the process issued. Service in a foreign county in the first instance cannot be made the basis for proceeding by publication. Stearns v. Taylor, 27 Mich. 88.

In Mississippi it is in the discretion of the court whether notice of attachment of property shall be given to a non-resident or not, the seizure being, in general, sufficient notice. Ridley v. Ridley, 24 Miss. 648; Calhoun v. Ware, 34 Miss. 146.

Probate Proceedings.—Publication is sufficient in the ordinary proceedings under the Michigan statute to adjust claims against an estate, but after the executor has given a bond, and the jus ad rem has been changed to a personal obligation of the executor, the notice must be personal and publication is insufficient. Durfee v. Abbott, 50 Mich. 278.

A United States commissioner temporarily residing in Honolulu is a non-resident within the meaning of the Oregon Code authorizing service by publication. Collinson v. Teal, 4 Sawyer (U. S.) 241.

Mariner.—Temporary absence from the State of a defendant, as a mariner, does not authorize proceedings against him by publication as a nonresident. McKim v. Odom, 3 Bland Ch. (Md.) 407.

Fugitive from Justice.—A person under indictment, whom neither his bail nor the police could find, was properly proceeded against as a nonresident, and served with notice of foreclosure as a nonresident. Wichman v. Aschpurwis, 55 N. Y. Super. Ct. 218.

Lunatic defendants may be served by publication, if nonresidents, as well as sane persons. Sturges v. Longworth, 1 Ohio St. 544.

Periodical Visits.—A person may be served as a nonresident notwithstanding the fact that he habitually visits the State once a fortnight. Palmer v. McCormick, 30 Fed. Rep. 82.

Publication During War.—A court gained no jurisdiction by the publication of a summons in an action brought by a person resident within the confederate lines against a person residing in New York, the war of the rebellion being at the time in progress. Dorr v. Rohr, 82 Va. 359. See also Walker v. Day, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 77; Deitrich v. Lang, 11 Kan. 636.

Absconding Debtor.—The fact that a debtor has absconded does not authorize service by publication, especially where he still holds real estate on which his family continues to reside. Fuller v. Riggs, 66 Iowa 328.

In North Carolina, no advertisement or notice in writing is necessary in garnishment proceedings against one who has absconded. Parker v. Gilreath, 7 Ired. L. (N. C.) 400.

A motion for relief from judgment under Ind. Rev. St. 1881, § 396, is not a proceeding where notice to the opposite party can be given by publication. Beck v. Koester, 79 Ind. 135.

Satisfaction of the Judge.—An order for service by publication may be made if the judge is "satisfied" as to the necessary facts; his order thereon is a judgment that he was satisfied, and though erroneous, so that it could be reversed by a direct proceeding, it is not void, so as to sustain a motion to vacate the judgment for want of jurisdiction of the person, made in proceedings supplementary to execution. Collins v. Ryan, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 647.

Publication in Another State.—A notice to nonresident defendants was, by order of the register, published in a paper in another State, Georgia. Held, that a decree based thereon was valid. Mobley v. Leophart, 47 Ala. 257.

Service on Nonresident Infant.—A citation to an infant under fourteen, residing in another State, should be directed to be served personally, or by publication, not less than thirty days previous to the return day. It is improper to cause the infant and his guardian to be brought into the State in order to make shorter service. Merritt's Will, 5 Den. (N. Y.) 544. See also Wunstel v. Landry, 39 La. An. 312; Walkenhorst v. Lewis, 24 Kan. 420.

Foreign Corporation.—Where personal service cannot be made upon some officer or agent of a foreign corporation, service by publication may be made. McLaren v. Byrnes (Mich.), 45 N. W. Rep. 143.

When Defendant Can be Located.—Where the defendant is absent attending to his business as a theatrical manager, and his location can be ascertained at any time, he cannot be served by publication as one whose place of sojourn is unknown, or if within the State he avoids service, so that personal service cannot be made, though the statute of limitations will run against the action if service is not made. Ottman v. Daly, 7 N. Y. Supp. 897.

(b) EFFECT OF NOTICE BY PUBLICATION.—Notice by publication in pursuance of statute is constructive notice;¹ but the jurisdiction which a court obtains in this manner cannot support a judgment in personam; it is only available where the subject matter is within the jurisdiction of the court.²

2. Order of Publication.—(a) AFFIDAVIT TO OBTAIN.—If there is a total want of evidence upon a vital point in an affidavit, the court acquires no jurisdiction by publication of the summons; where, however, there is not an entire omission to state some material fact, but it is insufficiently set forth, the proceedings are merely voidable.³ The requirements of the statute must be strictly complied with.⁴ There is a difference of opinion as to the particularity required in the allegations in the affidavit, one class of cases holding that “general statements, substantially in the language of the statute, are all that is required,”⁵ while, on the other Right of Appearance Unqualified.—The publication of notice under Comp. L., ch. 140, § 18, is intended as a substitute for personal service; and after proof of publication is made, both parties, so far as relates to the question of appearance and pleading, stand in the same position as they would have occupied on the return of summons personally served. The defendant need not ask leave of the court to defend, nor can the court impose terms at any stage of the case, when such leave would not have been required nor terms imposed had the suit been commenced by ordinary summons personally served. Thompson v. Thomas, 11 Mich. 274.

Publication Effectual for Local Purposes.—A decree pronounced against an absent defendant, who has been brought into court by publication, is in all respects just as valid and effectual for all local purposes as personal service. Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Pinner, 43 N. J. Eq. 52.

Words of Statute or Specific Facts.—“To comply with the requirements of the statute, the affidavit should aver, in the language of the statute, ‘that upon diligent enquiry the place of residence of the defendant could not be ascertained;’ or it should give the facts connected with the enquiry, so that the court could readily determine that diligent hand, it is held that "an affidavit which merely repeats the language or substance of the statute is not sufficient."¹ The fact of nonresidence is jurisdictional, and must be shown by the affidavit;² and, in addition, it must appear that the party to be served cannot, after due diligence, be found within the State.³ So also it must be shown that the plaintiff has a good cause of action enquiry had been made by the affiant, and that upon such enquiry the residence of the defendant could not be ascertained." Hartung v. Hartung, 8 Ill. App. 156.

1. "An affidavit which merely repeats the language or substance of the statute is not sufficient. Unavoidably the statute cannot go into details, but is compelled to content itself with a statement of the ultimate facts which must be made to appear, leaving the details to be supplied by the case. Between the statute and the affidavit there is a relation which is analogous to that existing between a pleading and the evidence which supports it. The ultimate facts of the statute must be proved, so to speak, by the affidavit, by showing the probatory facts upon which each ultimate fact depends. These ultimate facts are conclusions drawn from the existence of other facts, to disclose which is the special office of the affidavit. To illustrate: It is not sufficient to state, generally, that after due diligence the defendant cannot be found within the State, or that the plaintiff has a good cause of action against him, or that he is a necessary party; but the acts constituting due diligence, or the facts showing he is a necessary party, should be stated. To hold that a bald repetition of the statute is sufficient is to strip the court or judge to whom the application is made of all judicial functions, and allow the party himself to determine in his own way the existence of jurisdictional facts—a practice too dangerous to the rights of defendants to admit of judicial toleration. The ultimate facts stated in the statute are to be found, so to speak, by the court or judge from the probatory facts stated in the affidavit, before the order for publication can be legally entered." *Ricketson v. Nonresidence is a jurisdictional fact, and in the absence of a requirement in the statute that it appear in the affidavit it is competent to show it by other evidence. Taylor v. Ormsby, 66 Iowa 109.

Where service is by publication, the court only has jurisdiction where the defendant is actually a nonresident, of which the affidavit for publication is only prima facie evidence. Kitchen v. Crawford, 13 Tex. 516.

Verified Complaint.—The section of the New York Code of Civil Procedure requiring that the affidavit be founded on a verified complaint, does not mean that the verified complaint must be presented to the judge, and in a case where such complaint had been filed and a copy was presented to the judge it was held sufficient. McCully v. Heller, 66 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 468.

The validity of an order for the publication of summons must be judged solely upon the sufficiency of the affidavits upon which it was granted. Subsequent proof that defendant was not in fact within the State when the order was made, cannot be made to sustain it. Wortman v. Wortman, 17 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 66.

Action Against Foreign Corporation.—An affidavit for an order of publication of summons, which states "that the defendants are a corporation or company established and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois," shows sufficiently that the defendants are a foreign corporation. Broome v. Galena etc. Packet Co., 9 Minn. 239.

In an action against a nonresident to foreclose a mortgage against a nonresident, the omission of the name of the county or principal meridian in the affidavit to procure an order of publication, held not fatal. Fouts v. Mann, 15 Neb. 172. See also Butler v. Davis, 5 Neb. 521.

against the defendant; and it is generally held that there must be some evidence of this fact, the mere statement of the affiant's opinion being insufficient.¹ The affidavit may be made upon information and belief.² Where the affidavit or order is so defective as to render the service by publication invalid, the defect cannot be cured by personal service without the State.³ Upon an application for an order of publication the proponent may use affidavits that have been used in other actions.⁴

(1) Consideration of Affidavit by Appellate Court.—Where the record shows the proof made before the judge making the order of publication, the appellate court may look into the proof made and pass upon its sufficiency; but not if the record fails to show the proof and the order recites that it appeared to the satisfaction of the judge making such order.⁵

Return of Sheriff.—The fact of due diligence must appear by affidavit, the return of the sheriff is not sufficient. The affidavit of the plaintiff is competent for the purpose. Waffle v. Goble, 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 517; Fetes v. Volmer, 8 N. Y. Supp. 294. Compare Yates v. Gridley, 16 S. Car. 496; Sueterlee v. Sir, 25 Wis. 357; Young v. Schenck, 22 Wis. 556.

Subject of the Action.—Where a statute required that it should be shown that the court had jurisdiction of the "subject of the action," it was held that the words were not synonymous with "cause of action," and that where the property was not shown to have been attached before publication, the court acquired no jurisdiction by publication of the summons. McKinney v. Collins, 88 N. Y. 216.

The following cases hold, more or less directly, that an affidavit on information and belief alone, without stating the source of information and ground of belief, is insufficient: *Wagoner v. cannot be objected to in a collateral proceeding in the same State; such errors must be corrected by appeal.¹

(b) CONTENTS AND FORM OF THE ORDER.—The order directing publication need not be identical with the notice; it is sufficient if it informs the defendant what and where he is to answer.² And there need be no recital that the necessary facts satisfactorily appeared to the judge.³ A discrepancy in the name of the paper as given in the order and in the affidavit of publication will not invalidate the notice,⁴ and in some of the States it has been held that the paper need not be named in the order.⁵ A discrepancy between the order and complaint as to the time to answer is not error.⁶ The order should direct that a copy of the notice be mailed,⁷ but where the order did not so direct, but it was nevertheless done, it has been held that the notice was properly given.⁸ So also where the time of publication was incorrectly stated in the order, but the publication made complied with the statute, the notice was held valid.⁹ The order need not, in addition to the direction of publication and mailing, direct that the plaintiff may have personal service made.¹⁰ The caption of the order is not conclusive; if it be shown that the order was properly obtained an error in the caption will not invalidate the notice.¹¹ An order

The fact that the address to which the notice is mailed is not, in fact, the correct one, does not render the judgment void if the plaintiff acts in good faith upon the best information obtainable. Martin v. Pond, 30 Fed. Rep. 15.

Code Civil Proc. N. Y., § 440, prescribes that an order of publication against a nonresident defendant must contain a direction for a deposit in the postoffice of copies of the summons and of the complaint, directed to defendant at a place specified in the order. Held, that the place specified in the order must be shown by the affidavit on which the order is based to be either that of defendant's residence or a place at which he would probably receive matter transmitted through the postoffice; and, where the affidavit shows that defendant resides at "Marion, Washington County, Iowa," the order directing the papers to be mailed to "Washington, Iowa," is fatally defective. *Fetes v. An order of publication, dated and

(c) POWER OF CLERK TO MAKE ORDER.—In some of the States the clerk of the court has power to make an order directing that notice be given by publication.²

3. Contents of the Notice.—The right to give notice by publication being statutory, the contents of the notice are generally prescribed by the statute to which reference must be had in each particular case. A notice, which is substantially correct as to all essential matters, so as to give the party sought to be charged the nature of the interest to be affected and the relief sought, is sufficient.³ An omission to direct a summons only to those to be served will not render the notice void;⁴ and in probate proceedings it is quite generally held sufficient to use the language of the statute, "to the heirs-at-law, next of kin, and all other persons interested in the estate of, etc.," without giving the names of such persons.⁵ Where it is held necessary to name the persons to be notified it is generally,⁶ though not always,⁷ held that a mistake in the name is fatal. Under a statute requiring a brief statement of the cause of action a detailed and specific statement is un-issued on a day which was neither a rule-day nor in term, is a nullity. Coal R. Nav. Co. v. Webb, 3 W. Va. 438.

Clerical Error.—A palpable clerical error in a notice which could not mislead, will not vitiate the notice. Mitchell v. Nodaway Co., 80 Mo. 257.

Error Causing Actual Damage.—A sale will be set aside if the notice erroneously states that certain parties claim some interest and the property is consequently sold at a sacrifice. Equitable Trust Co. v. Fisher, 106 Ill. 189.

Notice of Sale.—A notice of sale saying that the sale would take place at the door of the courthouse, when there was none there or any place known as necessary.¹ In proceedings relating to real property a detailed description of the property does not seem to be necessary unless especially prescribed by statute.² An error in the date or its omission, if not likely to mislead, will not invalidate the summons.³ When it is sought to make one a party to a judgment the notice should apprise him of the judgment already existing against his codefendant.⁴ The notice in attachment proceedings need not state that they are in attachment, a statement of the pendency of the action being sufficient.⁵ Where the name of the city was omitted in the attorney's address, but was given in the date of the notice, it was held sufficient.⁶ It has been held that where a summons served by publication required the defendant to answer in a shorter time than the law requires, the summons could be amended and publication continued in its amended form.⁷ Where some of the parties are properly served they cannot set up the insufficiency of the notice to others in order to prevent the court from acquiring jurisdiction.⁸

4. Irregularities—(a) STATUTES STRICTLY CONSTRUED.—Statutes providing for giving notice by publication are in derogation of common law, and, as has been said already, in discussing the affidavit and order, all of the statutory provisions must be followed strictly.¹

(b) DELAY IN MAKING PUBLICATION.—Where there is a delay in making publication, the court will not dismiss the case for want of jurisdiction.²

(c) FILING AFFIDAVIT AND COMPLAINT.—Where the statute requires that the affidavit or the complaint be filed before the publication of the notice, the requirement is jurisdictional, and a judgment founded on a publication without such filing is void.³

(d) EFFECT OF VOLUNTARY APPEARANCE.—If there be an irregularity in obtaining the order for publication, or in the notice itself, the appearance of the defendant will waive the defect, and jurisdiction will attach.⁴

5. Computation of Time—Publication for a Certain Number of Weeks.—Where a notice is required to be published once a week for a certain number of weeks, it is held in a majority of the cases,⁵ though not in all,⁶ that the full number of days to consti-

Filing Declaration and Affidavit of Publication.—Where the statute provided that one might, upon filing an affidavit of publication, also file his declaration and proceed as though actual notice had been given, held that in a case where the declaration was filed on September 2nd, and the affidavit of publication not until the 28th of December following, the judgment was void. *Nugent v. tute the required number of weeks must elapse between the first publication and the happening of the event of which notice is given and that publication, once in each of the required number of weeks, is not sufficient, unless the full number of days has elapsed. But generally it is not held necessary that the publication should be on the same day in each week,¹ though some of the cases hold this to be necessary.²

(a) METHOD OF COMPUTATION.—In computing the time for which a notice is given, either the day of giving the notice, or the day on which the event takes place, is to be counted and the other excluded.³ In computing the time for giving notice, statutes are construed in favor of the person to be notified.⁴

(b) PUBLICATION FOR LESS THAN PRESCRIBED TIME.—Where the statute requires that a notice shall be published for a certain length of time, a publication for any shorter period is of no avail, and proceedings founded on such notice are void.⁵ A postponement of the event, of which notice is given, will not cure a defect.

Paper Not Published.—A statute required that a notice should be published daily for ten days excepting Sundays: the notice was published eight times during ten consecutive days, the paper not being published on the other two days which were not Sundays. Held, that the notice was insufficient and void. Haskell v. Bartlett, 34 Cal. 281.

Part of the Edition Published at Wrong Time.—A large part of the edition of a paper containing the notice of a foreclosure sale was published on the last day the mortgage had to run, and the other portion of the edition on the following day. Held, that the publication was not good. Pratt v. Tinkcom, 21 Minn. 142.

ive publication, rendered so because the full time has not elapsed;¹ and the publication of a notice requiring a party to do a certain thing for more than the prescribed time, will not extend the time within which the act was to be performed.²

(c) WHEN SERVICE BY PUBLICATION IS COMPLETE.—Service by publication is deemed complete when the time prescribed for publication has expired; and the time within which the party notified must act is computed from that date.³

(d) PUBLICATION FOR A CERTAIN NUMBER OF DAYS.—Requirements that notice shall be given for a certain number of days have been variously construed. Some cases hold that a requirement that notice be given for a certain period means that the notice must be published every day for that length of time,⁴ others that it must be in each successive issue of the paper,⁵ and others that a single publication the required period of time before the event of which notice is given is sufficient.⁶

(e) NOTICE FOR A CERTAIN TIME PRIOR.—Where it is required that notice be given for a certain time prior to the happening of the event, some of the cases hold that the first publication shall be that length of time before the event,⁷ others that the publication shall be complete that length of time before the event.⁸ In cases where the requirement is that the publication shall be complete for the specified time before the event, the question has also been raised as to whether it must be completed exactly on the specified number of days before the event, or whether it must be at least that length of time before, but not necessarily exactly the specified time. The latter view seems to be the correct one.⁹

States require that, in addition to the publication of the summons in a newspaper, a copy of the summons and complaint and the order of publication shall be mailed to the adverse party,¹ or that a copy of the summons be posted in some public place.²

(a) NOTICE MAILED TO WRONG ADDRESS.—The notice must be mailed to the party at the address stated in the order of publication; a mailing to a different address will not be sufficient;³ but if the address stated in the order, or the affidavit to procure the order, is not, in fact, the correct one, a judgment obtained thereon will not be void, if the plaintiff acted in good faith.⁴

When Complaint has Been Amended.—When the complaint in the action has been amended before the order for publication is made, the amended pleading is the proper one to be mailed to the adverse party. Mudge v. Steinhart, 78 Cal. 34.

Place of Mailing.—A summons and complaint in an action where service is made by publication may properly be mailed at the postoffice where the plaintiff's attorney resides instead of at the place where the order of publication was made. Mudge v. Steinhart, 78 Cal. 34.

Mailing Forthwith.—"Forthwith" in the provisions of a statute relating to the time of mailing a notice means without delay, and a reasonable time is to be allowed, taking into consideration the circumstances of each case. *Deitrich v. Substantial Compliance With Statute.—Where the statute required that a notice should be published in a newspaper or advertised on the door of the court house, or at the door of the house where courts are usually held and in three of the most public places in the county, and an application under the statute was made before there was any court house or place where courts were usually held, it was held that an advertisement in four of the most public places in the county was a sufficient compliance with the statute. Drew v. Gant, 1 Oreg. 197.

Posting in Lieu of Publication.—It was provided by statute that in a certain county notice might be given by posting in lieu of publication in a newspaper. A notice ordered to be published in that county was published in a newspaper for a time, until the paper suspended publication, and posted for the balance of the time. Held, that it was not a compliance with the order. Falkner v. Guild, 10 Wis. 563. See also Halleck v. Moss, 17 Cal. 339.

"Public Place."—An officer stated in his return that a school house on which he posted a notice was a public place. Held, sufficient evidence of the fact. Wilson v. Brickman, 71 Me. 545.

Where a statute requires that a notice be published in a conspicuous public place, proof that it was posted in a public place is insufficient. Lewey Island R. Co. v. Bolton, 48 Me. 451.

Posting on a court house, though not on the front thereof, held a compliance with the law requiring posting in a public place. Campbell v. Wheeler, 69 Iowa 588.

3. Paulling v. Creagh, 63 Ala. 398; Smith v. Wells, 69 N. Y. 600.

Mailing Notice to Firm Address.—In a case where defendants were members of a firm and a single notice was mailed to them by their firm name, the initials only of their Christian names being given, held, that at best it would be notice to one only, and that the uncertainty who might receive it made it prima facie void as to both, and that if two copies had been so directed and mailed it would have been doubtful service. Likens v. McCormick, 39 Wis. 313.

4. Martin v. Pond, 30 Fed. Rep. 15.

AFFIDAVIT OF MAILING.—The affidavit that the notice was by mail should show the date of mailing; that it was to the residence of the defendant, and that the mailing was in time for the party to act upon the notice.¹ It has also been held that the conditions on which such service should appear in the affidavit.²

Paper—(a) DESIGNATION.—When a paper in which a notice is to be published is designated by statute or by order of publication in any other paper is of no effect.³

PLACE OF PUBLICATION.—The place of publication of a notice is the place where the paper is first issued; that is, given to the public for circulation, and not the place where it is sent for distribution.⁴

See v. Finn, 10 Iowa 590; Pinkney, 4 Greene (Iowa) 324; Key, 4 Greene (Iowa) 372; Lot, 4 Greene (Iowa) 465; Brobst, 4 Greene (Iowa) 534. It clearly appears that notice was not given to the postoffice address of the defendant. The fact that the solicitor was not informed, without stating the information, or that he was not informed and "verily" believed not sufficient. Rogers v. Rogers, 10 J. Eq. 445.

See v. Adams, 33 Mich. 159; See v. Simmons, 40 Miss. 585; See v. Person, 88 Mo. 131; Brisbane, 3 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 109; Davis, 10 Wis. 501.

—Where no newspaper is published in a county, publication of notices may be made in a paper printed in either of the counties bordering upon the one where required, at the election of plaintiff. Cooke v. Tallman, 40

Notice in Paper Merged in Another.—A notice called the "Financier" was published, but before the notice was published the "Financier" was merged in a paper called the "Public." The change was made known to the judge, and publication in the "Public." It was held that whether the judge had authority to make the order or not, the notice as made was a substantial compliance with the original order. The purpose of the publication was not defeated by the change of name or union with another paper. Sage v. Central, 10 U. S. 334.

Duration of Paper.—A publication of a notice is to be made in a certain paper weekly for four weeks. After four publications had been made the paper suspended publication, and the notice was inserted in another paper for the remaining week. Held, insufficient. Townsend v. Tallant, 33 Cal. 45; s. c., 91 Am. Dec. 617.

Change of Official Paper.—Where a paper which had been designated as the official paper had ceased to be such before the last publication of a notice, held, that the notice was insufficient. Bussey v. Leavitt, 12 Me. 378.

Failure to Designate Paper.—Certain papers were designated by city ordinance for the publication of assessment notices during one year, but failed to make any for the next year. Held, that publication in the same papers the next year was invalid. Adrian v. McCafferty, 2 Rob. (N. Y.) 153.

Where papers for the publication of certain notices should have been designated by the governor and comptroller, but they failed to do it and the notices were published in all of the papers from which they could have made their designation, held, that the notice was good. State v. Gloucester Co., 50 N. J. L. 585; s. c., 23 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 161.

"City Paper."—To constitute a publication in a "city paper" it must appear that the paper is both published and circulated in the city; publication alone is insufficient. Haskell v. Bartlett, 34 Cal. 281.

Discretion of Officer Making Designation.—Where a register, having discretionary power to designate a paper for the publication of a notice, designated one published in another State, held, that the fact that the paper was published out of the State was not a good ground of objection to the order. Mobley v. Leophart, 51 Ala. 587.

4. Le Roy v. Jamison, 3 Sawy. (U. S.) 269.

(c) LANGUAGE OF PUBLICATION.—In the absence of some express provision, a notice should be published in the English language.¹

(d) SHOULD BE IN A SECULAR PAPER.—When a statute requires that a notice shall be published in a newspaper, a secular paper of general circulation is intended, unless there be some more explicit designation.²

Supplement.—If a notice be published in the supplement of a paper, the supplement should be coextensive in circulation with the paper itself.³

(e) SHOULD BE ON A WEEK DAY.—The publication of a legal notice on Sunday is without effect.⁴

(f) NOTICE IN AN OBSCURE PAPER.—In cases where notice of foreclosure and sale was published in an obscure paper not likely to give actual notice of the sale, it has been held that although there was a literal compliance with the law, the mortgagee should be allowed to redeem, or the sale set aside.⁵

(g) SUBSCRIPTION FOR PAPER DOES NOT CHARGE WITH NOTICE OF CONTENTS.—Proof of the fact that a person subscribes for a newspaper containing a notice is not sufficient to charge such person with actual notice of its contents,⁶ though it has been held that subscription is a fact from which actual notice might be inferred, in the absence of evidence to the contrary.⁷

8. Death of Party Pending Publication.—When the defendant

Patent Inside.—A local paper made up partly of a "patent inside" printed in another State is to be considered as "printed" where it is issued. Palmer v. McCormick, 30 Fed. Rep. 82.

"Published" and "Printed" Not Equivalent.—The insertion of a notice in a paper "published" in the county does not comply with a statute requiring that it be inserted in a paper "printed" in the county. Bragdon v. Hatch, 77 Me. 433.

1. Graham v. King, 50 Mo. 22; s. c., 11 Am. Rep. 401; Cincinnati v. Bickett, 26 Ohio St. 49; Road in Upper Hanover, 44 Pa. St. 277.

English Language in a German Paper.—A notice was published in a German newspaper, but in the English language. Held, sufficient. Richardson v. Tobin, 45 Cal. 30; Wakeley v. Nicholas, 16 Wis. 588.

Nine English and One German Paper.—A certain notice was required to be published in ten newspapers. Held, that a publication in nine English and one German paper was a sufficient compliance. Donohue v. O'Connor, 45 N. Y. Super. Ct. 278.

Subscription by Persons in Neighborhood.—Evidence that persons residing near the person sought to be charged subscribed for a paper containing a dies during the publication of a notice, it renders the order of publication inoperative.¹

9. Effect of Personal Service Without the Jurisdiction.—The decisions do not seem to be harmonious as to the effect of personal service outside the State, after constructive service by publication has been ordered. Some hold that this does away with, and renders unnecessary the further steps to complete a notice by publication.² On the other hand, it has been held that a defective service by publication was not cured by personal service without the State.³

10. Proof of Publication.—The publication of a notice is generally proven by the affidavit of the publisher or editor of the paper, or of his foreman or chief clerk, with a copy of the printed notice annexed.⁴

Where, however, the affidavit is absent from the record, a recital in the judgment or decree that there was due service of notice is prima facie evidence of the fact, and the service cannot be attacked in a collateral proceeding in the same State.⁵

notice is not competent. Clark v. Ricker, 14 N. H. 44.

Voluntary Appearance.—If the defendant appears voluntarily after publication has been commenced, further publication becomes unnecessary. Tuller v. Beck, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 519.

3. If no valid order of service by publication has been made a personal service without the State does not cure the defect. Manning v. Heady, 64 Wis. 630; Weatherbee v. Weatherbee, 20 Wis. 499. Compare Keeler v. Keeler, 24 Wis. 522.

4. Cissel v. Pulaski Co., 3 McCrary (U. S.) 446; Bolin v. Francis, 72 Iowa 619; Kay v. Watson, 17 Ohio 27.

In Tennessee, proof of publication may be made either by the affidavit of the printer or the production of the newspaper in court. Claybrook v. Wade, 7 Coldw. (Tenn.) 555. See also Schley v. Lyon, 6 Ga. 530.

Editor.—The affidavit of the "editor" is sufficient under a statute requiring that of the "foreman or printer." Penoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 715. See also Sharp v. Daughney, 33 Cal. 512; Bunce v. Reed, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 350.

An affidavit of publication made by a "publisher and proprietor" is a substantial compliance with the rule requiring it to be made by the "printer, foreman or principal clerk." Sharp v. Daughney, 33 Cal. 505.

Parol Evidence in Collateral Proceeding.—Where it is sought to set aside a sale on the ground that the judgment was void for want of proof of service, the proof must be made by the certificate of the printer or publisher, his testimony to that effect is not sufficient. It cannot be shown by parol in a collateral proceeding. Haywood v. Collins, 60 Ill. 328. See also Martin v. Barbour, 34 Fed. Rep. 701.

5. Swift v. Stebbins, 4 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 447; Prout v. People, 83 Ill. 154; Tompkins v. Wiltberger, 56 Ill. 385; Millett v. Pease, 31 Ill. 377; Tibbs v. Allen, 27 Ill. 119; Dowell v. Whiteman, 2 Ohio St. 270; Beattie v. Wilkinson, 36 Fed. Rep. 646; Galpin v. Page, 1 Sawyer (U. S.) 309. Compare Hunter v. Spotswood, 1 Wash. (Va.) 145.

Sufficiency of Recital.—The recital in a judgment entry of "due and legal service on the defendant" is insufficient under Ala. Code, 1886, § 2936. The record should state the name of the paper and the length of time that publication was made. Diston v. Hood, 83 Ala. 331.

(a) CONTENTS OF THE AFFIDAVIT OF PUBLICATION.—The affidavit of the person making proof of the publication should show that all the requirements of the statute relating to the publication have been complied with.¹

Recital Nunc Pro Tunc.—In a case where the record failed to show that publication had been made, it was held proper after a writ of error had been sued out to prove the fact of publication and have a recital of the fact inserted in the record of the court below nunc pro tunc in order to prevent a reversal of the decree. Cullum v. Batre, 2 Ala. 415.

Fact of Nonresidence.—Where there is a recital of due notice by publication there must be affirmative evidence in the record that there was proper ground for such notice, such as nonresidence, or the judgment or decree cannot stand. Coons v. Throckmorton, 25 Ark. 60. See also Hartley v. Boynton, 17 Fed. Rep. 873.

Lapse of Time.—Where a long time has elapsed since the decree was made, the regularity of the proceedings and proof of publication will be inferred from comparatively slight evidence. Clyburn v. Reynolds, 31 S. Car. 91.

But it has been held that affidavits of publication filed more than two years after a judicial sale could not be considered as a part of the record of the proceedings or of the official files of the office, and that they had no legal sanction. Martin v. Barbour, 34 Fed. Rep. 701.

1. Gibney v. Crawford, 51 Ark. 34; Coster v. Bank of Georgia, 24 Ala. 37; Steinbach v. Leese, 27 Cal. 295; Cissell v. Pulaski Co., 3 McCrary (U. S.) 446; Gray v. Larrimore, 4 Saw. (U. S.) 638, 646; Galpin v. Page, 1 Sawy. (U. S.) 309; s. c., 18 Wall. (U. S.) 350; Settlemier v. Sullivan, 97 U. S. 444; Staples v. Fairchild, 3 N. Y. 43; Payne v. Young, 8 N. Y. 158; Finch v. Pinckard, 5 Ill. 69.

The fact of publication must be proved, and it is not sufficient to show that there was an order of publication. Moore v. Wright, 4 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 84.

If the essential facts authorizing notice by publication appear in the affidavit it is immaterial that the facts are not fully stated. Field v. Malone, 102 Ind. 251.

The statute required that notice should be published in a "public" newspaper, but the officer's return omitted the word "public." Held, not fatal, as a newspaper is necessarily public. Bailey v. Myrick, 50 Me. 171. See also Millet v. Pease, 31 Ill. 377; Witt v. Meyer, 69 Wis. 595.

Affiant's Connection with Paper.—An affidavit that the notice was published should state what the affiant's connection with the paper is. Cross v. Wilson (Ark.), 12 S. W. Rep. 576; Pillow v. Sentelle, 39 Ark. 61; Haywood v. Collins, 60 Ill. 328; Miller v. Hall, 3 Mon. (Ky.) 242; Evans v. Benton, 3 Mon. (Ky.) 389; Wilkinson v. Perin, 7 Mon. (Ky.) 214; Freeman v. Brown, 7 Mon. (Ky.) 263; Bainbridge v. Owen, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 463; Mims v. Mims, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 103; Brown v. Mahan, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 59; Brown v. Wood, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 11; Hill v. Hoover, 5 Wis. 354.

An affidavit which showed that the affiant was the only clerk is sufficient under a law requiring the affidavit of the principal clerk. Gray v. Palmer, 9 Cal. 616.

But an affidavit by one who inserts the words "printer and publisher," or "chief clerk" as words of description, without a direct averment that the affiant fills such a position, is not sufficient. Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Fonda, 64 Mich. 533; Steinbach v. Leese, 27 Cal. 295.

Date of Publication.—The date of the publication of the notice should appear in the affidavit. Milam v. Thomasson, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 324; Tervis v. Richardson, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 654; Hopkins v. Claybrook, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 234; Berryman v. Mullins, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 152; King v. Harrington, 14 Mich. 532.

Where the date stated in the affidavit and the other averments as to time of publication are inconsistent and the mistake is apparently a mere clerical error, the affidavit will be held sufficient. Pile v. McBratney, 15 Ill. 314; Lane v. Innes, 43 Minn. 137; Swayze v. Doe, 21 Miss. 317.

Direction of Notice.—The affidavit of service by publication should show that the notice was addressed to the party to be notified "at his usual place of residence." Foley v. Connelly, 9 Iowa 240.

(b) AMENDMENT OF AFFIDAVIT OF PUBLICATION.—Where there is a defect in the proof of publication, but it can be shown that all the requirements of the law have been fulfilled, the affidavit of service of publication may be so amended as to show the actual facts.¹

VI. NOTICE BY MAIL—1. Presumption of Receipt.—Proof of the mailing of a notice properly addressed and postpaid raises a presumption that the notice was received by the person to whom it was directed.² This is a presumption of fact and may be rebutted

Annexation of Printed Copy Taken from Paper.—Where a statute provides that publication may be proved by an affidavit, etc., “annexed to a printed copy of such notice taken from the paper in which it was published,” it is not necessary that the notice should be cut from the paper, and if the affidavit contains a copy which is sworn to be true the statute is sufficiently complied with. Wilkinson v. Conaty, 65 Mich. 614.

Time Clauses.—A certificate by a printer stating that a notice had been published nine weeks without stating the dates of the publication is not sufficient to show a publication for two calendar months. Passmore v. Moore, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 591.

Where the affidavit shows a compliance with the statute and states the date of the first publication and left that of the last one blank, held, not defective. Feustmann v. Gott, 65 Mich. 592.

An affidavit of publication for “six successive weeks” does not show that the publication was made “once in each week” for the period stated. Godfrey v. Valentine, 39 Minn. 336.

An averment of publication “once in each week for ten weeks” fulfils a requirement of publication “for the space of ten weeks.” Wood v. Knapp, 100 N. Y. 109.

An affidavit that a summons was published “six weeks successively” does not show a compliance with a statute requiring publication for “not less than once a week for six weeks.” Frisk v. Reigelman, 75 Wis. 499. Compare Sexton v. Rhames, 13 Wis. 99.

A publisher’s affidavit that a notice was published for five weeks, commencing on a certain day, does not show a compliance with a statute requiring publication “once in each week for four successive weeks.” Ramsey v. Hommel, 68 Wis. 12; Morris v. Carmichael, 68 Wis. 133. See also Morris v. Mississippi River Logging Co., 68 Wis. 133.

An affidavit showing that publication of a notice was commenced in the first issue of the paper in July and ended with the last paper in August, held insufficient because the publication was not two calendar months. Lawlins v. Lackey, 6 Mon. (Ky.) 70.

The court has power to allow an amendment of a printer’s affidavit, so as to show the date upon which the publication of a summons began. Weaver v. Roberts, 84 N. Car. 493.

Proof of service by publication may be amended after judgment to conform to the facts. Hackett v. Lathrop, 36 Kan. 661.

Notice According to Terms of a Contract.—Where a contract provides that a party shall be notified, the obligation when it becomes a question for the jury.¹

VII. EFFECT OF NOTICE.—One chargeable with notice acquires only such rights as his grantor has in the subject matter, and takes subject to all adverse claims affecting his grantor's rights, of which he had notice.²

is not fulfilled by simply mailing it; it must be shown that the notice was actually received. Castner v. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 50 Mich. 273; Carpenter v. Providence Washington Ins. Co., 4 How. (U. S.) 185.

Notice of Protest—"Notice by mail of the dishonor of commercial paper is in most cases sufficient by the law merchant to charge an endorser. It is a part of the contract that notice may be given in this way, and it is not material in fixing the liability of the endorser whether he receives it or not." Austin v. Holland, 69 N. Y. 571; s. c., 25 Am. Rep. 246; Walworth v. Seaver, 30 Vt. 728; s. c., 73 Am. Dec. 332; Carpenter v. Providence Washington Ins. Co., 4 How. (U. S.) 185.

It has also been held that there should be proof that the party resided at the place to which the notice was addressed or that it was the proper place to address him. Crawford v. Branch Bank, 7 Ala. 205.

Notice of Legal Proceedings.—Proof of deposit of notice to opposite attorney is not sufficient proof of service to support an application made in the absence of such attorney. Anonymous, 11 N. J. L. 94.

Deposit in Mail on Last Day.—A notice deposited in the mail on the last day within which notice may be given, but too late to be dispatched on that day is not sufficient. Field v. Mann, 42 Vt. 61.

Computation of Time.—Time is to be computed from the time of receipt of a notice sent by mail, not from the time of its deposit in the mail. Brattleboro East Soc. v. Reed, 42 Vt. 76.

Post Mark.—In order to raise the presumption that a letter containing a notice was at the place indicated by its postmark at the date thereof there must also be evidence of the genuineness of the post mark. Crawford v. Branch Bank, 7 Ala. 205.

Notice of an equity does not affect the rights of a party in a trial at law, however,¹ nor will the notice of an illegal act make it valid.²

VIII. WAIVER OF NOTICE.—Objections for want of notice are waived by placing a refusal to comply upon other grounds.³

A party cannot be held to be affected with notice, though there is evidence from which it may be inferred, when there are no corresponding allegations in the pleadings. Cooper v. Loughlin, 75 Tex. 524.

Proof of Actual Notice When Constructive Notice Defective.—Where a record or other means of giving constructive notice of a fact is so defective as to be insufficient for its purpose, evidence is admissible to show that a person had actual notice of the fact. Rowley v. Bartholomew, 37 Iowa 374; Ketcham v. Brazil Block Coal Co., 88 Ind. 515; Shultz v. Moore, 1 McLean (U. S.) 520.

Matter of Public Notoriety.—It is admissible to show the public notoriety of a fact in the neighborhood in which a party resides for the purpose of charging him with notice, but it is not sufficient of itself; other evidence of the existence of the fact must be adduced. Cleveland Woolen Mills v. Sibert, 81 Ala. 140. Compare Clark v. Ricker, 14 N. H. 44.

Acts of Parties Proving Notice.—Where parties gave notice to the sheriff that they claimed a certain share in the proceeds of a sale by him, held, proof that the parties had notice of the sale itself. Carey v. Bright, 58 Pa. St. 70.

Acting on a Rumor Apparently Disproved.—An attaching creditor had heard that his debtor had previously conveyed all his property to A, on condition that A should pay his debts, and the creditor had thereupon asked A to

X. NOTICE IN CONNECTION WITH BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—1. Who Is a Bona Fide Purchaser.—A bona fide purchaser is one who buys property of another without notice that some third person has a right to, or interest in, such property, and pays a full and fair price for the same, at the time of such purchase, or before he has notice of the claim or interest of such other in the property.¹

(a) CREDITOR.—The term creditors, as generally used in statutes relating to their rights in the property of their debtors, does not mean creditors at large, but those whose debts are liquidated and who have procured liens on the property.² Irrespective of the statutes giving a docketed judgment precedence over an unrecorded deed, a mere judgment or attaching creditor is not, as such, a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration. The reason for this seems to be that such a creditor is deemed to be entitled only to such rights as the debtor himself possessed, since he claims under him and not through him, and there is no new consideration as in the case of a purchaser.³ The statutes relating to registra-pay the debt due him from the debtor, which A had not refused to pay nor had denied his liability, but died without paying. Subsequently, the creditor searched the records, but found no such deed to A. Held, that these facts did not prove that the creditor had previous actual notice of a prior unrecorded deed from the debtor to A. Richardson v. Smith, 11 Allen (Mass.) 134.

Facts Adduced in a Former Trial.—The evidence of an attorney that certain facts had been brought out in a former trial in which he appeared against the party denying notice of the facts in the present trial, held admissible. Whitten v. Jenkins, 34 Ga. 297.

Declarations of Disbelief in Adverse Claim.—Where the declarations of the subsequent purchaser show both his disbelief that any prior deed of the premises had been given by his grantor, and his knowledge of the claim of the parties professing to hold under such a deed, they do not warrant the conclusion that he had actual notice of the existence of the deed; nor can his conduct be considered fraudulent in taking a conveyance to himself under those circumstances.

Charge to Jury.—Although evidence as to notice is conflicting, court may charge as to legal effect if jury believe it was given. Central R. Co. v. Mitchell, 63 Ga. 173; s. c., 1 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 145.

Widow of Pledgor of Unrecorded Deed.—Where unrecorded title deeds are deposited with a creditor by the grantee therein as security for his debt, the fact that no deeds to him are on record, or in his possession, is sufficient notice to put a purchaser for a valuable consideration on enquiry. But a widow of the pledgor is not a purchaser for a valuable consideration in such a sense that she may contest such pledge for want of registry. Griffin v. Griffin, 18 N. J. Eq. 104.

number of the States, as construed by the courts, protect a bona fide creditor as a bona fide purchaser, provided he is not aware with notice of a prior right or encumbrance at the time of perfecting his judgment.¹ A creditor is as much bound by his knowledge of a prior unrecorded encumbrance, acquired before the entry of his judgment, as subsequent purchasers

Judgment Preferred to Prior Equity.—

A judgment for a pre-existing debt is sufficient to entitle the owner to preference as a bona fide purchaser over the prior equity of one having no legal right, provided the judgment creditor had no notice of the equity. Uhler v. Semple, 20 N. J. Eq. 288.

A judgment creditor will be protected against a subsequently recorded mortgage, though it be to secure a part of the purchase money. Roane v. Baker (Ill.), 2 N. E. Rep. 501. Compare Elder v. Derby, 98 Ill. 232.

2. Henderson v. Downing, 24 Miss. 106; Dixon v. Doe, 1 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 70; Mead v. New York etc. R. Co., 45 Conn. 199; Swan v. Moore, 14 La. An.

(1) Preferred Creditor.—Preferences in assignments or by transfer of property before assignment, without any new consideration, are valid as against mere general creditors and the assignee, but not as against those who have protected themselves by a lien or such other title as the law has provided for the collection of debts; as to them the assignee is not a bona fide purchaser for value.¹ As between mere general creditors the equities are equal; and when one of them has fairly obtained a transfer to himself of a sufficient portion of the debtor's property to pay his debts, he is protected in accordance with the maxim that "where

The following cases hold the assignee a bona fide purchaser for value: Gates v. Lebeaume, 19 Mo. 117; Evans v. Greenhow, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 153.

Unrecorded Deed.—The grantee in an unrecorded deed can hold the property against the assignee of the grantor for the benefit of creditors. Hardin v. Osborn, 94 Ill. 571.

Vendor's Lien.—The lien of the vendor for unpaid purchase-money is a superior equity to that of the assignee in bankruptcy or for the benefit of creditors. Bayley v. Greenleaf, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 46; Brown v. Vanlier, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 239; Repp v. Repp, 12 Gill & J. (Md.) 341.

Unrecorded Mortgage.—The title of the holder of an unrecorded mortgage is good against the assignee in a general assignment. The assignee and creditors whom he represents stand in the place of the debtor, and as the unrecorded mortgage would be good against him it is equally so against the assignee. Van Hensen v. Radcliff, 17 N. Y. 580; s. c., 72 Am. Dec. 480; Mellon's Appeal, 32 Pa. St. 121; Fielde v. Baker, 12 Blatchf. (U. S.) 439.

In the case of Dey v. Dunham, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 182, an absolute conveyance was given and recorded as such, but there was a secret understanding that it should operate only as a mortgage. A general assignment was made and Ch. Kent held the assignee a bona fide purchaser without notice, but in the later case of Haggerty v. Palmer, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 437, he seems to have changed his opinion, for he held the equitable right to goods of the assignor resting in a third person superior to the right of the assignee for the benefit of creditors.

A mortgagee may call upon a court of equity to correct a mistake in a mortgage, and decree its foreclosure against an assignee for the benefit of creditors, and the assignee will not be allowed to plead that he is a bona fide purchaser because the court holds him a volunteer for want of any new consideration. Willis v. Henderson, 5 Ill. 13; s. c., 38 Am. Dec. 120. See also Walker v. Miller, 11 Ala. 1067.

Instrument Void for Want of Seal.—An instrument intended for a mortgage, but ineffectual for want of a seal, creates no lien in favor of the mortgagee as against the assignee under a subsequent general assignment by the mortgagor for the benefit of creditors, even though said assignee have notice of such instrument (affirming Bloom v. Noggel, 4 Ohio St. 45); Erwin v. Shuey, 8 Ohio St. 509.

Execution Levied Before Assignment.—Where a levy has been made under an execution before the execution of the deed of assignment the assignee is not a bona fide purchaser as against the execution creditor, and the sheriff is bound to proceed and sell unless the creditors see fit to withdraw their executions. Slade v. Van Vechten, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 21; Ray v. Birdseye, 5 Den. (N. Y.) 619.

Landlord's Lien for Rent.—An assignee for the benefit of creditors is not a bona fide purchaser as against a landlord who has a lien for rent. O'Hara v. Jones, 46 Ill. 288.

the equities are equal the legal title will prevail."¹ The creditor who has protected himself by a lien, or similar security, is in a better position than the general creditor, and his right can only be overcome by one who has secured a still higher equity, by parting in good faith with a new and valuable consideration on the strength of the vendor's possession and apparently good title.²

(b) PURCHASE AT JUDICIAL SALE.—One who purchases at judicial sale, without notice, actual or constructive, at the time of sale, of a prior encumbrance, will be protected as a bona fide purchaser.³ There is a conflict of decisions on the question of treating the judgment creditor who purchases at the sale under his own judgment as a bona fide purchaser. One line of cases holds that he is not such a purchaser because he parts with no new consideration.⁴ But the courts in a number of the States have held that he is en-

Purchaser May Rely on Record.—Purchasers at sheriff's sale are chargeable with such notice as the public records inform them of; and if a mortgage does not, upon its face, show a lien prior to that of the judgment, the purchaser is not bound to indulge in suspicions touching its fairness.

Registration of Sheriff's Deed.—The grantee in a sheriff's deed of real estate sold on execution, on which there was an unrecorded mortgage, in order to bring himself within § 26 of the act concerning conveyances, must show that his conveyance was recorded before the mortgage was. Thomas v. Vanlieu, 28 Cal. 616.

Purchaser of Judgment Debtor Bound by Latter's Acts.—A purchaser from a defendant in execution, of the property previously sold upon the execution as defendant's property, stands in no better position than his vendor, and cannot avail himself of want of actual notice of acts or admissions of the vendor which would tend to cure irregularities in the process and make the sale valid. Alexander v. Miller, 18 Tex. 893; s. c., 70 Am. Dec. 314.

A purchaser at judicial sale without notice of a prior unrecorded encumbrance will be protected, although the judgment creditor himself had notice. Miles v. King, 5 S. Car. 146.

titled to the same protection as any other purchaser.¹

(1) When Notice Will Affect the Purchaser.—There is a difference of opinion as to when the notice of a prior encumbrance must be received in order to charge the purchaser. One class of cases holds that the purchaser must be chargeable with notice at or before the time of the entry of judgment,² but there are a number of decisions which hold that notice received at or before the sale will destroy the bona fides of a purchaser.³

Dennison, 1 Oreg. 19; Williams v. Hollingsworth, 1 Sirobh. Eq. (S. Car.) 103; s. c., 47 Am. Dec. 527; Dillard v. Crocker, Spear's Eq. (S. Car.) 20; Shultz v. Carter, Spear's Eq. (S. Car.) 533; Keeling v. Heard, 3 Head (Tenn.) 592.

Neither an attorney who becomes a purchaser at a judicial sale, made for the benefit of his client, nor his minor children to whom he has conveyed the land thus purchased in consideration of love and affection, are bona fide purchasers without notice. Salter v. Dunn, 1 Bush (Ky.) 311.

Effect of Reversal.—The assignee of one who purchased under an erroneous decree in his own favor stands in the place of his vendor, and a subsequent reversal defeats his title also; and the judgment or decree being the foundation of the title, the assignee or vendee of such purchaser is bound to take notice of, and therefore is not entitled to protection as a bona fide purchaser for value without notice. Marks v. Cowles, 61 Ala. 299.

Subsequent reversal of an erroneous judgment cannot effect the rights of third parties acquired under such judgment. Guiteau v. Wisely, 47 Ill. 433.

Expense of Sale as New Consideration.—It is said in Wood v. Chapin, 13 N. Y. 509, that the expenses of levy and sale which the judgment creditor must pay are a new consideration for the property which he secures at the sale, but the contrary view is taken by the court in Hart v. Farmers' etc. Bank, 33 Vt. 252.

"At law or in equity the plaintiff in execution, when a purchaser, is protected, unless the equities of the adverse claimant are so strong and persuasive as to prevent the application of the rule which indisputably obtains as to third persons or strangers to the suit; and that if these are relied upon they must be alleged and proved." If the judgment creditor have no notice of a prior right or encumbrance at the time of the entry of his judgment, the purchaser at the sale will be protected in his purchase, otherwise the judgment creditor would not receive the full benefit of his judgment. (c) MORTGAGEE.—A mortgagee is a purchaser to the extent of his interest, and will be protected in all rights acquired without notice and in good faith.¹

(d) SURETY.—Where a person, about becoming the surety of another for the purchase of lands, stipulates at the time that the vendor shall convey the land directly to him, in order to secure himself against liability as surety, he may defend this title thus acquired as a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, and notice of the prior deed or encumbrance, given to the actual vendee, will not affect his right.²

(e) PURCHASER OF EQUITABLE ESTATE.—The purchaser of a mere equitable estate is not embraced within the definition of a bona fide purchaser.³

(f) GRANTEE AGREEING TO SUPPORT GRANTOR FOR LIFE.—A grantee who agrees, as the consideration for the grant, that he will support the grantor for life is not a bona fide purchaser, but is bound by all equities affecting his title.⁴

(g) GRANTEE IN QUIT CLAIM DEED.—It is a disputed question whether the grantee in a quit claim deed without notice should be protected as a bona fide purchaser. The weight of authority der his own execution, issued and levied after he had notice, against the heir, cannot be regarded as a bona fide purchaser. Gillespie v. Walker, 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 505.

If an appeal in order to set aside a judicial sale is prosecuted before the sale is fully completed by a conveyance offered by the court, and before the collection and disbursement of the purchase money, the court and the purchaser at such sale are chargeable with notice of such appeal, and if, notwithstanding such notice, the court completes the sale, without objection on the part of the purchaser, he cannot be regarded as a bona fide purchaser, without notice, but may be compelled to release his title acquired under such sale to the owner of the land, if the sale is set aside. Miller v. Hall, 1 Bush (Ky.) 229.

Verbal Notice at Sale.—A verbal notice by an owner of the equity of redemption under an unrecorded deed first given at the time or the sale is sufficient to charge the purchaser at such sale. Hodson v. Treat, 7 Wis. 263. See also McClellan v. Scott, 24 Wis. 81.

Judgment Creditor Buying with Notice of Prior Right.—If a mortgagor sells the land to an innocent purchaser, taking from him a mortgage to secure the purchase money, on which he obtains a decree of sale in a foreclosure suit, at which he, by himself or agent, becomes the purchaser, he is not in a condition to claim the protection afforded to a bona fide purchaser, without notice, so as to defeat the mortgage which he has executed to his vendor; for this would be to take advantage of his own wrong. Smith v. Mobile Bank, 21 Ala. 125. See also Harris v. Norton, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 264.

Sufficiency of Notice of Wife's Interest.—The fact that a wife joins her husband in a deed of land, is not of itself constructive notice to subsequent purchasers, at a sheriff's sale, of a prior unrecorded deed to the wife. Vassault v. Austin, 36 Cal. 691.

seems to be that he is not, because his deed gives him only such interest as the grantor then has, and the fact that the conveyance is by quitclaim, is held by some courts to be sufficient to put a party on enquiry as to what the interest is.¹ On the other hand, it is maintained that it is not the character of the deed which gives protection to the purchaser, but his equity of having parted with a valuable consideration in good faith, coupled with an apparent legal title.²

2. The Consideration—(a) MUST BE ACTUALLY PAID BEFORE NOTICE.—To support the plea of a bona fide purchaser without notice, the defendant must aver and prove not only that he had no notice of the plaintiff's rights before his purchase, but that the consideration was a valuable one and had been actually paid in full before notice.³

Circumstance Showing Notice.—To entitle an innocent purchaser without notice to protection in equity, the text-books do not assert, nor has any case been found to adjudge, that he must hold under a general warrantee deed; but it is no doubt the law that where a person bargains for and takes a mere quitclaim or deed without warrantee, it is a circumstance, if unexplained, to show that he had notice of imperfections in the vendor's title, and only purchased such interest as the vendor might have in the property. Miller v. Fraley, 23 Ark. 735. See also Snowden v. Tyler, 21 Neb. 199; Hoyt v. Schuyler, 19 Neb. 652.

Of What Quitclaim Deed Is Notice.—The record of a quit claim deed simply gives notice of the existence and contents of the deed to all subsequent purchasers from the same grantor. It does not give notice to any person that such grantor had any right to the property, nor does it give notice to any person of any prior unrecorded deeds constituting a chain of title to the grantor. Hutchinson v. Hartmann, 15 Kan. 133.

(b) WHEN PART OF CONSIDERATION HAS BEEN PAID.—Payment of a part of the purchase money, although not sufficient to invest the purchaser with the character of a bona fide purchaser as regards the estate purchased, does give him the right to invoke the aid of the equitable principle, that he who claims equity must do equity and requires reimbursement, from the rightful owner, of all moneys paid before notice, as a condition to granting the first purchaser or encumbrancer relief,¹ and it has been held that pro-

(c) PLEADING.—In setting up a bona fide purchase for value without notice as a defence, the consideration must be stated with a distinct averment that it was bona fide, and truly paid, independently of the recital in the deed. Notice, whether charged or not, must be denied previous to and down to the time of paying the money and the delivery of the deed; and, if notice is especially charged, the denial must be of all the circumstances referred to from which notice can be inferred; and the answer or plea show how the grantee acquired title.² It has also been Cannot Perfect Entire Claim by Payment of Balance.—A subsequent purchaser of lands, who has made part payment without notice, leaving a balance unpaid, and who then receives notice of a prior equity, cannot, as against the holder of the prior equity, by afterwards paying the balance, perfect his entire claim as a purchaser without notice. Wells v. Morrow, 38 Ala. 125; Warner v. Whittaker, 6 Mich. 133; s. c., 72 Am. Dec. 65. Contra, Morris v. Meek, 57 Tex. 385.

Partial Payment—Vendor's Lien.—A second vendee of land without notice, actual or constructive, of a mortgage thereon, for the purchase money to the prior vendor, the title deeds and possession of the land being delivered to him, will be protected in chancery to the extent of the purchase money paid by him before notice of the mortgage. But where no part of the purchase money has been paid by him the lien of the prior vendor for the purchase money due him will prevail. And, on a bill by the prior vendor to enforce his equitable lien, or such mortgage, time will be given to the second vendee to pay the amount due the complainant, and if not paid within such time, the court will order a sale of the lands, the proceeds to be applied first to the payment of the amount paid by the second vendee, before notice of the prior encumbrance, and then to the satisfaction of the complainant's claim. Dufphey v. Frenaye, 5 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 215.

Liability to Grantee in Unrecorded Deed.—Where an innocent vendee, who has paid for the land partly in cash and the balance by note and mortgage, receives notice of an unrecorded claim before paying the note, he is liable to the holder of the claim for the purchase price unpaid at the time of notice. held that the plea of a bona fide purchaser without notice, must aver that the person who conveyed or mortgaged to defendant was seized in fee or pretended to be, and was in possession.¹

(d) NEW CONSIDERATION NECESSARY.—There must be some new consideration given, some right abandoned, or something done to the prejudice of the party before notice was received.² A pre-existing debt is not such a consideration as will sustain the plea of "bona fide purchaser for value," except in the case of negotiable paper, and on this point there is great difference of opinion,³ but if one relinquishes a security which he held before

Extending Time of Payment of Antecedent Debt.—"The giving of further time for the payment of an existing debt by a valid agreement for any period, however short, is a valuable consideration, and is sufficient to support a mortgage as a purchase for a valuable consideration.' The same doctrine was enunciated in Cary v. White, 52 N. Y. 138, the court saying: 'If there was an extension of time for a single day by a valid agreement as a consideration of the mortgage, there was a valuable consideration within the rule.' This doctrine commends itself to us as sound. We are unable to discover by what rule we could determine what length of time would be sufficient, if one day is not enough. A longer extension might be of greater advantage to the debtor, or of greater disadvantage to the creditor, but neither the advantage nor the disadvantage would be more tangible or real." Suspicion of Notice.—A suspicion that one claiming to be a bona fide purchaser had notice is not sufficient to procure the interference of a court of equity. Knowledge must be clearly shown. Miller v. Fraley, 23 Ark. 735.

Obtaining a patent for land, and selling to a purchaser for a valuable consideration, does not preclude enquiry as to adverse claims founded on an equity arising previous to the patent, and of which the purchaser had no notice. Gonzalus v. Hoover, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 118.

When the Doctrine Is Applicable.—The doctrine that a purchaser without notice, for a valuable consideration, is entitled to the protection of the court, is only applicable to a case where there is prior equitable title; but where there is prior legal title, the rule is caveat emptor. Daniel v. Hollingshead, 16 Ga. 190. See Taylor v. Stone, 3 Munf. (Va.) 314.

who never had the legal title will not be protected against the holder of the legal title, though such vendee be a purchaser for value and without notice.¹

5. Can Convey Good Title to One with Notice.—When property comes into the hands of one having no notice of prior equities, he obtains a complete jus disponendi and his want of notice is a protection to all subsequent grantees, though they have notice:² with this exception, that a prior owner charged with

The doctrine of bona fide purchasers has no application when either one or the other of the parties has both the legal and equitable title, and the dispute is as to which has it. Wells v. Walker, 29 Ga. 450.

The defence of a defendant, that he is a purchaser for value without notice, is only available where the plaintiff is seeking to take something away from the defendant which he already has. Barnard v. Hunter, 39 Eng. L. & Eq. 569.

There is no distinction between a "purchaser in good faith," under the recording act, and a bona fide purchaser within the decisions of the court of equity in other cases. Grimstone v. Carter, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 421; s. c., 24 Am. Dec. 230.

2. "For if either of those persons took and recorded the conveyance to himself in good faith, and in ignorance of the prior grant, his title was not only good, but he could confer a like perfect title upon one who had a full knowledge of such prior conveyance. 'If this were otherwise,' as CHANCELLOR WALWORTH says, in Varick v. Briggs, 'a bona fide purchaser might be deprived of the power of selling his property for its full value.'" *Simon v. Partition by Tenants in Common.—A, B and C, in equal shares, owned land in common, a portion of which was charged, as against them, with an equitable encumbrance not appearing on record. A sold out his undivided interest to D, who purchased without notice, in good faith and for full value, and B subsequently sold out his undivided interest to E, a purchaser with notice, though for full value. C, D and E subsequently made an amicable and equal partition of the land (D still having no notice of the encumbrance) by an exchange of deeds, the part set to E including the whole of the encumbered notice cannot procure a retransfer to himself, and claim protection on the ground that his second grantor had no notice.¹

6. Burden of Proof.—There is one line of decisions which hold that, where a party has failed to record the instrument under which he claims, and a subsequent purchaser has acquired a title, which he has duly recorded, the burden of proof is upon the first purchaser to show that the holder of the subsequent right is chargeable with notice of the encumbrance.² On the other hand, it is held that where a fraud has been proven, the party whose title is derived through such a transaction must prove his own good faith and want of notice,³ or, if there be no fraud shown, still the holder under the prior conveyance is the owner against all ex-portion, and being estimated at its full value without allowance for the encumbrance. Upon a bill in equity brought against E to establish the encumbrance it was held that he could not take advantage of the want of notice on the part of D to protect his title to the part now owned by him in severalty. Blatchley v. Osborn, 33 Conn. 226.

Knowledge of Real Party in Interest.—If real estate, at the time of a purchase by a mother as an advancement for her daughter, is subject to the lien of an unrecorded mortgage, of which the daughter had knowledge, the mother cannot, from her payment of the purchase money, be considered a purchaser without notice, nor can the daughter defend under her as such, in an ejectment for the land, brought by a purchaser at sheriff's sale, under proceedings upon the mortgage. Murphy v. Nathans, 46 Pa. St. 508.

Fraud on Part of Grantee With Notice.—Though a purchaser with notice from one without notice takes the latter's rights, yet if, confederating with the original vendee, he has procured the purchase under a foreclosure sale, to be made by the innocent purchaser, intending to purchase from him and to defeat the vendor's lien, he shall take nothing by his fraud. Chance v. McWhorter, 26 Ga. 315.

Part Remaining in Hands of One With Knowledge.—A bill in equity to establish rights in land should be dismissed as to a bona fide purchaser of a portion of it who had no notice of complainant's equities; but if his grantor is charged with notice the amount remaining in his hands may properly be charged with the whole amount of complainant's lien. Holcomb v. Mosher, 50 Mich. 252.

Purchaser with Notice at Foreclosure Sale.—A purchaser at a sale under a mortgage having actual notice of an outstanding equity, may nevertheless take advantage of the want of notice on the part of the mortgagee, since otherwise the mortgage would be a worthless security. Cahalan v. Monroe, 56 Ala. 303.

Announcement of Defect Unknown to Mortgagee Made at Sale.—Where the mortgagee is not chargeable with notice of outstanding equities against the mortgagor's title, the purchaser at the sale under the power in the mortgage is not chargeable by reason of an announcement first made at the sale. Whitfield v. Riddle, 78 Ala. 99.

When Party Without Notice Is Only Nominal Purchaser.—The sale will be set aside, although the nominal purchaser was ignorant of the facts of the case, when he took the property only as security for his advance of the purchase money, and he has since, his debt being paid, conveyed the premises to the real purchaser, who was fully acquainted with the circumstances of the sale. Runkle v. Gaylord, 1 Nev. 123.

cept those purchasing in good faith and for value, and the burden is upon one setting up such a claim.¹

7. Buying in Paramount Legal Title.—Where one has acquired a right in good faith, and subsequently learns of a prior right, he may buy in a paramount legal title after notice, and avail himself of that.²

NOTICE TO PRODUCE PAPERS—(See also PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS).

- VIII. Effect of Not Producing Papers After Notice Has Been Given, 857.

I. IN GENERAL.—The object of giving the adverse party notice to produce at the trial of a cause, books or papers material to the issue and in his possession, is to let the party giving the notice into proof of their contents, upon his showing that they were in the possession of the opposite party, and of putting it in his power to produce the best evidence which the nature of the case will admit.³ The party giving the notice must show that the paper is in the hands of, or under the control of, the adverse party.⁴

3. Reid v. Colcock, 1 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 592; s. c., 9 Am. Dec. 729; Dwyer v. Collins, 7 Exch. 639; 16 Jur. 569; 21 L. J. Exch. 225.

It must be shown to be material to the issue. Sinclair v. Gray, 9 Fla. 71; McKellep v. McIlhenny, 4 Watts (Pa.) 317; s. c., 28 Am. Dec. 711.

A party is not obliged to produce a paper unless the adverse party has given him notice to do so. Waring v. Warren, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 340.

4. Birckbeck v. Tucker, 2 Hall (N. Y.) 121; Sinclair v. Gray, 9 Fla. 71.

It is sufficient if it is shown that it was last seen in his hands. Norton v. Heywood, 20 Me. 359; Davidson v. Lowry, 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 532. Or if it is in the hands of his agent. Baldney v. Ritchie, 1 Stark. 338; Sinclair v. Stephenson, 1 Carr. & P. 582. But where it is in the hands of a third person his rights must be such that he would have a right to retain it. Parry v. May, 1 M. & Rob. 279.

Secondary evidence of the contents of a paper is admissible where the party offering it is not entitled to its custody, but its custody rightfully belongs to the opposite party, and who has disclaimed all knowledge of it when notified to produce it. Jones v. Jones, 38 Cal. 584.

Instances Where the English Cases Hold the Paper to be in the Hands of the Adverse Party, or Sufficiently Under His Control to be Produced.—Where a check was drawn by the party served with notice to produce, and was paid by his banker and in his hands. Partridge v. Coates, R. & M. 156; 1 Carr. & P. 434. And he need not call on the banker's clerk to produce it. Burton v. Payne, 2 Carr. & P. 520. A document proved to be in the hands of a party to an action, or in the possession of his attorney in another action, when the notice was served on the attorney. Irwin v. Lever, 2 F. & F. 296. A document deposited in a court of equity by a party to a suit and scheduled in his answer, but which remains in the hands of an officer of that court after an order to deliver it to the party. Bush v. Peacock, 2 M. & Rob. 162. When a sheriff's warrant to levy execution had

Cogent evidence of this, however, is not necessary,¹ for the party notified to produce the paper may show that it is not in his possession or under his control;² and it is for the judge to decide whether sufficient ground has been laid for the admission of secondary evidence as to its contents.³

- II. To Whom Given.—The notice to produce may be directed to or served on either the party or his attorney, on the attorney as of course, if the party has gone away, leaving the cause in the attorney's hands.⁴

been returned by the bailiff to the under sheriff after the levy, while the sheriff was yet in office, and the bailiff, upon being called as a witness, did not produce it, it was held that notice to the sheriff's attorney was sufficient. Taplin v. Atty, 3 Bing. 164; 10 Moore 564. Where, in an action against the directors of an intended company, it was shown that four months before the trial the late secretary had the books in a desk at the office of the company, and that he then gave up the key of the desk to the manager of the company, it was held that this was sufficient. Bell v. Francis, 9 Carr. & P. 66. In an action against a sheriff, after the expiration of his year of office, a notice served on his attorney to produce a warrant returned to the deputy sheriff of London, during the sheriff's year of office, was held sufficient. Suter v. Burrell, 2 H. & N. 867; 27 L. J. Exch. 193. Where a bill of exchange was the consideration upon which the action was brought, it was held that it must be produced upon notice, or that secondary evidence might be given, although the party holding it had discounted it with his banker before notice. Wright v. Bungard, 2 F. & F. 193.

Where an action was brought against two executors, and one of them suffered judgment to be taken against him by default, and the probate of the will was produced and notice had been served on both of them to produce a receipt given to the one in default, it was held that, if it was not produced, secondary evidence of its contents might be given, and that it made no difference that the one to whom the receipt had been given had suffered default. Beckwith v. Benner, 6 Carr. & P. 681. It is sufficient if there is merely evidence to go to the jury that the document is in the party's possession on whom notice has been served to produce. Robb v. Starkey, 2 Carr. & K. 143.

English Cases Holding the Paper Not to be in the Possession or Under the Control of the Party Who Had Been Served with Notice to Produce.—Where an action was brought upon a lease executed on behalf of the lessor under a power of attorney, and no subpoena duces tecum had been served on the party who executed the lease, it was held that the power of attorney was the property of the party who executed the lease under its authority, and that secondary evidence of its contents could not be given. Hibberd v. Knight, 2 Exch. 11; 17 L. J. Exch. 119.

Notice to produce is not sufficient to admit secondary evidence of a paper in the hands of a stakeholder between the party in the action and a third party. Parry v. May, 1 M. & Rob. 279.

1. Robb v. Starkey, 2 Carr. & K. 143.

2. Harvey v. Michell, 2 M. & Rob. 356.

3. Harvey v. Michell, 2 M. & Rob. 356.

4. Greenleaf on Ev., § 560.

Notice served on the attorney is sufficient. Simington v. Kent, 8 Ala. 691; Brown v. Littlefield, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 454; Lagow v. Patterson, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 327.

It was held sufficient notice to permit copies of deeds to be given in evidence where the notice to produce the originals was served on defendant's attorney, who was proved to have had them in his possession as the attorney for another defendant in an action brought by the plaintiffs for a part of the same premises, although it was not proved that the original deeds were ever in the possession of the defendant. Den v. McAllister, 7 N. J. L. 46.

Though the party of record is but a nominal party, notice to the attorney in the suit is sufficient; notice to the real party is not necessary. Brown v. Littlefield, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 454; Lagow v. Patterson, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 327; Simington v. Kent, 8 Ala. 691.

ary. NOTICE TO PRODUCE PAPERS. When Necessary.

WHEN NECESSARY.—Notice to produce is an indispensable part to the introduction of secondary evidence of the contents of the instrument,¹ and the fact of the giving of the notice under the statute makes service of the party valid and binding for the intents and purposes as if the party personally. Simington v. Heywood, 8 Ala. 691.

Where testimony tended to prove a copy sought to be produced was in the hands of the real party in interest, although not a party to the action, it was held that under the statute the copy proved to have been taken was properly admitted. Simington v. Heywood, 20 Me.

Where a mortgage is sufficient for the production of the original, the mortgage secures, if the copy is given to the plaintiff, who has no interest in the note. Downer v. J. H. 338.

Where notice duly served on the party is not invalidated by a subsequent service of notice on his attorney. Hughes v. Budd, 8 D. P. C. 50.

Where notice served on a party's agent or attorney in penal actions is sufficient. Inter, 3 T. R. 306.

Where the attorney in a cause has died, notice to produce served on the attorney before the change of counsel. Doe d. Martin v. Martin, 1

Where an action and plea are joint, it is sufficient if notice to produce is given to the attorney of one of the defendants. Schnebly v. Brooks, 1 Am. L. J. 321.

When a party desires the possession of a paper for the purpose of using it in evidence, he must give notice to produce it. Bronson v. Kensey, 3 McLean (U. S.) 180.

In order to admit secondary evidence as to the contents of a paper in the adverse party's possession, notice to produce it must be given previous to the trial, although the adverse party admits that the paper is lost. Burlington Lumber Co. v. Whitebreast Coal & Min. Co., 66 Iowa 292.

This rule applies to letters. Ferguson v. Hemingway, 38 Mich. 159; Foster v. Newbrough, 58 N. Y. 481.

Where the necessary demand required to be made of a railroad company in order to entitle a party to recover under the Kansas railroad stock-killing law of 1874 was made in writing, it was held that the court erred in allowing a copy of the demand to be introduced in evidence without accounting for the nonproduction of the original, or giving notice to the company to produce it. Central Branch U. P. R. Co. v. Walters, 24 Kan. 504.

When Necessary. NOTICE TO PRODUCE PAPERS. When Necessary.

must be proved before such secondary evidence may be offered.¹

In an action brought by a bank against an endorser of a note discounted by the bank, the defendant was not allowed to give secondary evidence of the fact that it was the custom of the bank to reserve unlawful interest in discounting notes, where notice to produce the books of the bank had not been given. Bank of Utica v. Hillard, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 153.

A copy of an instrument cannot be given in evidence without proof of a previous notice to produce the original. Carland v. Cunningham, 37 Pa. St. 228.

A purchaser of personal property may establish his title to the property by parol evidence without putting his bill of parcels in evidence. If the adverse party desires to have the bill produced at the trial, he must give notice to produce it. Blood v. Harrington, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 552.

Secondary evidence is not admissible to prove that the plaintiff's name was on the voting list in an action against selectmen for not receiving his vote, without giving notice to produce the list. Harris v. Whitcomb, 4 Gray (Mass.) 433.

Where an action was brought on a promissory note, the complaint alleged that the note was given in part for the purchase of land, and that the plaintiff had given the defendant his bond for the conveyance of the land, and prayed for the enforcement of his lien by sale of the land to pay the note. Held, that it was error to give parol evidence of the sale of the land, as under the statute of frauds nothing but written evidence of a sale would be admissible, and that the bond ought to have been produced; or if notice had been given to produce it and it was not produced, then parol evidence of its contents would have been admissible. Farmer v. Simpson, 6 Tex. 303.

A letter-press copy of a letter cannot be introduced in evidence unless notice has been given the opposite party to produce the letter. Burlington Lumber Co. v. Whitebreast Coal & Min. Co., 66 Iowa 292; Cable v. Paine, 3 McCrary (U. S.) 168.

Deeds.—Parol evidence of the contents of a deed in the possession of the opposite party cannot be given unless notice to produce the original has been served. Gist v. McJunkin, 2 Rich. (S. Car.) 154.

Where notice to produce a deed was given to the defendant, and it was proved that the deed had been executed and delivered to the plaintiff's mother (the plaintiff being an infant) for safe-keeping, and that the defendant married the plaintiff's mother ten years afterwards, held sufficient to admit proof of the contents of the deed by secondary evidence. Bethal v. McCall, 3 Ala. 449.

Where it was shown that a deed was delivered to a plaintiff's ancestor, and this fact remained unexplained, held to be sufficient presumption that it was in his power to produce it, and that the defendant was entitled to prove its contents by parol after notice to produce. Newsom v. Davis, 20 Tex. 419.

In Massachusetts, a registry copy of a deed of land cannot be introduced in evidence against the grantee unless notice to produce the original has been given him. Com. v. Emery, 2 Gray (Mass.) 80; Bourne v. Boston, 2 Gray (Mass.) 494.

1. Weeks v. Lyon, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 530; Carland v. Cunningham, 37 Pa. St. 228; Patterson v. Linder, 14 Iowa 416; Horseman v. Todhunter, 12 Iowa 230; Kennedy v. Fowke, 5 Har. & J. (Md.) 63; Milliken v. Barr, 7 Pa. St. 23; Anderson Bridge Co. v. Applegate, 13 Ind. 339; Gaskell v. Morris, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 32; Holbrook v. Township Trustees, 22 Ill. 539.

Notice was given a plaintiff to produce at the trial certain letters written to him by the defendant. The letters were not produced, and the defendant, in laying a foundation for the admission of the copies, stated that they were mailed to the plaintiff, but on being cross-examined said, "I generally carried them to the office, but I cannot say that they were put in the office positively. I believe they were." It was held that the court made no error in excluding the copies. Phillips v. Scott, 43 Mo. 86.

Where an endorser brought an action against the drawer, it was held to be immaterial where the endorser neglected to produce his books for the purpose of showing that the endorsement was made after maturity, where no notice was given to him that he would be required to prove the consideration of the transfer, and where the notice was not in writing. Epler v. Funk, 8 Pa. St. 468.

If this is not done, the admission of secondary evidence objected to for this reason is ground for reversal.¹

IV. WHEN NOT NECESSARY.—The general rule which requires that a party shall have notice to produce a written instrument in his possession before its contents can be proved by secondary evidence, does not apply where, from the nature of the suit or prosecution or the form of the pleadings, he must know that he is charged with the possession of the instrument;² where it is necessary to Evidence showing that a demand was made before the commencement of the action that a certain written instrument should be delivered up, is not sufficient to let in parol evidence of its contents without notice to produce it is given, although the action was brought on such refusal. Muller v. Hoyt, 14 Tex. 49.

In Pennsylvania, where a party cannot be found after diligent enquiry, a copy of a paper may be given in evidence without notice to produce. Carland v. Cunningham, 37 Pa. St. 228.

The mere fact that a party, offering to prove by parol the contents of a mortgage of which he was not the proper custodian, did not know where the mortgage was at the time he made the offer, and had not given notice to the proper party to produce it, is not sufficient foundation for the admission of such proof. Horseman v. Todhunter, 12 Iowa 230. Nor is inconvenience an excuse for omitting this notice. Nor is the absence of the party from the State bound to give it. Carland v. Cunningham, 37 Pa. St. 228.

In an action of trover for a bond or note, parol evidence of the existence and contents of the instrument may be given, although no notice has been given to produce it. Rose v. Lewis, 10 Mich. 482; Scott v. Jones, 4 Taunt. 865; How v. Hall, 14 East 274; Hays v. Riddle, 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 248; McClellan v. Hertzog, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 154; Bissel v. Drake, 19 Johns. (N. Where papers are proper matters of defence, or where the adverse party must have understood that they must necessarily come in question at the trial, notice to produce them may well be dispensed with. Kellar v. Savage, 20 Me. 199; Lockett v. Clark, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 178.

The same rule applies in criminal cases, where a person is prosecuted for stealing an instrument. Rex v. Aikles, 1 Leach 436; or for stealing bank notes. Com. v. Messinger, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 273; s. c., 2 Am. Dec. 441; Ross v. Bruce, 1 Day (Conn.) 100. But the indictment must charge the accused with the possession of the instrument. Henderson v. State, 14 Tex. 503.

In State v. Gurnee, 14 Kan. 111, it was held that in criminal trials sufficient foundation is laid for the introduction of a copy of a paper which is competent evidence, where it was made out in duplicate and one copy lost and the other in the possession of the accused.

It was decided in Armitage v. State, 13 Ind. 441, where a person was indicted for forgery, for having in his possession counterfeit bank notes, that the prosecution could not prove the contents of the notes by parol without first giving the defendant notice to produce them; and in Williams v. State, 16 Ind. 461, it was decided that on the trial of an indictment for stealing a pocketbook containing bank notes, where the defendant was charged by one count with larceny and in another with robbery, the State could not give parol evidence of the contents of the bank notes without first giving the defence notice to produce them. But this case was overruled in McGinnis v. State, 24 Ind. 500, where the indictment was for larceny and the property stolen was bank notes. In this case the court expressly held, that where the possession of bank notes or other written instruments was charged by the indictment to be in the possession of the accused, parol evidence might be given of their contents without notice to produce; but in case of an indictment for forgery the court said: "These reasons apply, perhaps with equal force, in cases of prosecutions for forgery as well as those for larceny; but it is not our intention in this opinion to pass upon or question the correctness of the rule as laid down in Armitage v. State, 13 Ind. 441, as applicable to prosecutions for forgery, as there are reasons why a distinction between the two classes of cases in this rule of evidence may be drawn."

So, where the plaintiff is deprived of the written instrument upon which the suit is brought by a fraudulent and forcible act of the defendant. Gray v. Kernahan, 2 Mill Const. (S. Car.) 65; Morgan v. Jones, 24 Ga. 155; Neally v. Greenough, 25 N. H. 325.

A party may show by parol what was considered in making up an award, where the award is in the possession of the adverse party, without giving notice to produce it. The award is the best evidence of what it contains, but not of matters taken into consideration in making it up. Scott v. Baker, 37 Pa. St. 330.

Where the controversy on a second trial was whether the plaintiff had rightfully paid D, a third party, a certain sum of money in behalf of the defendant, and the plaintiff had stated, in his grounds of appeal from the first trial, that the defendant had given a bond to D, on which the plaintiff was surety, and that he paid it, it was held that this did not prevent the plaintiff from giving parol evidence of the point in controversy, although he had not given the defendant notice to produce the bond. Lott v. Macon, 2 Strobb. (S. Car.) 178.

Notice to produce is not necessary where the action is brought upon a written contract which is fully described in the complaint. Dana v. Conant, 30 Vt. 246.

Under this rule a defendant is always entitled to the production of all papers which formed any part of the contract under which the cause of action arose.

So also where it was alleged that the written instrument upon which the suit was brought was either lost, destroyed or in the possession of the defendant. Cross v. Williams, 72 Mo. 577.

Nor is it necessary to give notice where the action is brought to recover the amount of a forged bank note which had been returned to the defendant. Lockett v. Clark, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 178.

It was held that where the defendant in his answer charged the plaintiff that the original papers were in his possession, no notice to produce was necessary in order to give secondary evidence of their contents, and that it came within the rule that where, from the nature of the action, the party has notice that his adversary intends to charge him with the possession of the instrument, notice to produce is necessary. Hamilton v. Rice, 15 Tex. 382; Newsom v. Davis, 20 Tex. 419.

Where it was claimed by a defendant that he should be credited with a draft drawn by a third party on the plaintiff and in favor of the defendant, and was passed over to the plaintiff who promised to give the defendant credit for it, it was held that as the defendant did not give the plaintiff notice to produce it or make any allegation in his answer that the draft was thus passed over to the plaintiff, he could not give secondary evidence of its contents. Dean v. Border, 15 Tex. 298.

Where an answer denied that a duplicate of an agreement was ever made by the plaintiff, or that such copy was ever delivered to or received by the defendant (as charged in the complaint), it was held that if it was error to admit parol proof of the contents of the instrument without notice to produce, it was error without prejudice. Gilpin Co. Min. Co. v. Drake, 8 Colo. 586.

falsify the evidence of the other party;¹ or when a party makes a voluntary offer to produce it;² or where an instrument is proven to be lost;³ or is beyond the jurisdiction of the court, and cannot be presumed to be in the possession of the opposite party.⁴

A question arose upon the trial of an action for trespass, as to the plaintiff's rights under an alleged lease of the premises by the defendant corporation. The plaintiff offered evidence of a parol contract of lease. The defendant objected to this evidence on the ground that there was a record of such contract made by them at the time in the books of the corporation. The trial court sustained the objection on the ground that the plaintiff should have produced the record or given the defendant notice to do so before offering parol proof. On appeal this was held to be error. Brown v. Commissioners, 63 N. Car. 514.

Parol evidence of the contents of a deed was held properly allowed where the party to the suit made affidavit that the deed was in his possession, but it had been surreptitiously taken from him by the adverse party, and seen in the possession of his counsel. Morgan v. Jones, 24 Ga. 155.

Where it is necessary to give notice to produce the original deed before a copy of it can be read in evidence, proof of evasion of notice and avoidance of the production of the original may be sufficient to dispense with actual service of notice. Bright v. Pennywit, 21 Ark. 130.

Where a deed relates to a collateral circumstance, and an inference is deducible from its existence and execution, and not from its contents, parol evidence is admissible without notice to produce. Gist v. McJunkin, 2 Rich. (S. Car.) 154.

In Illinois, a certified copy of record of a deed is admissible in evidence without notice to the adverse party, provided the party offering it makes oath that the original is not in his possession or control. Bowman v. Wettig, 39 Ill. 416; Mariner v. Saunders, 10 Ill. 113; Ferguson v. Miles, 8 Ill. 358; s. c., 44 Am. Dec. 702.

In Missouri it may be introduced without the oath. Barton v. Murrain, 27 Mo. 235; s. c., 72 Am. Dec. 259; Avery v. Adams, 39 Mo. 603.

In North Carolina, under the act of 1846, a party may put in evidence a registered copy of a deed to the other party without giving notice to produce the original in the same manner as he could a copy of a deed to himself. Carson v. Smart, 12 Ired. (N. Car.) 369.

A copy of a title bond furnished by one party in his bill of particulars delivered to his opponent in an ejectment suit, according to the practice in such suits in the State of Mississippi, may be read in evidence against the party furnishing it without previous notice to produce the original.

Griffin v. Sheffield, 38 Miss. 359; s. c., 77 Am. Dec. 646.

1. As for example, in Story v. Patten, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 486, it was held that notice to produce an execution was not necessary in an action against a constable for not returning the process and paying over the money, the execution and judgment on which the execution issued being fully described in the declaration. See also Hardin v. Kretzinger, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 293; Hammond v. Hopping, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 505; People v. Holbrook, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 90; People v. Smith, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 63; *Wilson v. 2. Dwinell v. Larrabee, 38 Me. 464.

But if the party fails to find the paper on a search and makes no suggestion that he would be able to find it by having further time allowed him for that purpose, the basis for the introduction of the contents of the instrument is laid. Dwinell v. Larrabee, 38 Me. 464.

Where the maker of notes receives them by giving the notes of third persons in payment of his notes, and several years afterwards there is a controversy over the substituted notes, the presumption that the notes delivered up to the maker are either lost or otherwise cancelled is sufficient to let in parol proof of their contents without notice to produce the originals. Pond v. Lockwood, 8 Ala. 669.

4. Shepard v. Giddings, 22 Conn. 282; Cheatham v. Riddle, 8 Tex. 162.

It has been held where an instrument went into the possession of a person

And where a book or paper is not within the control of the parties and is out of the reach of the process of the court, and is evidently such a document as the party in possession of it would not willingly part with, it would seem that these circumstances ought to constitute a sufficient foundation for admitting secondary evidence of its contents. Such being the best evidence which the party could possibly produce, it ought, from necessity, to be received. At all events, he should be bound to go no farther than to show that the party in possession refused to deliver it,¹ or where an instrument relates to a collateral circumstance and an inference favorable to the party arises out of the fact of its execution and existence, and not out of its particular contents, parol evidence is admissible without notice to produce the original.² And on cross-examination, in order to test the credibility of a witness, the contents of a paper may be enquired into where it relates to an incidental and collateral matter and in nowise affects the merits of the controversy between the parties, although notice to produce it was not given.³ It is not necessary to give the adverse party notice to produce a notice in order to prove its contents.⁴

who left the State, and no evidence was given that it had been lost or destroyed, that giving notice to the opposite party to produce it at the trial was not sufficient grounds upon which to introduce secondary evidence of its contents. McCracken v. McCrary, 5 Jones (N. Car.) 399.

1. Bonner v. Home Ins. Co. 13 Wis. 677.

Where the counsel for the plaintiff and the party against whom an instrument had been produced found it, with some other papers not marked, filed in the court room when the trial had taken place. He took the lease and instead of returning it to the defendant to whom it belonged, he attached it to a dedimus and sent it to California, the residence of the witness whose testimony he wished to take to be read at the trial in the circuit court (to which the cause had been appealed). Of this he subsequently informed the defendant's counsel, stating at the same time that he had no doubt it would be back in time for trial. The commission was not returned at the time of the trial, and consequently the lease was not produced. Held that the circuit court properly admitted secondary evidence of its contents, and, under the circumstances, even very strict proof of that should not have been required. Mitchell v. Jacobs, 17 Ill., 235.

4. Morrow v. Commonwealth, 48 Pa. St. 305; Faribault v. Elv, 2 Dev. (N. Car.) 67; Christy v. Horne, 24 Mo. 242. In Eisenhart v. Slaymaker, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 153, GIBSON, J., said: "Every written notice is, for the best of reasons, to be proved by a duplicate original; for if it were otherwise, the notice to produce the original could be proved only in the same way as the original itself, and thus a fresh necessity would be constantly arising, ad infinitum, to prove notice of the preceding notice."

When a notice is sent by mail the address on the envelope is regarded as a portion of the notice, showing to whom it was directed. Williams v. German Mut. F. Ins. Co., 68 Ill. 387.

A notice to the endorser of a negotiable instrument may be given in evidence without notice to produce the notice.

Atwell v. Grant, 11 Md. 101; Central

When the maker of an instrument has torn a part of it off by violence, it will be presumed that he sought the paper, not to keep it as a valid instrument, but to avoid it, and the party holding the instrument is at liberty to produce the mutilated contract at the trial, and supply the part torn off by parol evidence without giving notice to produce it.¹ A mere memorandum containing a quantity of figures and calculations is not a contract, agreement or writing which can be proved by its production. It does not fall within the reason or rule of law requiring the production of documentary evidence, and as to a mere calculation of amounts any witness may testify if he has seen and remembers them.²

V. SUFFICIENCY AS TO CONTENTS.—The notice must be as explicit as possible, and should distinctly point out the papers required;³ but it is sufficiently specific if, under the circumstances, it fairly shows what particular papers are wanted.⁴ Notice once given applies to

The contents of a written notice to pay money may be proved by parol evidence with proof of notice to produce. Gaskell v. Morris, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 32.

2. Weaver v. Crocker, 49 Ill. 461; First Nat. Bank v. Priest, 50 Ill. 321; Fuller v. Hoyt, 14 Tex. 49.

At a settlement between two persons, one of them produced a paper which purported to contain a statement of the amounts and accounts and calculations in the settlement. This was shown to a third person who was present at the settlement and requested that he should see if the calculations were properly made. In a suit between the parties to the settlement it was held that the person to whom the paper was shown might testify as to his memory of the calculations of amounts the paper contained without notice being given to produce the paper. Weaver v. Crocker 49 Ill. 461.

Where a party sold property on commission through a third person and received the proceeds of the sale, and in response to an enquiry by the owner of the property he was shown a written account of the sales returned by the person who sold the property, it was held, in an action brought by the owner to recover the proceeds, that he might orally testify as to the amount appearing to be due him from the account of the sale shown him without giving the adverse party notice to produce it. First Nat. Bank v. Priest, 50 Ill. 321.

3. Thomas v. Hodgson, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 492.

A notice to produce should, besides the title of the cause, contain a particular description of the books, papers or documents required to be produced; and it is usual at the end of the notice to require the production of all other papers, books, documents, letters and writings whatsoever in the control of the party that contain any entry, memoranda or other matter that in any way relates to the matters in question in the case; and also to state that, in the default of producing it, secondary evidence of its contents may be given on the trial. Stalker v. Gaunt, 12 N. Y. Leg. Obs 124.

4. Walden v. Davison, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 65; s. c., 25 Am. Dec. 602; Bogart v. Brown, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 18; Frank v. Manny, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 92; Burke v. Laforge, 12 Cal. 403; Duvall v. Farmers' Bank, 2 Bland (Md.) 686.

Notice to produce a letter covers the envelope of the letter. United States v. Duff, 19 Blatchf. (U. S.) 9; 6 Fed. Rep. 45; Morris v. Hannen, Carr. & M. 29; Morris v. Hauser, 2 M. & Rob. 392; Jacob v. Lee, 2 M. & Rob. 33.

The notice does not describe the bill with perfect accuracy; but we think it impossible for the defendant to have doubted what bill of lumber was intended. It does not appear, nor is it suggested, that there was any other bill of lumber in which the plaintiff has any interest excepting the one the contents of which were proved at the trial. We think, therefore, the notice was sufficient and the parol testimony rightly admitted. Bemis v. Charles, 1 Met. (Mass.) 440.

A notice calling for "all letters received by you between 1837 and 1841, both inclusive, by and from the defendants, or either of them, during the time aforesaid, or by or to any person on their or your behalf, respectively," is sufficient. Morris v. Hannen, Carr. & M. 29; Morris v. Hauser, 2 M. & Rob. 392. Or in an action for labor a notice calling for "all accounts relating to the matter in question in this cause." Rogers v. Custance, 2 M. & Rob. Or a notice to produce a letter which refers to the enclosed account is sufficient. Engal v. Druce, 9 W. R. 536, C. P.

But a notice falling for "all letters, papers and documents, touching or concerning the bill of exchange mentioned in the declaration and the debt sought to be recovered," is too general. France v. Lucy, 1 R. & M. 341; Jones v. Edwards, M'Clel. & Y. 139.

Notice was given to a party to produce an original contract of partnership, of which a copy was annexed to the notice. (This was done for the purpose of proving a co-partnership between the party served with the notice and another person.) The party did not produce the original contract, and in order to prove its contents several witnesses were called and testified that this party had admitted that there was an original agreement in his possession, the terms of which corresponded with those contained in the copy annexed to the notice in every particular except one. The counsel for the party served with the notice objected to the admission of this testimony, and contended that, as the plaintiffs had in their notice set forth a copy of the document to be produced, ought in their evidence be confined literally to the terms of their copy. Held, that the accuracy and precision which is required in pleading cannot be necessary in a notice of this kind, and that there is a manifest difference between a notice to quit and a notice the only object of which is to inform the adverse party that he is required to produce a document. Bogart v. Brown, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 18.

Where a notice to produce books and papers is too extensive in range and, as to a part of it, too vague in description, the court, after holding the notice good in part and bad in part, may decline to require an immediate answer, and may continue the cause to give time to answer so much of the notice as has been judged sufficient. Parish v. Weed Sewing Machine Co., 79 Ga. 682.

A notice to produce "all papers appertaining to the co-partnership," includes any deed he may have making him a partner. Jones v. Parker, 20 N. H. 31.

A notice entitled in the wrong court, unless it misleads a party, may be considered a sufficient notice. Lawrence v. Clark, 14 M. & W. 250.

A notice entitled in the wrong action, and merely filed in the action that it was intended for, without proof of service on the party, raises no presumptions or inferences against the party to whom it was addressed. Alender v. Vestry of Trinity Church, 3 Gill (Md.) 166.

In an action brought by L and M, as assignees of D and E, a notice to produce a document entitled L and M, assignees of D and E and A, was held insufficient, although L and M were in fact assignees of D and E. Harvey v. Morgan, 2 Stark. 17.

Notice to the opposite party to produce at the trial papers relating to moneys received by him under the award of the commissioners under the Florida treaty, was held sufficiently specific, as they were described by their subject matter. Vass v. Mifflin, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 519.

Where the opposite party is required to produce his books on a particular subject, it is not necessary that the entries on those books should be stated in the notice. It has always been deemed sufficient to describe the paper or book required by expressing its general purport and to state its materiality to the case in some degree. United States v. Burr, 2 Burr's Trial 534.

So, when the cause was first tried before a justice and then removed to the common pleas. Wilson v. Gale, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 623.

But the rule that compels a party who receives and inspects a paper produced in response to a notice to put the paper in evidence, if material to the issue, is not extended to a new trial of the case unless notice is again given and the paper inspected. Ellison v. Cruser, 40 N. J. L. 444.

Notice given in court is not sufficient or reasonable notice, unless the instrument is in court at the time. Durkee v. Leland, 4 Vt. 612; Hastings v. Power, 1 Tyler (Vt.) 272; Barker v. Morris, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 121; Hammond v. Hopping, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 505; Lowell v. Flint, 20 Me. 401; Morrison v. Whiteside, 17 Md. 452; s. c., 79 Am. Dec. 661.

Where a party was notified at the bar, during the trial, to produce a receipt, and he lived not more than fifty yards from the court house, but objected to the notice for want of time, and insisted upon being indulged until the next day, it was held that it was not error in the court to consider his objection unreasonable, and to permit parol testimony to be given of the contents of the paper. Buckner v. Morris, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 121.

Where the paper is in court or so near the place where the court is sitting that it can be obtained without delaying the trial, and without material inconvenience to the party, a notice given after the trial has commenced is sufficient, and when, from the nature of the instrument, or from its connection with the cause, it may be fairly presumed to be in the possession of the party or his counsel in court, he ought affirmatively deny the fact, or the notice should be held good. Hammond v. Hopping, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 505.

If it is impossible to produce a paper between the time of giving notice and the trial, that fact should be made to appear. Burke v. Laforge, 12 Cal. 403.

Notice as to time must be reasonably sufficient to enable the party to produce the paper. Downer v. Button, 26 N. H. 338.

In Kerr v. McGuire, 28 N. Y. 486, it was held that the general rule of practice requiring a written notice to produce papers, had reference to the preliminary preparations for trial, and that the reason of the rule did not apply to a notice given in the presence and hearing of the court while the trial was in progress from day to day, and the materiality of the document was apparent, and each party was presumed to have present all papers bearing on the case. Kerr v. McGuire, 28 N. Y. 446.

In Morrison v. Whiteside, 17 Md.

452; s. c., 79 Am. Dec. 661, the rule was laid down as follows, viz: The general rule is that the party desiring the production of an original entry or paper has the right to demand it at any time before the trial is concluded, and the refusal to present the one or the other gives the demandant the right to offer secondary evidence of the contents. This rule is subject to the exception that if the paper is shown to be in a place too remote from that of the trial that it cannot be produced at the trial between the time when the notice is given and the conclusion of the evidence, such notice will not be deemed sufficient to authorize the party giving the notice to offer secondary evidence of its contents.

When Served in Time.—In Cody v. Hough, 20 Ill. 443, it was held that it was not necessarily error to admit secondary evidence where the notice was given to counsel the day before the trial, and the paper was in the possession of the party himself, who was eighty miles away and who was not present at the trial, it not appearing that by means of the telegraph or railroad the paper might not have been produced in time.

In Jackson v. Marsh, 1 Cal. Cas. (N. Y.) 153, it was held that a notice of nine days was enough to produce a paper one hundred and eighty miles away. In Barker v. Barker, 14 Wis. 131, secondary evidence was held to have been properly received on the ground that the court was justified in assuming from the facts that the party had the paper with him in court. In State v. Hester, 2 Jones (N. Car.) 83, notice to a prisoner in close custody was held sufficient, having been given four days before his trial, and his residence being four miles away.

In Divers v. Fulton, 8 Gill & J. (Md.) 202, notice served on the attorney two days before the trial was held sufficient, though the attorney did not see his client until the day before the trial. In Jefford v. Ringgold, 6 Ala. 544, a notice served several days before trial was held sufficient, though the party resided out of the State. In Shreve v. Dulaney, 1 Cranch (C. C.) 499, a notice given the evening before the trial was held sufficient; and so in United States v. Duff, 6 Fed. Rep. 45.

In Warner v. Campbell, 26 Ill. 282, a notice served on the attorney two days before the trial was held sufficient. In McDonald v. Carson, 95 N. Car.

378, it was adjudged that "due notice" under the North Carolina statute meant time sufficient to allow the party to have the document ready to produce when called for.

In Drabble v. Donner, 1 Carr. & P. 188, four days' notice was held sufficient. In Bryan v. Wagstaff, 8 D. & R. 208, notice served on the attorney the evening before the trial was adjudged good, though the party was abroad, the circumstances leading to the presumption that the attorney was in possession of the paper. In Rowlandson v. Wainwright, 5 Ald. & E. 520, fourteen days' notice was held sufficient, and in Slurne v. Jeffres, 2 Carr. & K. 442, notice given the evening before the trial was adjudged sufficient, the parties being in the town.

When Not Served in Time.—In De Witt v. Prescott, 51 Mich. 298, the court said that a notice which allowed time to the attorney to communicate with his client only by telegraph, was insufficient, in the absence of a showing of a peculiar exigency. In Utica Ins. Co. v. Cadwell, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 296, it was held that neither the party nor his attorney was bound to leave court during the trial and go for papers or books to a distance. So in Gorham v. Gale, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 739; s. c., 7 Am. Dec. 549.

In Bushnell v. Bishop Hill Colony, 28 Ill. 204, it was adjudged that two days' notice was not sufficient where the paper was in another State. In Loibel v. Strampfer, 16 L. T., N. S. 720, four days' notice to procure from Vienna a letter for use in a London trial was held insufficient.

Notice served on the attorney in a cause the day before trial, and at a distance from the place of business, was held bad in Hughes v. Budd, 8 D. P. C. 315; 4 Jur. 150. Notice served on Sunday was held bad in Hughes v. Budd, 8 D. P. C. 315.

Notice to produce letters in the county served in London, on the day of the trial in London, was held too late in Coombs v. Bristol etc. R. Co. 1 F. & F. 206. Notice served in town on the attorney on the evening before trial, too late for the attorney to communicate with his client, was held too late in Bryne v. Harvey, 2 M. & Rob. 89.

Notice served on an attorney at five o'clock on the commission day of the assizes was held insufficient, the attorney having left home for the assize town, matter resting largely in the discretion of the court.¹ If the instrument is in court, notice previous to the trial need not have been given, a demand made at the trial being sufficient. There are authorities, most of them old English authorities, holding that the fact that the instrument is in court does not preclude the necessity of a previous formal notice, in order that an opportunity to furnish testimony to support or impeach the instrument may be afforded;² but this is not the law at present.³ Where there is an objection to the sufficiency of a notice, in point of time, and the objection is overruled, if it is intended to insist upon the objection, the party notified must decline to produce the paper and except to the admission of secondary evidence of its contents. For by producing the paper at the trial, he will be deemed to have waived objection to the sufficiency of the notice.⁴

VII. EFFECT OF PRODUCING PAPERS PURSUANT TO NOTICE.—A paper is not made evidence simply by being produced pursuant to a notice; whether it becomes evidence, must be determined from its legal bearing upon the subject matter of the suit.⁵ If the party nine miles distant, and the party who served the notice having refused to furnish the attorney with a conveyance. George v. Thompson, 4 D. P. C. 656. Notice served on an attorney at seven P. M. of the day before trial to produce a tradesman's book was held too late. Atkins v. Meredith, 4 D. P. C. 658. When an attorney's client was absent in Scotland, notice served on Saturday at nine P. M. to produce books at the trial in London on Wednesday was held too late. Vice v. Anson, 3 Carr. & P. 19; M. & M. 96. Also notice served on Saturday to produce papers at the trial of the cause on the following Monday. Houseman v. Roberts, 5 Carr. & P. 394. Where notice was served on the defendant's attorney in Essex on Saturday, the commission day of the assize being Monday, and the attorney went to London and brought the deeds, and on Monday another notice was served to produce another deed, and the attorney offered to go and bring it if the party who served the notice would pay the expense of sending for it, and no offer was made to do this, at the trial on Thursday it was held that the party giving the notice was not entitled to give secondary evidence of the contents of the last mentioned deed. Doe d. Curtis v. Spity, 3 Barn. & Ad. 182. A notice served on the defendant's attorney at his residence twenty miles from the place of trial at 8 P. M. the day before the trial, the defendant residing in the same town as the attorney, but not being at home on that evening until twelve o'clock, was held too late. Howard v. Williams, 9 M. & W. 725; 1 D. U. S. 877; 6 Jur. 585.

Papers produced in response to a call in a complaint become evidence in calling for it offers it in evidence, he must prove it in the same manner as if he had produced it himself, unless the party producing it is a party to it, or claims a beneficial interest under it.¹ But if it is competent and is put in evidence, the party so using it may not impeach it.² Although a party calls for the production of a paper, he is not obliged to put it in evidence;³ but if he examines it, he takes it as testimony, and it becomes evidence for both parties.⁴ But the party calling for the paper will not be the case, but not necessarily conclusive evidence of the facts sought to be established by them. Tarleton v. Goldtwaite, 23 Ala. 346; s. c., 58 Am. Dec. 297.

1. Rhoades v. Selin, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 715. Where a party who produces a deed or instrument is a party to it prima facie, it is sufficient proof of its execution. Betts v. Badger, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 223; s. c., 7 Am. Dec. 309; McPherson v. Rathbone, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 216. And if the party producing it is a party to the instrument, or claims a beneficial interest under it, it is not necessary for the party who called for it to prove its execution; but in other cases its execution must be regularly proved. Jackson v. Kingsley, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 158; Campbell v. Roberts, 66 Ga. 733. And where the instrument is mutilated (and there is no evidence that the party producing it mutilated it) it does not absolve the party, who called for it, from the necessity of proving the handwriting of the party who executed it. Jackson v. Kingsley, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 158.

Where a party, under notice to produce a deed, produced a copy and claimed under it, it was held that, as to him, no proof of its correctness or of its execution was necessary. Herring v. Rogers, 30 Ga. 615.

A deed produced by the opposite party on notice to produce may be read without further proof of its execution. Frantz v. Harman, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 473. And where an agreement between the parties to an action is produced by the defendant on notice from the plaintiff, it is not necessary to prove the plaintiff's signature to the instrument in order to read it to the jury. Balliet v. Fink, 28 Pa. St. 266.

2. Hulbert v. Hammond, 41 Mich. 343. But where an account is produced pursuant to a notice, the mere fact that it is produced and read to the jury is not conclusive of its correctness. Gracy v. Bailee, 16 S. & R. (Pa.) 126.

4. This is the English rule, and the rule maintained by most American courts. In support of the rule, see 1 Tidd's Practice 804; Calvert v. Flower, 7 C. & P. 386; Wharam v. Routledge, 5 Esp. 235; Blake v. Russ, 33 Me. 360; Penobscot Boom Co. v. Lamson, 4 Shep. (Me.) 224; Anderson v. Root, 8 S. & M. (Miss.) 362; Randel v. Chesapeake etc. Canal Co., 1 Harr. Thompson*, 45 N. H. 113.

In discussing this question in Com. v. Davidson, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 33, DEWEY, J., says: "Merely calling for books, although in answer to such call they are produced, will not make them evidence. It would not by the English rule, as stated in 1 Phill. on Ev. 440, where it is said, 'if one party calls for books in possession of another, but declines to use them when produced, the mere calling for them will not make them evidence; but if the party calling for them inspects them, he thereby does make them evidence, although he does not introduce them.' The result of the examination of the cases seems to be—

1. That all the authorities agree that mere calling for the books is not enough to make them evidence.
2. That whether calling for the books of the opposite party, and inspecting them, and doing nothing more, makes the allowed to waive the reading of the paper in evidence, and give secondary evidence of its contents.¹ Nor can he, after the paper has been produced and its execution shown, place it in the hands of a witness for further identification, and to explain the circumstances attending its execution. If he does anything with it, he must put it in evidence.² Where a paper produced pursuant to a notice is different from the one called for, the party is not precluded from showing this, and from proving the contents of the one withheld.³ But if the paper produced is the one called for and the party calling for it does not put it in evidence, the party who produced it may read it in evidence, without proving its execution.⁴

VIII. EFFECT OF NOT PRODUCING PAPERS AFTER NOTICE HAS BEEN GIVEN.—Where reasonable notice has been given a party to produce at the trial a paper or book in his possession, and he fails or refuses to produce it, the party giving the notice may, after proving its existence, and that reasonable notice has been given, give secondary evidence of its contents,⁵ and in doing so may read a counter-book evidence, is a mooted point. 3. That the books when produced upon notice, if inspected by the party calling for them, and actually used as evidence by him, are thereby made evidence for the other party."

Where books are produced pursuant to a notice, and entries in them are read by the party who called for them, the party who produced them may read other entries that are necessarily with those read by the opposite party, provided they were made prior to the commencement of the suit. Withers v. Gillespy, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 10; Boggs v. Miles, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 407.

When a defendant produces books in response to a notice from the plaintiff, he cannot use them to prove a set-off of which he has not given notice. Lahemer v. Hogdon, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 514.

It is unimportant when books have been produced on notice by the opposite party that the party who produced them has been allowed to examine a witness who stated that he had examined them and could find in them no entry of a certain note and check which were the subject of the controversy. Coote v. Bank of United States, 3 Cranch (C. C.) 95.

When books and papers are brought in under a notice to produce them, they must be furnished unconditionally to be used as evidence or not as the party calling for them may see fit, or else parol evidence of their contents is competent. Carr v. Gale, 3 Woodb. & M. (U. S.) 38.

1. Stitt v. Huidekoper, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 384.

2. Hotchkiss v. Germania F. Ins. Co., 5 Hun (N. Y.) 90.

3. Gilmore v. Whitcher, 6 Allen (Mass.) 113.

Where a paper produced in response to a notice to produce does not answer the description of the one called for in all particulars, and the party producing it states to the court that he had not in his possession such an instrument as that described in the notice, and that the only instrument of writing he had received from the opposite party, or had in his possession similar to the one described in the notice, was one which he there produced to the court, such statement is not evidence for the jury to consider. Anderson v. Root, 16 Miss. 362.

Where the plaintiffs gave the claimant notice to produce a certain invoice, it was held that the claimant could not require the plaintiffs to state whether they would take it with or without a letter attached to it, which the plaintiffs never had seen, but that the claimant must produce the invoice without including the letter. *United States v. The contents of a paper may be established by slight secondary evidence as against a party who refuses to produce the original after notice, because it is in his power to remove all doubts as to its contents by producing the paper. Eastman v. Amoskeag Co., 44 N. H. 143; s. c., 82 Am. Dec. 201.

Parol evidence of a paper will be admitted when there is a strong presumption raised by the evidence that it is either destroyed or in the possession of the opposite party. 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 446.

The records of a manufacturing corporation are the best evidence that its officers have authority to bind the corporation by contract. But when such a corporation is a defendant and refuses to produce the records, on notice, the plaintiff may give other evidence of the authority. Narragansett Bank v. Atlantic Silk Co., 3 Met. (Mass.) 282.

Criminal Cases.—The rule of admitting secondary evidence of the contents of papers in the possession of the adverse party after notice to produce them has been given, is the same in criminal as well as in civil cases. State v. Kimbrough, 2 Dev. (N. Car.) 431.

A party declining to produce a paper ought simply to state that he does not produce it. He should not enter into a statement of the reasons why he does not produce it. Laxton v. Reynolds, 18 Jur. 963.

It was held to be sufficient evidence of the sending of a letter, to warrant the admission of a copy in evidence where it had not been produced after notice, that the party proved by his clerk that he copied the letter in a letter book; that it was his universal custom to deposit the letters thus copied in the postoffice, and that he seldom handed them back, but that he could not remember that he sent the letter. Thalhimer v. Brinckerhoff, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 90.

A copy of a deed was not admitted in evidence after notice to produce had been served to produce the original, there being no proof of the full execution of the original. Lambert v. Lambert, 11 Ired. (N. Car.) 162.

Notice to produce a deed was given to one on trial for its forgery. It was not produced, and the party who gave the notice proved by the clerk of the county that the defendant handed him a deed for record and made arrangements for the payment of his fees, and that he returned it to the defendant. The copy he produced was taken from the records. Held, that the copy was admissible in evidence. Henderson v. State, 14 Tex. 503.

Where each party held a part of a charter party the court refused to require the plaintiff to produce the part he held without having previous notice. Sampson v. Johnson, 2 Cranch (C. C.) 107.

A plaintiff, for the purpose of proving a co-partnership between the defendant and another person, gave no-parol evidence of its contents.¹ All inferences from such secondary evidence will be taken most strongly against the party refusing to produce;² and if the secondary evidence is vague, imperfect and uncertain as to dates, amounts, boundaries, etc., every intendment and presumption are against the party who might remove all doubt by producing the higher evidence.³ But the refusal raises no presumption in itself that if the documents were produced they would establish the fact which the party giving the notice alleges that they would prove; nor does it raise any presumption, suspicion, or imputation to the discredit of the tice to the defendant to produce an original contract of partnership, of which a copy was annexed to the notice. The defendant did not produce the original contract, but offered in evidence the copy annexed to the notice, and contended that, as the plaintiff had represented it to be a true copy, and in another suit between the two defendants, which the plaintiffs were permitted to defend, had made affidavit that it was in their belief a true copy, it ought to be received against them. Held, that the defendant could not give secondary evidence of the contract, as he had the original in his possession and refused to produce it. Bogart v. Brown, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 18.

On the hearing of a motion on affidavits, if a copy of a deed under the control of the party relying upon it, to which there is a subscribing witness, is attached to an affidavit, and the party presenting the affidavit refuses to produce the original deed and offered no excuse for its nonproduction, the copy is entitled to no weight as evidence, and the refusal under these circumstances tends strongly to weaken the statements in the affidavit relating to it. Leese v. Clark, 29 Cal. 665.

A life insurance company contracted to assume all the risks of another company, and issued to a policy holder one of its own policies, upon the surrendering of his policy. Upon the death of the person insured, suit was brought against the company to recover the insurance, and notice was given the defendant to produce the contract between itself and the company whose risks it assumed. The defendants refused to produce this contract. Parol evidence was given that a contract was made between the two companies concerning the assumption by the defendant of all the outstanding risks of the other company. Held, that the defendant, by refusing to produce the contract, incurred the penalty of having all inferences from the testimony taken most strongly against it, and that it might be inferred from the evidence and from the fact that it issued a policy to the plaintiff, with the recitals it contained, that under the contract it actually assumed all outstanding risks of the other company. *Cahen v. party, except in the case of spoliation or equivalent suppression when the rule is that omnia præsumentur contra spoliatores.¹ Where it is apparent that books or papers in one's possession would establish facts, whereof the burden of proof is on him, his refusal to produce and attempt to establish such facts by other evidence raises a strong presumption that the books or papers, if produced, would operate against him.² But some general evidence of such parts of their contents as are applicable to the case must first be given before any foundation is laid for any inference or intendment on account of their nonproduction.³ Where a party parts with the possession of a document after notice given him to produce it, he should apprise his adversary, so that he may know where to look for it. If it does not appear by what means it left his possession, it will, for the purposes of the notice, be considered as under his control and in his possession.⁴ After a party has refused to produce a paper in his possession, and his adversary has proved its contents by secondary evidence, the party will not be permitted to contradict this secondary evidence by secondary evidence;⁵ or by putting the paper itself in evidence.⁶

I. DEFINITION.—Novation is the substitution of a new obligation for an existing one. Novation is made: 1. By the substitution of a new obligation between the same parties with intent to extinguish the old obligation; 2. By the substitution of a new debtor in place of the old one, with intent to release the latter; or, 3. By a substitution of a new creditor in place of the old one, with intent to transfer the rights of the latter to the former. Novation is made by contract, and is subject to all the rules concerning contracts in general.¹

1. This definition is the language of the Civil Code of California which seems to state the law accurately in §§ 1530 to 1532. See also Civil Code of Dakota, § 863. The Civil Code of Louisiana states the principles of novation so fully that its provisions are added (arts. 2185-2194):

Art. 2185—Novation is a contract consisting of two stipulations; one to extinguish an existing obligation, the other to substitute a new one in its place.

Art. 2186—To constitute a novation, there must be, at the time it is made, a valid obligation on which it can operate; if the first obligation, which it is intended to replace by the new one, be void, or, if there be no such obligation, then the new obligation is of no effect.

Art. 2187—The pre-existent obligation must be extinguished, otherwise there is no novation; if it be only modified in some parts, and any stipulation of the original obligation be suffered to remain, it is no novation.

Art. 2188—All kinds of legal obligations are subject to novation.

Art. 2189—Novation takes place in three ways: 1. When a creditor connew debt to his creditor, which is substituted to the old one and extinguished.

90—Novation can be made when a new debtor is substituted for the old one, who is discharged by the effect of a new contract.

91—Novation, by the effect of a new contract, a new creditor is substituted for the old one, with regard to whom the debt is discharged.

92—Novation can be made between persons capable of contracting; it is presumed; the intention to novate must clearly result from the contract, or by a full discharge of the original debt.

93—Novation by the substitution of a new debtor may take place without the concurrence of the former creditor.

94—The delegation by which a creditor gives to the debtor another creditor obliges himself toward such creditor does not operate as a novation, unless the creditor has expressly declared that he intends to discharge his debt by the delegation.

95—The creditor who has discharged the debtor by whom a delegation has been made, has no recourse against the debtor, if the person delegated becomes insolvent, unless that person has an express reservation to the contrary, or unless the delegated person is in a state of open failure or bankruptcy at the time of the delegation.

96—The mere indication made by a person who is to pay for another does not operate as a novation.

The same is to be observed where an indication made by the debtor for a person who is to receive for him the term novation," says Parsons. It has not been much used in American law, but may be found in English cases; and the thing which constitutes this form of contract, may be found in many cases, both in England and in this country.

"A novation is a contract whereby a debtor is discharged from his liability to his creditor, by contracting an obligation in favor of a new creditor in place of his original creditor. If A owes B and B owes C; at the request of C, B orders A to pay his debt to C. A consents, and B is discharged from all obligation to him. B then contracts a new obligation to C, and his original obligation to B is at an end. In the civil law, any new contract made for the purpose and with the effect of dissolving an existing contract was regarded as a novation, and in the above case the civil law would recognize two sorts of contracts of novation—the contract by which A was discharged from his liability to B by contracting a new obligation to C, and the novation by which B would be discharged from his obligation to C by procuring A as a new debtor. This distinction has not been preserved in the common law." 1 Parsons Contr. (7th ed.) *217.

Compare LORD JUSTICE JAMES' remarks in Grain's Case, L. R., 1 Ch. Div. 332, who says: "Possibly the deeds were not sufficiently considered in some former cases in which the thing was treated as a mere question of 'novation,' a word which was unfortunately introduced into these cases, and which has led to a considerable amount of expense, which must fall upon some of those who are concerned."

Novation, in its strict sense, has been defined as follows: "Novation is the substitution of a new obligation for an old one, which is thereby extinguished. . . . Where there is a substitution of a new contract for an old one, the new contract must be a valid one upon which the creditor can have his remedy." Guichard v. Brande, 57 Wis. 534.

Novation means that, there being a contract in existence, some new contract is substituted for it, either between the same parties (for that might be), or between different parties—the consideration mutually being the discharge of the old contract. A common instance is in partnership cases when the members of the new firm take over the liabilities of the old firm. Per SELBORNE, L. C. Scarf v. Jardine, 7 L. R., App. Cas. 361; 51 L. J., Q. B. Div. 612; 47 L. T., N. S. 258; 30 W. R. 893.

"The facts testified to tended to make out a case of novation. Weller was indebted to the plaintiffs. Defendants were indebted to Weller. By Weller's request, defendants promised to pay the one hundred dollars, which they owed Weller, to plaintiffs instead of to Weller. Plaintiffs relinquished their claim upon Weller in consideration of defendant's promise to them, and defendant charged the amount to Weller on his books. Such a transaction is valid and rests on a sufficient consideration." Mulcrone v. American Lumber Co., 55 Mich. 622; Tinan v. Babcock, 58 Mich. 301.

II. REQUISITES OF NOVATION.—In order to constitute a novation of a contract, in its strict sense, the following essential elements must co-exist :

1. Parties.—The parties must be legally capable of contracting; hence, minors, married women (except by statute), etc., cannot make a novation.¹

2. Validity of Prior Obligation.—The previous obligation of which novation is sought must be a valid one.²

3. Extinguishment of Prior Obligation.—The original agreement of which novation is sought must be absolutely extinguished, and the new agreement substituted for it.³

"A novation under the rules of the civil law, whence the term has been introduced into the modern nomenclature of our common-law jurisprudence, was a mode of extinguishing one obligation by another—the substitution, not of a new paper or note, but of a new obligation, in lieu of an old one, the effect of which was to pay, discharge or otherwise dissolve it." McDonnell v. Alabama Gold L. Ins. Co., 85 Ala. 401; McClellan v. Robe, 93 Ind. 298; Parsons v. Tillman, 95 Ind. 452; Foster v. Paine, 63 Iowa 85; Adams v. Power, 48 Miss. 451.

Civil Law.—By the civil law, a novation arose when any new contract was entered into with the intent to dissolve the former engagement, or a new debt was substituted for an old one. The old contract or debt was held to be extinguished by the new one contracted in its stead; whence a novation was included by civilians amongst the different modes in which obligations were extinguished and discharged. Inst. lib. 3, tit. 30, De Novatione; Cod., lib. 8, tit. 42, § 8; Dig., lib. 46, tit. 2, De Novationibus.

"Another kind of novation is that which takes place by the intervention of a new debtor, where another person becomes debtor in my stead, and is accepted by the creditor who, thereupon, discharges me from it. The person thus rendering himself debtor to another, who is in consequence discharged, is called expromisor, and this kind of novation is called ex promissio." Pothier Contr., pt. 3, c. 2, art. 1.

Novation is fully discussed by various German writers on the Civil Law: Gneist, Die Formellen Verträge (1845); Fein, Beiträge zu der Lehre von der Novation and Delegation (1855); Kniess, Einfluss der bedingten Novation auf die ursprüngliche Obligation (1860); Römer, Die bedingte Novation (1863); Salpius, Novation and Delegation (1864); Salkauski, Zur Lehre von der Novation (1866).

1. "The consent which the creditor gives to the novation of the debt being equivalent, so far as regards the extinction of the debt, to a payment of it, it follows that only those to whom a valid payment may be made can make a novation of the debt. And for this reason those persons who were under legal inability, minors, married women, etc., cannot make a novation; and apply to this principle of the common law, that guardians, trustees, administrators and executors, cannot change the character of the trust funds held by them, without an order from a court of chancery jurisdiction, they, too, it would seem, should not be allowed to make a novation of an old debt for a new one. Scott v. Atchison, 36 Tex. 76; Conquest's Case, L. R., 1 Ch. Div. 334; Clark v. Billings, 59 Ind. 508; Spycher v. Werner, 74 Wis. 456.

4. Consideration.—This extinguishment of the original obligation constitutes the consideration for the new one.¹

v. Gray, 2 Hen. & M. (Va.) 603; Styron v. Bell, 8 Jones L. (N. Car.) 222; Jones v. Ballard, 2 Const. (S. Car.) 113; Stewart v. Campbell, 58 Me. 439; s. c., 4 Am. Rep. 296; *McLaren v. In Wharton v. Walker, 4 B. & C. 164. BAYLEY, J., said: "If, by agreement between the three parties, the plaintiff had undertaken to look to the defendant and not to his original debtor, that would have been binding, and the plaintiff might have maintained an action on the agreement; but in order to give him that right of action, there must have been an extinguishment of the intermediate debt."

"Novation means simply the substitution of one debtor by mutual agreement for another. It is a necessary incident of the transaction that the old debt shall have been discharged by the new arrangement. The discharge of the old debt must be contemporaneous with, and result from the consummation of the arrangement with the new debtor." Kelso v. Fleming, 104 Ind. 180.

In this case the purchaser of real estate agreed to assume a mortgage debt upon the land. Held there was no novation even though the holder of the note subsequently agreed to accept the purchaser as his debtor and release the maker of the note.

To constitute a novation of parties there must be an extinguishment of the old debt by a mutual agreement between all parties, whereby it becomes the obligation of a new debtor. "The discharge of the old debt must be contemporaneous with and result from the consummation of a new arrangement with the new debtor." Cornwell v. Megins, 39 Minn. 407.

"In every novation there are four essential requisites; first, a previous valid obligation; second, the agreement of all the parties to the new contract; third, the extinguishment of the old contract; and, fourth, the validity of the new one." Clark v. Billings, 59 Ind. 508.

In an action to recover a debt of 500*l.*, a plea as to 339*l.*, that before action the plaintiff was indebted to S. in 339*l.*; that the defendant, at the request of the plaintiff, agreed with S. to pay him the 339*l.*, and S. agreed to accept the defendant as his debtor instead of the plaintiff, for that sum; and that the defendant was still liable to pay that sum to S., is no answer to the plaintiff's claim, inasmuch as the plea does not show that the plaintiff's liability to S. was discharged. Cochrane v. Green, 9 C. B., N. S. 448; 30 L. J., C. P. 97; 9 W. R. 124; 3 L. T., N. S. 475. But see Middleton v. Pollock, 44 L. J. Ch. 584.

A debtor's promise to pay a note given by his creditor to a third party, and thus pay his own debt, does not release the debtor from his own debt, and is no defence to a suit on it unless he can show that he has paid the debt assumed. Irwin v. Atkins, 7 Ill. App. 17.

The new promise must be clear—mere loose statements are not enough. In re Sullenberger, 72 Cal. 549.

1. "An agreement for the substitution of one debtor for another is void unless it has sufficient consideration. If C, the creditor, for instance, simply says, 'I agree to take S (the substitute) in place of O (the original debtor), this is void; and so if S simply says, 'I agree to take O's place and become debtor to C,' this, without a consideration, does not bind S. But it is not necessary that such a consideration should in any degree be proportional to the interest involved. The adequacy of the consideration is a question the courts do not undertake to determine. It is enough if the promisor makes the promise on which he is charged as a compensation for some surrender, no matter how slight, by the promisee. Thus if C, the original creditor, says to the substitute, 'If you will take his place, I will release D,' the original debtor, this binds C; and if S, the substitute says to C, 'If you will release D, I will take his place,' this is a sufficient consideration so far as concerns S. The extinction of intermediate original liabilities is in itself a sufficient consideration to sustain the new contract, by which the parties to the reconstructed contract become bound to each other in original privity. C, the creditor, suffers detriment by surrendering D, the original debtor. S says, 'If you will submit to this contract by letting D go, I will take his place.' This detriment to E is a sufficient consideration for S's promise to C. An extension of time also may be a consideration for the substitution of a new security. The creditor suffers the detriment of a postponement of payment, and in consideration a better secured note is given him." 2 Whart. Cont., § 858.

"The consideration appears in the release of one party and the substitution of another." Bacon v. Daniel, 37 Ohio St. 279; Barringer v. Warden, 12 Cal. 311.

Struble v. Hake, 14 Bradw. (Ill.) 546 ("Discharge of the old debt"). "The plaintiff in a suit on the new contract must prove the release of the intermediate, as that is the consideration for the promise of the defendant." Gyle v. Shoemaker, 23 Cal. 538; Underwood v. Lovelace, 61 Ala. 155; Delph v. Bartholomay Brewing Co., 123 Pa. St. 42.

D was indebted to F for slaves bought of him, and F owed T the same amount. By agreement among the parties, D gave his note to T. Held, that this was a novation. The debts due by D to F and by F to T were extinguished by the transaction, and the consideration of the new contract being, on the part of D, the satisfaction of his debt to F, he could not avoid payment of the note on the ground that the consideration thereof was a slave. Dever v. Akin, 40 Ga. 423; Gresham v. Morrow, 40 Ga. 487.

"Coming to us through the civil law, three kinds of novation are recognized: First, When the debtor and creditor remain the same, but a new debt takes the place of the old one. Second, Where the debt remains the same, but a new debtor is substituted. Third, Where the debt and debtor remain, but a new creditor is substituted. In each of these cases the extinguishment of the old debt constitutes the consideration for the new obligation, and has always been held to be sufficient." Parsons v. Tillman, 95 Ind. 452.

Here a firm became indebted to one of its members and gave notes. These notes were surrendered and new notes substituted payable to the daughter of the creditor partner. Held there was a novation of the third class here. LORD TENTERDEN, C. J., in Fairlie v. Denton, 8 B. & C. 395 says: "It has been held that where it has been admitted and agreed beyond dispute that a defined and ascertained sum is due from A to B, and that a larger sum is due from C to A, and the three agree that C shall be B's debtor, instead of A, and C promises to pay B the amount owing to him by A, an action will lie by B against C."

Where the original debtor does not assent to the novation, a willingness by the creditor to release him is no consideration. Johnson v. Rumsey, 28 Minn. 531.

W gave an order to the plaintiff for all that was due him on the defendants, and it was accepted by them. Held, that the payee could maintain an action in his own name, and that the giving of the order by W, the receiving and presenting by the plaintiff and the acceptance by the defendants constituted a novation, the agreement of each party was a consideration for the agreements of the others. W agreed to the delegation; the plaintiff agreed to be substituted as payee, and the defendant agreed to pay the plaintiff. Bacon v. Bates, 53 Vt. 30.

"There is no difference between a debtor promising to pay his creditor directly so much money which he owes him, and promising his creditor to pay a third person the same sum by agreement between the three. The last promisor is paying his own debt and creating his own obligation, not assuming another's. This has been often decided, and is too obvious to require authority or further illustration to make the proposition evident. Moreover, the promise to pay the six hundred dollars is averred to be a promise made to plaintiff, in consideration of plaintiff's discharge of Woolsey, his original debtor; and this is a sufficient consideration to support a promise made directly from promisor to promisee." Barringer v. Warden, 12 Cal. 311.

Where the declaration alleged that J. S., being indebted to the plaintiff, made and delivered to him an order in writing, directed to the defendant, to deliver to the plaintiff or bearer a certain quantity of wood; and that the defendant, being indebted to J. S., in consideration thereof, accepted said order and promised to deliver the wood, it was held on demurrer that the defendant's promise to deliver the wood was without consideration. Ford v. Adams, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 349.

5. Assent of Parties.—All the parties, not only to the new contract, but also to the one for which the new contract is substituted, must consent to the novation; the parties to the original contract must consent in order to have that extinguished, and the parties to the new contract in order to have a valid obligation substituted for the old.¹

1. "It stands to reason that the substitution of a new contract in place of an old requires the assent of all the parties to the old contract, and of all the parties to the new contract. Unless all the parties to the old contract consent, it cannot be rescinded; unless all the parties to the new contract consent, it cannot be created."

Defendant was indebted to T for building a house, and agreed to pay the amount of the debt to the plaintiffs, in consideration of the release of the contract on the house. The plaintiffs were informed of this agreement by T, and requested payment of the defendant, who refused until the job was finished.

The defendant obtained a release of all liability to T, and it was held that the plaintiffs could not then recover from the defendant. Wood v. Moriarty, 15 R. I. 518.

Where by the terms of a composition agreement, the creditors agree to accept notes endorsed by T and G, and G dying, a circular letter is sent to all the creditors suggesting T as a substitute, and stating: "Should you deem his endorsement sufficient, please advise me promptly;" held, that a creditor who did not signify his intention until notes endorsed by T had been accepted by the other creditors was not bound to accept such notes, and having refused to do so, is at liberty to sue on his original cause of action. Danzig v. Gumersell, 27 Fed. Rep. 185.

Consent.—"Sweet is not proved ever to have said, 'I will take you, Robert, as my debtor, and discharge James;' he is not proved ever to have said or done that which would have the effect of discharging James." ABBOTT, C. J., in Cuxon v. Chadley, 3 B. & C. 591.

If the several classes of creditors of a corporation execute an agreement with the officers of the corporation, the effect of which is to substitute for all the debts and securities which exist against the corporation a mortgage under which bonds are to be issued to the creditors for the amount of their debts respectively, and thus place all the creditors on a common footing, but, in carrying out this agreement, there is a substantial departure from its terms and provisions, creditors who have executed the agreement are not bound to accept bonds under it, but are at liberty to stand on their original rights under previous mortgages. Miller v. Rutland etc. Co., 40 Vt. 399; s. c., 94 Am. Dec. 414.

The original parties to a contract absolutely assigned, and since assignment varied by arrangement with the assignees, brought suit thereon for the benefit of the assignees. There was no evidence of consent of the plaintiffs to the variation. Held, that they could not maintain the suit. Litchfield v. Garrett, 10 Mich. 426.

Whether there has been a consent by all parties is a question for the jury. Dean v. Board of Education, 73 Mich. 165.

"Under the pleadings and the evidence, we think that the vital controverted question of fact in the case is, whether by mutual agreement between all parties, Kerns and Bruley, or the committee, were substituted for the defendants, as debtors to the plaintiff in respect to the demand upon which this action was brought. That question was not submitted to the jury, but they were told that it was immaterial. For this error the judgment of the circuit court must be reversed." Lynch v. Austin, 51 Wis. 287.

An oral acceptance of a written order is not sufficient. Rogers v. Union Stone Co., 130 Mass. 581; s. c., 39 Am. Rep. 478.

On an agreement to extinguish the defendant's debt by transfer of a debt due from the plaintiff to a third party, the agreement being in writing, and it being intended that the defendant's should be so, held, that the arrangement was not complete until he had signed. Webber v. Mowbray, 2 F. & F. 310.

In California, the assent of the creditor to the new contract may be subsequent to the arrangement between the parties to the original contract. McLaren v. Hutchinson, 22 Cal. 187; s. c., 83 Am. Dec. 59. But in this State the assent of the creditor is not necessary to enable him to take advantage of an agreement for his benefit.

Examples.—Cowan and Knowles, hauled logs for the defendants by the thousand and incurred several bills including the plaintiffs. Cowan and Knowles sold out all their "fixings" in the woods to the defendants who promised to pay the said bills. The plaintiffs called on the defendants who said the bill was good and they would pay it as they had agreed with Cowan and Knowles. Held, the defendants were bound. Maxwell v. Haynes, 41 Me. 559.

The defendant bought goods of plaintiff for use in his mill. Afterwards the mill was leased to the superintendent, and the plaintiff was so notified, and later the superintendent gave the plaintiff a note for the amount signed "Old Dominion Paper Mills, by A. B., Manager." Held no novation, but the defendant still remained liable. Smith v. Watson, 82 Va. 712.

Where the plaintiff agreed to sell property to A and the defendant, taking an assignment of the contract from A, accepted the conveyance from the plaintiff and agreed to fulfil the original contract, the defendant was estopped to deny the assent of A to the assignment. Texas etc. Co. v. Gentry, 69 Tex. 625.

A mere agreement by a purchaser of goods to pay the seller's debt to the plaintiff by giving a note does not constitute a novation where no note was given, although such purchaser may have made several cash payments to the plaintiff on account of the debt. Rising v. Cummings, 47 Vt. 345.

If a debtor deposit money for his creditor with a third person, and the creditor assents thereto and gives the depository a new credit on the footing of such deposit, the original debtor is discharged. Swift v. Hathaway, 1 Gall. (U. S.) 417.

Where one represents that he owes to the debtor of another a debt of equal amount, substitutes himself in place of the debtor by parol agreement with the creditor, fixes a time for payment and thus induces the creditor to discharge the debtor and trust exclusively to him, his undertaking to pay is not collateral, but original, and performance may be enforced whether he ever in fact owed anything to the debtor in whose stead he agreed to be bound or not. Edenfield v. Canady, 60 Ga. 456; cf. Torbett v. Worthy, 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 107.

After all the parties have assented the novation is complete, and none of the parties can withdraw. Williams v. Little, 35 Vt. 323; Surtees v. Hubbard, 4 Esp. 203; Hodges v. Eastman, 12 Vt. 358; Moert v. Moessard, 1 M. & P. 8; Bassett v. Hughes, 43 Wis. 319; Clement v. Clement, 8 N. H. 472; Holly v. Rathbone, 8 Johns (N. Y.) 148; Ainslie v. Boynton, 3 Barb. Performance.—When the novation is established it is immaterial whether the substituted contract is ever performed or not, so long as the discharge of the original contract is concerned.²

the courts apply the doctrine of delegation that does not require a new agreement. And, says Pothier, the law is, that a person shall be presumed to abandon the debt which he has to him. And as a new agreement is an abandonment by the first claim to which is substituted, it is not to be presumed, and the parties ought to state it." Scott v. Atchison, 76; Sharp v. Fly, 9 Baxt.

But no presumption of law, that the parties make a new contract the creditor shall receive his pay at a different time, or place, or in a different way from that originally stipulated, that the parties agree to accept the new contract in discharge of the old. The party who alleges such agreement for the discharge of the old debt is bound to prove a distinct agreement to that effect." Woodward v. Miles, 24 N. H. 289; Morris v. Harveys, 75 Va. 726; Babcock v. Hawkins, 23 Vt. 561.

"An acceptance in satisfaction of a debt of an accord or agreement, with mutual promises to perform, on which the party has a legal remedy for its nonperformance, is a good satisfaction of such debt although such promises are not performed." Goodrich v. Stanley, 24 Conn. 613. This principle has been repeatedly and fully sanctioned by modern cases—Good v. Chessman, 2 B. & Ad. 328; Smith's Leading Cases, 150; Evans v. Powis, 1 Wels., Hurls. & Gor. 601, where PARKE B., says that for the new agreement to be a defence to the original debt, the plaintiff should have "agreed to accept the agreement itself, and not the performance of it, as a satisfaction for his debt, so that if it was not performed, his only remedy would be by an action for the breach of it, and not a right to recur to the original debt." The state of the accounts between the plaintiff and the party discharged by the novation is of no consequence after the novation. Keller v. Beaty, 80 Ga. 815.

Trustee Process.—The original debt cannot be reached by trustee process after the novation is complete. Clough v. Giles, 64 N. H. 73.

A being indebted to B, and C being indebted to A, it was agreed between all three that C should pay B the amount he owed A, unless on going to his office he should find that he had been summoned as the garnishee of A. After A left, C requested B to procure A's written order of payment. C went to his office and found no garnishee process had been served, but such process was served before B presented to C the written order of A. Held that the novation was complete when the condition prescribed by C was fulfilled, and the garnishee process did not im-

III. NOVATION BETWEEN THE SAME PARTIES—1. Substitution of Contracts.—The making of a new contract and the substitution thereof in the place and stead of the original contract before the breach of the latter, may operate as a discharge and extinguishment of the original contract, and so a novation of it.¹ The Insolvency of Debtor.—The creditor assumes the risk of the insolvency of the new debtor. Cadens v. Teasdale, 53 Vt. 469; s. c., 38 Am. Rep. 697; vide Drake v. Hill, 53 Iowa 37; Shaffer v. McKanna, 24 Kan. 22; Flanagin v. Hambleton, 54 Md. 222.

Creditors of a railroad for money loaned to pay wages and overdue coupons took bonds in payment. Held, this was a novation of their preferred debt and postponed it to prior mortgages. Fidelity Ins. etc. Co. v. Shenandoah Valley R. Co., 86 Va. 1; s. c., 38 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 559.

If a subsequent contract includes, and goes beyond, the terms of the first contract, the latter is superseded, and no action can be maintained thereon. Munford v. Wilson, 15 Mo. 540.

Where the parties to a contract disagree as to a part of the work to be done, and enter into a new agreement with respect to it, such new agreement is binding, and so much is taken out of the first contract. Stewart v. Keteltas, 36 N. Y. 388; Howard v. Wilmington etc. R. Co., 1 Gill (Md.) 311.

Prior contracts are merged in and superseded by a subsequent contract on the same subject, which, as the last act of the parties, must be held to contain and express their true meaning and intention. Stow v. Russell, 36 Ill. 18; Hargrave v. Conroy, 19 N. J. Eq. 281; Rhodes v. Thomas, 2 Ind. 638; Hadden v. Dimick, 13 Abb. Pr., N. S. (N. Y.) 135.

A contract to erect a building was entered into and partially performed, when the original contract was "revised," and a new one entered into for the erection of the same building. Held, under the circumstances, that the new one was designed to take the place of the first one, and to embody the whole agreement of the parties. Mather v. Butler Co., 28 Iowa 253.

Where one contract has been made between two persons, and at a subsequent period, another contract (having reference to the same subject matter, but changing the relations of the first contract) is entered into, the last contract controls or rescinds the first (as the case may be), though there be no such effect expressed in the last contract. Reed v. M'Grew, 5 Ohio 375.

The complaint, after setting forth a contract, stated that it was afterwards modified by the parties, and in lieu thereof "a final contract" was executed by the parties, which final contract the complaint then set forth. Held, that by the terms of the complaint the first contract was functus officio, and could not form the basis of any cause of action, and must be struck out. Chesbrough v. New York etc. R. Co., 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 9; s. c., 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 557.

Where the parties to a verbal agreement for the payment of a sum of money in a certain contingency passed a note for the amount, payable without condition, the condition, in the absence of fraud, will be held to be waived. Swank v. Nichols, 24 Ind. 199.

Plaintiffs were authorized by defendant and others to contract for certain grading, but the sum originally subscribed proving insufficient, notice was sent defendant of a meeting to make a new contract, which meeting he did not attend, and he was held liable only on the original contract to which he subscribed. Berchorman v. Murken, 2 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 98.

The defendants, intending to end a contract with the plaintiffs, proposed to pay a certain sum for a release from the contract. In an action by the plaintiffs for the breach of the original contract, held, that the proposition was an offer of a compromise which was not binding unless accepted. That, if accepted, the consideration which gave it validity as an agreement was the release of the former contract.
 That, if the plaintiffs intended to hold the defendants to the terms of the offer, they should have sued on the agreement of compromise, if an agreement was concluded; and that they could not sue on the original contract, and use the offer of the defendants as a liquidation of the damages they had sustained by a breach of the original contract. Union
 Locomotive etc. Co. v. Erie R. Co., 37
 N. J. L. 23; Bishop v. Busse, 69 Ill. 403.

An agreement to make a new contract, and that the new contract shall be cause of action, whether the new con-contract may be substituted for a sealed instrument.¹

Where the consideration of a specialty has failed, and by the agreement of the parties, a new consideration is substituted, such agreement should be clearly proved; and payments on the specialty, after the consideration has failed, will not, unexplained, be evidence of such agreement. Belk v. Perry, 1 Rich. (S. Car.) 5.

But the new contract may supersede the old one to prevent recovery on it by the necessary implication of terms. Patmore v. Colburn, 1 C. M. & R. 65; Munford v. Wilson, 15 Mo. 540; Chesborough v. New York etc. R. Co., 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 9; Reed v. McGrew, 5 Ohio 375.

"Before the breach of the first agreement, a new agreement is entered into, varying the contract in an essential part, the time of payment. The latter, then, is a substituted contract, and is an answer to an action upon the former. The plea is not a plea of accord and satisfaction, and does not require an averment of performance." Taylor v. Helary, 1 C. M. & R. 741.

Plaintiff and defendant entered into a written contract for the building of a house. The plaintiff began work and was paid for the work done. And then certain changes were decided upon and a new contract drawn up fixing a new price. Held, that the second contract was a substitution for the first, and evidence that it was not so intended by the parties is inadmissible. Mather v. Butler Co., 28 Iowa 253.

A compromise between debtor and creditor by which the amount, term and mode of payment, rate of interest and nature of security of the old debt is changed, is not a novation unless such intent is clearly expressed. Baker v. Frellsen, 32 La. An. 822.

Where a sealed contract is followed by one not under seal, relative to the same subject matter, if both can be executed together, the one is not substituted for the other.

Where there is in fact a substitution of a contract not under seal, for one that is under seal, the substitution operates as an abandonment of the sealed contract, except as matter of reference for the terms of the parol contract which has suspended it.

Where a contract under seal is altered by parol it all becomes parol; but a mere additional parol agreement, not changing or modifying the one under seal, will not have this effect, nor will a stipulation releasing or waiving part performance. Lawall v. Rader, 2 Grant Cas. (Pa.) 426; Vaughn v. Ferris, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 46; Whiting v. Heslep, 4 Cal. 327; Hydeville Co. v. Eagle R. & Slate Co., 44 Vt. 395; French v. New, 28 N. Y. 147; Acker v. Blender, 33 Ala. 230.

The old common law doctrine that is still followed in some States was that a sealed executory contract cannot be released or rescinded by a parol agreement. Dela Croix v. Bulkley, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 71; Sinnard v. Patterson, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 353; Harper v. Hampton, 1 Har. & J. (Md.) 622; Barnett v. Barnes, 73 Ill. 216; Hume v. Taylor, 63 Ill. 43; Perry v. Clymore, 3 McCord L. (S. A subsequent executory contract, to be operative as a defeasance or modification of a previous contract by specialty, must be under seal, whether it have a consideration or not, and whether it be made before or after a breach of the previous contract. Eddy v. Graves, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 82.

A subsequent parol contract cannot be admitted to control or defeat a deed, or attach a condition or defeasance to it; nor can a sealed executory contract be released or rescinded by a parol executory contract. Miller v. Hemphill, 9 Ark. 488.

A subsequent agreement under seal, written upon and referring to a former agreement not under seal, which imposes a penalty in case the original contract should not be performed, does not

"To whatever cause the doctrine of the present day may be attributed, we think the doctrine itself amounts to this: that a bill of exchange is not, in general, to be considered as a satisfaction of a precedent debt, unless it be paid and accepted as such, or in case it be conditionally paid; unless it appear that an injury has resulted to the debtor, who pays the bill in consequence of the laches of the creditor, who receives it; as, for instance, if, in the meantime, the drawers fail; or if the recourse of the person from whom the bill is received, against the drawer, or the endorsers, be thereby lost." Gallagher v. Roberts, 2 Wash. (U. S.) 191.

"Upon this subject, the general rule seems to be that if one indebted to another by simple contract, give his creditor a promissory note, drawn by himself, for the same amount, without any new consideration, the new note shall not be deemed a satisfaction of the original debt, unless so intended and accepted by the creditor." Weakly v. Bell, 9 Watts (Pa.) 273; s. c., 36 Am. Dec. 116.

The giving a creditor a bill of exchange, in compliance with an award of arbitrators, held, not to be a renewal of the original debt. Ware v. Willis, 45 Ala. 120.

A creditor who has agreed to accept a promissory note in payment of a debt cannot, by returning the note, rescind question for the jury;¹ the burden of proof is on the party allegthe contract, for the purpose of suing upon the original cause of action. Kappes v. White etc. Lumber Co., 1 Ill. App. 280.

In a transaction by which a draft is substituted in place of a note, to constitute a novation of the debt, it must be established clearly that it was the intention of the parties that the draft should be taken in absolute payment of the note. Helme v. Middleton, 14 La. An. 484.

Where a party receives back a draft given by him in payment, upon an agreement to replace it by an equivalent, no novation takes place if he fails to do so. Taylor v. Simon, 14 La. An. 351.

The execution by an endorser of his own note, which is given and accepted in full payment of the note on which he is liable as endorser, constitutes a novation under Civil Code Cal., § 1530, providing that "novation is the substitution of a new obligation for an existing one," and is made (section 1531) "by the substitution of a new obligation between the same parties with intent to extinguish the old obligation;" and the maker of the first note becomes liable to the endorser, though the holder, instead of cancelling it, endorsed it without recourse to the endorser. Stanley v. McElrath (Cal. 1889), 22 Pac. Rep. 673.

The note is payment if transferred. Donnelly v. Dist. of Columbia, 119 U. S. 339; Harris v. Johnston, 3 Cranch (U. S.) 311; Clark v. Young, 1 Cranch (U. S.) 181; Holmes v. D'Camp, 1 Johns. Non-negotiable Note.—But a debtor's non-negotiable note does not seem to be regarded as payment. Greenwood v. Curtis, 4 Mass. 93; Trustees etc. in Dutton v. Kendrick, 12 Me. 381.

So held in Indiana of notes not payable at a bank. "A promissory note not payable at a bank, and not governed by the law merchant, though given for a precedent debt, will not operate as a payment or in extinguishment of the precedent debt, in the absence of an express agreement by and between the parties that it should so operate." Jeffries v. Lamb, 73 Ind. 202. And cf. Albright v. Griffin, 78 Ind. 182; Waring v. Hill, 89 Ind. 497.

A note may be taken with other consideration in payment of an existing debt of smaller amount. Keough v. McNitt, 6 Minn. 513.

Check.—A check is not payment until paid. Small v. Franklin Min. Co., 99 Mass. 277; Ocean Tow Boat Co. v. Ship Ophella, 11 La. An. 28; Canonsburg Iron Co. v. Union Nat. Bank (Pa. 1886), 6 Atl. Rep. 574.

ing that the note was given in payment.¹

(b) Massachusetts Rule.—The rule has been laid down in Massachusetts and followed in other States that a negotiable note of the debtor is prima facie a payment of an existing debt.² The rule goes to the presumption only, and the presumption may be rebutted by evidence that the note was not taken in payment.³

The jury must be satisfied that it was the agreement of the parties that the note was to be taken in payment, and without such agreement, the debtor will be held on the original debt even though the note is credited as payment on the books of the creditor. Follett v. Reynolds, 35 Minn. 331.

But it is clear that if the note is received in payment or as security, and its value is diminished by the laches of the holder, the loss must fall on him. Peacock v. Pursell, 14 C. B., N. S. 728.

"It would seem very clear that the taking of new notes in a new form, payable at periods postponed beyond the time of the maturity of the previous notes, and especially taking them secured by the introduction of a new endorser, whose name was not on any of the original notes, accompanied with the further fact of the cancelling of the original notes, would fully authorize the presumption that the three new notes were received in payment and discharge of the balance due on the former notes, unless the presumption be rebutted by other evidence." *Huse v. (c) Renewal.—A note taken in renewal of a former note is not regarded as payment of it.¹

IV. NOVATION BY SUBSTITUTION OF A NEW DEBTOR—1. Delegation.—This kind of novation is called in the civil law delegation. The original debtor, in order to be liberated from his creditor, gives him a third person, who becomes bound in his stead to the creditor or to the person appointed by him.² A delegation is 130; Fowler v. Ludwig, 34 Me. 455 (where a receipt was given for the original debt).

"The taking of the note of the debtor in payment and the giving of a receipt in full does not establish an agreement to take a note absolutely in payment, and is not an extinguishment of the original debt." Feldman v. Beier, 78 N. Y. 293; Jagger Iron Co. v. Walker, 76 N. Y. 521. Parol evidence is admissible to show the intent with which the note was given. Graves v. Shulman, 59 Ala. 406; First Nat. Bank v. Nugen, 99 Ind. 160. And vide Varner v. Nobleborough, 2 Me. 121; s. c., 11 Am. Dec. 48; Hale v. Rice, 124 Mass. 292. Where the taking of a note would deprive the taker of some substantial benefit, or where he has other security, that has a strong tendency to show that the note was not taken in payment. *Curtis v. Return of Old Note.—The return of the old note is evidence to prove an intention to take the new note in payment, but not conclusive evidence. Jagger Iron Co. v. Walker, 76 N. Y. 522; Parrott v. Colby, 71 N. Y. 597. Even where the new note has been put in judgment, if there has been no satisfaction. Cole v. Sackett, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 516; First Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 6 Hun (N. Harveys*, 75 Va. 726 (even though the new note is not paid).

It has been held in New York that as a renewal in a bank is by common banking custom treated as an extinguishment of the old note, the same effect should be given to it by the courts. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Church, 81 N. Y. 226; s. c., 37 Am. Rep. 494.

Where the renewal note was sent to the holder with the request to return the original note, it was held that the old note was discharged, although the payee retained both. *Sage v. promise of A to C is conditional to pay whatever may hereafter be found due from A to B, and when such amount is ascertained, but when it is paid, B becomes bankrupt, may sue A for the amount of A's debt. Crowfoot v. Gurney, 9 Bing.

land property to A, receiving A's notes payable in one, two and three years and executed his bond to convey the premises when the notes had been sold to B his interest in said premises, and a deed was made to which they were parties, reciting the old sale and the new one, whereby B agreed to surrender to A his three notes and to accept in their place three new notes of B, to be drawn as of the same date and to run the same times, and bear the same rate of interest. The notes were payable at maturity, and the estate was bound for the payment of the balance of the purchase money; but the net proceeds of the sale being insufficient, F obtained a writ of fi. fa. against A and B, which was issued. On appeal it was held, that F, by surrendering his notes given by A, surrendered the obligation for which they stood, and that the acceptance of B's notes was a novation. Wailhouse v. Frazier, 25 Md. 96; Brown v. Percival, 5 B. & Ad. 925; Rev. & Man. 171; Bird v. Gamble, 1 N. C. 883; Wilson v. Coup-land, 3 B. & Ald. 228; Karr v. Porter, 4 Del. 297; Van Epps v. McGill, 10 Supp. (N. Y.) 109.

A purchaser of land gave his notes for the purchase price which were endorsed to the plaintiff. The notes were then reissued and new security and endorsements were given. Held, that in a suit on the notes, the maker cannot set up a failure of consideration in the trade (a shortage of 100 acres). McMinn v. Doles, 59 Ga. 265.

A order drawn by A on B in favor of C in pursuance of a verbal agreement between them, that B shall pay C what B owes to C, who is owing C the same amount. It is admissible to show the exact amount B has assumed to pay although C has not accepted it. Wright v. McMillan, 7 Mo. 134.

Kursteiner was a creditor of Hughes, and Warren was a creditor of Kursteiner against whom he had obtained judgment for his debt. All three met, and they then agreed that Hughes should pay to Warren the amount that he owed to Kursteiner, and that Warren in consideration of Hughes' undertaking to do so should release his claim against Kursteiner. Kursteiner was released from the debt he owed Warren, and Hughes was in effect released from the claim that Kursteiner had on him. Hughes, however, afterwards refused to pay Warren. We do not think that his refusal was justified. Because Kursteiner was dishonest enough to sue Hughes, that is no reason why Warren should not be paid. It may prove Kursteiner's dishonesty, but it cannot release Hughes from the agreement he made with Warren." Hughes v. Warren, 3 Australian Jurist 65.

A sold machinery to B with a guaranty as to its working capacity. B refused to accept it as not in accordance with the guaranty. A, B and C then agreed that C should take the goods, A agreeing to release B from all claim, and C undertaking to repay B for his advances to A. Held that B was not a vendor to C and so not entitled to any vendor's lien. Claycomb v. Bisbee, 38 La. An. 575.

Wages Cases.—Plaintiff boarded employees of defendant under an agreement with them and defendant that payment should be made from their wages. Held, a novation and defendant was entitled to retain the amount from the wages. Jacoby v. O'Hearn, 32 Mo. App. 566; Sterling v. Ryan, 72 Wis. 36; s. c., 7 Am. St. Rep. 818; Bull v. Brockway, 48 Mich. 523; Schuster v. Kansas City etc. R. Co., 60 Mo. 290.

B agreed to work for C, the amount of B's wages to be paid to A, who was to credit the amount against B's indebtedness to A. Held not a contract of novation, but that B was the agent of A, who virtually sold B's services to C. Dwyer v. Gaylor, 12 R. I. 263.

New Municipalities.—"When an old [municipal] corporation is dissolved and a new one created substantially embracing the same territory as the old, the new municipality becomes liable as successor for the debts of the old, although the respective charters differ in many respects, and consequently an action at law will lie." Brewis v. Duluth, 13 Fed. Rep. 334; Braughton v. Pensacola, 93 U. S. 266. So, too, if a municipality has been abolished and its territory divided among other municipalities, then a creditor may pursue his demand against the latter for their equitable proportions thereof. Laramie made by the concurrence of three parties, and there may be a fourth.¹ It includes a novation by the extinction of the debt from the person delegating and the obligation contracted in its stead by the party delegated.² Commonly, indeed, there is a double novation, for the party delegated is commonly a debtor

Other Examples.—“Where, after breach of a contract, the performance of which is guaranteed, the creditor and principal debtor enter into a new contract, by which the amount of damages then due is made payable at a future day, and upon terms different from those imposed by the original contract, such new contract presumptively merges the old. In such a case, the new obligation, having been taken upon a sufficient consideration, becomes the exclusive medium by which the rights of the parties in respect to the payment of damages are to be ascertained. Such a contract is not collateral to the original, but in respect to the subject to which it appertains, it merges and supersedes the other. Weed Sewing Machine Co. v. Winchell, 107 Ind. 260.

“If A owes B, and A conveys land to C and has a lien for the purchase money on the land so conveyed, and they all meet together and agree that C shall execute his note to B for the unpaid purchase money, instead of giving the note to A, which is done, and B releases A from his debt, has B a lien on the land conveyed by A to C for the purchase money? We hold that he has. It is clear that if C had given his note to A for the unpaid purchase money, A might have assigned it to B, and thus transferred his vendor's lien to B. Nichols v. Glover, 41 Ind. 24.

Where A gave his notes on the purchase of a chattel and a mortgage back on them to secure the notes, and B. to prevent a foreclosure by the vendor, agreed with him and A to give the vendor his own note secured by mortgage and did so. held, in a suit on B's note, that the original contract with A was superseded and B could not take advantage of any breach of warranty on the sale to A. Abbott v. Johnson, 47 Wis. 239.

Where a note, given to an administrator for land, was by him turned over as assets to the guardian of the heir at law, the maker thereof giving the guardian a new note, with the administrator as security, held, this was not such a novation of the original debt for the land as that the note was not still a debt contracted for the purchase of the land. Lott v. Dysart, 45 Ga. 355.

1. Where, by a novation, it was intended by all concerned that A should assume a debt of B, the fact that credit for the amount was given by mistake to a firm of which B is a member, does not invalidate the novation. York v. Orton, 65 Wis. 6.

A drew check on bank, which paid it with understanding it was to be charged to B's account. It was not so charged until four months later, when the bank informed B of the transaction, who consented to it. Held no novation and no liability on B's part. Johnson v. Rumsey, 28 Minn. 531.

Where individual corporators signed a note supposing they were binding the corporation, and afterwards tendered money to the payee who refused to accept it, but discharged the surety, and with the assent of the corporation agreed to look to it alone, the signers of the note were held not liable. McClellan v. Robe, 93 Ind. 298.

“Heaton, Angier and Chase being together, it was agreed between them that the plaintiff should take Chase as his debtor for the sum due from the defendant. The debt due to the plaintiff from the defendant was thus extinguished. It was an accord executed, and Chase, by assuming the debt due to the plaintiff, must be considered as having paid that amount to the defendant, as part of the price he was to pay the defendant for the wagon. The agreement of the plaintiff to take Chase as his debtor was clearly a dis-person delegating; and in order to be liberated from the obligation to him, contracts a new one with his creditor. In this there is a novation both of the obligation of the person delegating, by his giving his creditor a new debtor, and of the person substituted, by the new obligation which he contracts.¹

court finds that the three were together, that they agreed Bowman was owing Jackson $68, Jackson was owing plaintiff more at amount, that the debt due Bowman to Jackson should be upon the debt Jackson was owing; that defendant agreed to make a wagon, and that the amount now owed Jackson should be accounted to plaintiff in part payment of wagon. There can be no doubt that mutual agreement operated as a discharge of Bowman's, the defendant's, obligation to Jackson to the extent of $68, but the defendant in that sum, became the debtor of the plaintiff." Lesowman, 39 Iowa 611.

There is a novation by delegation when the original debt was secured by mortgage and in effecting the substitution of the mortgage was discharged without his assent, it was as if the original debt was transferred rather than extinguished, the mortgage would continue in force until fully paid. Foster v. Paine, 63 N. H. 5, see page 89. where the court says "The rule is well settled that the mortgage continues in force until the debt is satisfied. No mere change in the person of the debtor, nor (as we think) the personnel of the debtor, has the effect to discharge it," citing Sloan v. 11 Iowa 465; Packard v. King, 11 Iowa 219; Watkins v. Hill, 8 Mass. 522; Pomeroy v. Rice, 16 Mass. 22.

Derby v. Sanford, 9 Cush. (Mass.) the plaintiff and defendant entered into a contract by which the defendant was to do certain work for the plaintiff. Later the plaintiff addressed the following note to him: "I authorize R R to finish the job now commenced . . . and to pay the balance whatever may be due." The defendant assented in writing, with the consent of R R. On this state of facts the present action was held not maintainable. SHAW, C. J., said: "The doctrine of the assignment of choses in action does not arise here. There is no doubt that it is the law, that when an assignment of a debt is made, and the debtor agrees to pay the assignee, the assignment is a good consideration for the new promise, and an action may be maintained in the name of the assignee. It follows that if the debtor pays the assignee, such payment is a good defence to an action by the assignor. . . . The arrangement in this case was not an assignment of a chose in action for there was no debt due to Derby, and of course no chose in action to be assigned. It was the substitution of Reed for Derby as the contracting party with Sanford, to which Reed assented by taking the order and going on to complete the work. The defendant by his endorsement of the order undertook that the balance of the job, when completed as per agreement, should be paid to Reed. The completion of the job by Reed was a good consideration for such express promise, but in addition to that, the defendant, by the substitution, was wholly discharged from his contract to pay Derby anything. When the job was completed, we think Reed was the only creditor. And he alone could bring the action." And see Wiggin v. Damrell, 4 N. H. 96.

1. Pothier Contr., pt. 3, ch. 2, art. 6, §§ 1, 2; Contr. Sale, pt. 6, ch. 4, § 553. "In that kind of novation, called in the civil law delegation, no new creditor could be substituted without the debtor's consent. This rule is observed in the common law. Hence, without this consent and promise to pay, a new creditor can have no action against the debtor, because there is no privity of contract between them. To establish such privity there must be a new promise founded on sufficient consideration. And the extinction of the prior debt is a sufficient consideration in such case."

"When assent or consideration is wanting, the novation operates only as a species of collateral security. This assent on the part of the debtor is said to be essential, for the reason that he may have an account with his assignor;

2. Payment by Note of a Third Person.—When a creditor accepts the note of a third person in payment of his debt, a novation takes place. The liability of the debtor is discharged, and that of the maker of the note substituted for it.¹ The mere acceptance of such a note, however, does not constitute a novation without some evidence that it is taken in satisfaction of the debt.² If the note is accepted without the endorsement of the debtor, the creditor is held to accept it in satisfaction of his debt,³ although and he shall not be barred of his right to a set-off, or any defence he may have. Still, if anything like an assent on his part can be inferred, he will be considered as the debtor." Adams v. Power, 48 Miss. 450.

Discharge of Both Intermediary Obligations.—In cases where A owes B and B owes C, and B, by order or otherwise, assigns his claim against A to C in payment and discharge of his debt to C, there is a novation. The debt which was due from B to C is extinguished, and the liability from A to B is also commonly said to be extinguished also, but the cases cited to this last point are not all clear to prove it. The case of Hodgson v. Anderson, 3 B. & C. 842, does not. All that was said by the court was by BAYLEY, J. "The debt existed, and it was the debt of the defendant, and the only question was to whom it was to be paid." In Tatlock v. Harris, 3 T. R. 174, BULLER, J., merely says that the debt from B to C must be discharged. Such also is the decision in Wharton v. Walker, 4 B. & C. 163; Butterfield v. Hartshorn, 7 N. H. 345; s. c., 26 Am. Dec. 741; Heaton v. Angier, 7 N. H. 397; s. c., 28 Am. Dec. 353. On the other hand, Story (Partn., § 25), implies the extinguishment of the liability of A to B but the continued existence of the debt itself in favor of C. See also Burrows v. Robertson, 7 Iowa 100; Dever v. Akin, 40 Ga. 423; Adams v. Power, 48 Miss. 450. Pothier Cont. Sale, pt. 6, ch. 4, § 553.

"The defendant owed the plaintiff a balance due on the exchange of property. In consideration of an agreement by the defendant to convey land to H, the latter gave his note to the plaintiff for the claim sued on. The defendant refused to make the conveyance, and without it H was insolvent." Held that the plaintiff's only claim was on the note. Porter v. Dearing, 33 Ind. 155. See also the Georgia Statute. "One simple contract as to the same matter, and on no new consideration, does not destroy another between the same parties; but if new parties are introduced by novation, so as to change the person to whom the obligation is due, the original contract is at an end." Code Ga., § 2724.

3. "Ordinarily, where the payee or holder of a check, which is payable immediately, instead of demanding payment, procures the check to be certified, the check is, as between the drawer and holder, regarded as paid, and the holder must look to the bank whose obligation it has accepted in lieu of the money; because by procuring the certification he has caused an amount of the drawer's fund, or credit, equal to that for which the check was drawn, to be set apart for the payment of that check and withdrawn from the control of the drawer, and his funds are as effectually diminished as if the money had been paid, while the bank has given a negotiable obligation to the holder of the check which is equivalent to a certificate of deposit." Thompson v. Bank of British North America, 82 N. Y. 6.

"When the business of the bank is properly conducted, it is the duty of the officer certifying the check to cause it to be immediately charged as paid to the account of the drawer, and when this is done, the sum thus charged will remain as a deposit in the bank to the credit of the check, and be forever withdrawn from the control of the maker, except as a holder of the check. Such a deposit stands upon exactly the same grounds as any other." OAKLEY, C. J., in Willett v. Phoenix Bank, 2 Duer (N. Y.) 121.

2 Morse on Banking (2nd ed.), § 414 (f), says: "A certified check has a distinctive character, as a species of commercial paper, the certification constituting a new contract between the holder and the certifying bank; the funds of the drawer are in legal contemplation, withdrawn from his credit and appropriated to the payment of the check, and the bank becomes the debtor of the holder, as for money had and received, as to the drawer and endorsers, if there are any, the certification is payment of the check, and they are no longer liable upon it," citing National Commercial Bank v. VI. CONTRACTS FOR THE BENEFIT OF THIRD PERSONS—1. The Strict Rule of the Common Law.—The general rule of law is that a person who is not a party to a simple contract, and from whom no consideration moves, cannot sue on the contract, and consequently that a promise made by one person to another for the benefit of a third person, who is a stranger to the consideration, will not support an action by the latter.² Of course where the

A, being insolvent, a verbal agreement was entered into between several of his creditors and B, whereby B agreed to pay the creditors 50 per cent. of their claims in satisfaction of their debts which they agreed to accept and to assign their claims to B. Held, that one of their creditors, who had so agreed but had not taken the 50 per cent. could not sue A, as his claim against him was gone. *Austey v. In Warren v. Batchelder, 15 N. H. 129, the defendant owed one D, who owed the plaintiff. D and the defendant had a settlement and D paid to him money enough to cover the plaintiff's claim against him. The plaintiff was not a party to this arrangement, but demanded the money, and brought an action for money had and received. It was held, that as the debt of D to the plaintiff still existed, and as no consideration passed from the plaintiff, that the action would not lie. GILCHRIST, J., said: "That the legal interest in a simple contract, and the right to enforce it, resides in the person from whom the consideration moves, we understand to be a cardinal point of law. A contrary decision involves the result, that he from whom the consideration moves is not the party to sue, if any other person is intended to be benefited by the contract . . . In the case before us, the consideration did not move from the plaintiff. His debt was not extinguished, and he can maintain no action. We do not mean to say that there must have been an express agreement by the plaintiff to acpromisee is in fact acting as the agent of a third person, although that is unknown to the promisor, the principal is the real party to the contract, and may therefore sue in his own name on the promise made to his agent.¹

2. American Rule.—But for reasons of convenience and otherwise, this strict rule of the common law has been much modified in America, and it is now settled in most of the States that a third person may maintain an action in his own name upon a contract cept the defendant as his debtor, and extinguish the original debt; but such an agreement must be proved either by direct evidence or by proof of facts which show that it must have been made."

In Butterfield v. Hartshorn, 7 N. H. 345; s. c., 26 Am. Dec. 741, the plaintiff held a claim against the estate of a deceased person. The executor of the deceased sold land of the estate to the defendant, and left a portion of the purchase price in his hands to pay the claims of the plaintiff and others, and the defendant gave the executor a promise to pay them. The defendant had made no promise to the plaintiff who was not allowed to recover. The court said: "The principal question in this case is, whether the plaintiff can avail himself of the promise made by the defendant to the executor—he never having agreed to accept the defendant as his debtor, nor having made any demand of him for the money prior to the commencement of this suit . . . In cases of this kind, a contract, in order to be binding, must be mutual to all concerned; and, until it is completed by the assent of all interested, it is liable to be defeated and the money deposited countermanded. It seems also to be clear that no contract of the kind here attempted to be entered into can be made without an entire change of the original rights and liabilities of the parties to it. There is to be a deposit of money for the payment of a prior debt, an agreement to hold the money for this purpose, and an agreement on the part of a third person to accept it in compliance with this arrangement. It is made through the agency of three individuals, for the purpose of payment; and it can have no other effect than to extinguish the original debt, and create a new liability of debtor and creditor between the person holding the money and the person who is to receive it. On any other supposition there would be a duplicate liability for the same debt; and the deposit, instead of being a payment would be a mere collateral security, which is totally different from the avowed object of the parties. To entitle the plaintiff to recover, there must be an extinguishment of the original debt; and it is questionable whether in cases of this kind anything can operate as an extinguishment of the original debt but payment, or an express agreement of the creditor to take another person as his debtor in discharge of the original claim."

Where A received from B certain claims to be collected, with an agreement to apply the net avails to the payment of certain debts of B, and the claims had been collected to the amount of $1,000, but the debts to be paid were $1,300, it was held that the remedy of a creditor entitled to a proportionate share was in equity, and not at law. *Clapp v. "It is a rudimental principle that a party may sue on a promise made for a sufficient consideration for his use and benefit, though it be made to another and not to himself." Merriman v. Moore, 90 Pa. St. 78.

The Pennsylvania courts attempt to draw a distinction between the liability of a person who holds money or other property which in equity and good conscience belongs to a third person, and the case where a person promises to pay the debt of the person with whom he contracts to a third person. "Hence, if one pay money to another for the use of a third person, or having money belonging to another, agree with that other to pay it to a third, an action lies by the person beneficially interested. This right of action is not restricted to cases of money only; but extends to an agreement to pay over any valuable thing, so that such third person is the only party in interest. But when a debt already exists, a promise by a third person to pay such debt, being for the benefit of the original debtor, and to protect him against it, he must necessarily have a right of action against his promisor to secure that protection. If the third person also became liable to the original creditor, he would be subject to two separate actions at the same time and for the same debt. This would be manifestly unjust." Co. v. Curtiss*, 80 N. Y. 223.

"Whether the decisions rest upon the doctrine of agency, the promisee being regarded as the agent for the third party, who, by bringing his action, adopts his acts, or upon the doctrine of a trust, the promisor being regarded as having received money or other thing for the third party, is not material. In either case, there must be a legal right, founded upon some obligation of the promisee, in the third party to adopt and claim the promise as made for his benefit."

A grantee of mortgaged premises

But a stipulation in a mortgage, whereby the mortgagee assumes and agrees to pay a prior mortgage on the premises does not impose upon the mortgagee a personal liability for the prior mortgage debt, which can be enforced against him by the prior mortgagee. Garnsey v. Rice, 97 N. Y. 296.

A creditor who has in no way accepted and adopted a promise by a third party, in a contract between him and the debtor, to pay the debt, has no legal interest in the promise which will entitle him to contest an action by the promisor for a reformation of the contract by striking out the promise on the ground of mistake. Ibid.

An agreement by a third person, or continuing partner, with an outgoing member of a firm to relieve him from and indemnify him against the firm debts, where no consideration passed to the promisor, cannot be enforced against him by a creditor of the firm. Berry v. Brown, 107 N. Y. 659.

assent his rights are fixed and cannot be affected by any acts of the original parties to the contract.¹ This rule may be called the American rule and seems to be justified by reasons of expediency, although the courts are by no means agreed on the legal reasons supporting it.² It is evident that three essential

1. Where one person for a valuable consideration agrees with another to do some act for the benefit of a third person, the latter may maintain an action on such agreement, and if the third person assents to such arrangement, he cannot be affected by a rescission of the contract by the original parties. Clark, 33 N. J. Eq. 444; Laing v. Byrne, 34 N. J. Eq. 52.

2. Reasons for the Rule.—“The new rule, however, is as convenient as it is just. The objections to it are in every way technical and arbitrary—a repetition of verbal formulas without any convincing reasons. It certainly avoids a circuitry of actions, and it enables the only person beneficially interested in the promise—the real party in interest—to come into court in the first instance and establish his rights, without being driven to enforce them in a roundabout manner through the intervention of a third person, who, if successful, must account to him for the proceeds of the litigation.” Pomeroy on Remedies (2nd ed.), § 139. But see Gilbert v. Sanderson, 56 Iowa 349; s. c., 41 Am. Rep. 103; Cohrt v. Cock, 56 Iowa 658.

The editor of these volumes says in an article in 23 Am. Law. Reg., N. S. 1: “No doubt this question of the rights of third persons in such contracts is a difficult and doubtful one. Perhaps that fact explains the conflict of authority; it certainly demands for each of these cases careful and thorough consideration. Whatever the apparent presumption of such a remark, it is believed that many of them have been too hastily decided, and many of the opinions too carelessly worded. It is hardly too much to say that authority may be found for almost any view of a given state of facts which counsel or the court may prefer to adopt.”

The court, in Wood v. Moriarty, 15 R. I. 518, discusses the matter fully. It says: “The diversity of decision shows that the action cannot be maintained without resorting to implications or assumptions which the courts do not always find it easy to allow, and which they sometimes refuse to allow. It seems to us that we shall best find the grounds, if there are any, on which the action can be maintained, by an analysis or explication of the contract with the debtor. The contract is this: A agrees with B, for a consideration moving from B, to pay to C, the debt which B owes C. The contract is absolute. If A does not pay the debt, and B has to pay, it is broken. It is therefore a contract by A to pay the debt in lieu of B, or in relief of B, to take it upon himself, and to become so far as he can independently of C, the debtor of C in place of B. The contract as between A and B is not collateral, but substitutional. But, this being so, how does C, who is not a party to it, get the right to sue A upon or by reason of it? It has been held that he gets this right directly from the contract itself, because B in making it with A, makes it for C, if C desires to accede to it, as well as for himself, so that C has only to ratify or assent to it, which he does unequivocally by suing on it. But in this view, if C accepts the contract, he must accept it as made; that is as a contract by which A agrees that he instead of B will pay the debt which B owes to C. C cannot, at the same time, assent to the contract and dissent from the terms of it. Accordingly, if he sues A on the contract, he must sue him instead of B, and cannot also sue B, and B is therefore released. But as we have seen, another view has been taken. It has been held that the contract between A and B imposes a duty upon A to pay C the debt which B owes to him, and that from this duty the law implies a promise by A in favor of C to pay B's debt to C. But if a promise is implied from the duty, the promise must correspond to the duty.

requisites of a novation are wanting to any legal right that the third person may have: 1. A contract drawn up in accordance with the intention of the parties; 2. The consent of the third person to the arrangement; and, 3. The discharge of the original debt. But inasmuch as many courts in America have, through an inaccurate use of language classed these cases under novation, it seems proper to treat them here. So far as these cases are exceptions to the ordinary rule of contracts, they seem to divide themselves into several distinct classes.

3. Where the Promisee Holds Money or Other Property.—The first class includes those cases in which the promisee has money or other property in his hands which in equity and good conscience belongs to the third person, and promises the person from whom the money or property is received, either expressly or by implication, to pay it to such person. The promisee seems to be regarded as holding the property in trust for the party interested.¹

The duty which the contract imposes upon A is that he, instead of B, shall pay the debt which B owes to C; and accordingly, such is the promise to be implied from it. If, therefore, C sues A upon the implied promise, he must sue him as liable instead of B, for the debt of B to him, C, he cannot consistently sue both A and B, and consequently B is released.

We do not claim that either of these views is free from difficulty. Either of them, however, is free from one difficulty which other views encounter, and which is the principal reason why the courts which refuse to allow the action refuse to do so. Other views give the creditor the benefit of the new contract for nothing, since they allow him still to retain his hold upon the original debtor; whereas, according to either of the views above set forth, the creditor cannot have the benefit of the new contract without assenting to the terms of it, thereby releasing the original debtor, so that the assent is in itself a consideration."

Another explanation is given by a learned writer in 15 Am. Law Rev. 231, who says: "A, in contracting with B for a valid consideration, binds himself either to perform or be sued. This is the ordinary nature of the obligation on A's part. Now, it is undeniably competent for A to bind himself to B, to perform some act for the benefit of a third person C, and A binds himself here in the same alternative to perform or be sued; and it being competent for A to contract with B in such manner as to make the performance of the contract relate to C, that is, in such manner as to make the one alternative of the obligation to which A binds himself to relate to C, the law to be consistent must allow A to contract with B in such manner that the other alternative of the obligation shall relate to C as well." This argument is ingenious, but does not seem entirely sound.

Statute of Limitations.—But the statute of limitations applies to this sort of a trust and begins to run from the time the money or property is received by the promisor. Hostetter v. Hollinger, 117 Pa. St. 606; cf. Churchman v. Indianapolis, 110 Ind. 259.

The remedy of the third person is assumpsit and not debt. Ross v. Milne.

4. Conveyance to Promisee.—A second class of cases is where a conveyance of property is made to one who promises to pay a debt of the vendor as part of the consideration. The promisee is treated as a sort of trustee for the benefit of the creditor of the vendor.¹

(a) Assumption of Mortgage Debt.—The most common instance of this class is where property is conveyed subject to a mortgage which the grantee agrees to assume and pay. The grantee in this case is held personally liable to the mortgagee for the amount of the debt assumed.² The promise of the grantee must be clear, 12 Leigh (Va.) 204; s. c., 37 Am. Dec. 646; Reeside v. Reeside, 49 Pa. St. 322; s. c., 88 Am. Dec. 503.

A portion of the court, in the case of Lawrence v. Fox, 20 N. Y. 268, considered that the promise was to be regarded as made to the third person through the medium of the promisor as his agent, whose conduct he could ratify when it came to his knowledge, though taken without his being privy thereto, and this view has met with some favor in other cases. Treat v. Stanton, 14 Conn. 445; Johnson v. Collins, 14 Iowa 63; Meech v. Ensign, 21 Am. L. Reg. 608.

This ground seems hardly tenable as the promisor is the agent of the promisee, if of anybody; the assets in his hands are the property of the promisee, and any loss would fall on him and not on the third person. The latter cannot complain if the contract has been rescinded (Davis v. Calloway, 30 Ind. 112), although not after the third person has acted on the contract. Bassett v. Hughes, 43 Wis. 319.

2. "These cases rest upon the following argument: B is indebted to A; B sells land to C, who agrees, instead of paying the price in full, to assume the debt, or to become A's debtor in lieu of B. If A were present assenting, the novation would be consummated on the instant; but A, being absent, learns of the agreement afterwards, and assents to it by bringing his action. Why may not the novation be completed by the assent so given as effectually as if given on the instant? If it be said that in order to create a privity between A and C, the assent must be mutual, the answer is that C had already assented, and there was nothing wanting but A's assent to perfect the novation. To reach such a conclusion, it is only necessary to make certain presumptions which are so appropriate to the nature of the transaction that the law can readily allow them . . . But it is the very making of these presumptions which constitutes a strong objection to this class of cases. Three essential elements of a novation are wanting: 1st, A contract drawn up in accordance with the intention of the parties. Certainly to give the mortgagee additional security was not their object; to thus interpret it is to make a contract for them. 2nd, The consent of the mortgagee to accept the promisor as his debtor. 3rd, The discharge of the original debtor." 23 Am. L. Reg., N. S. 1.

"The cases proceed upon the principle that the undertaking of the grantee to pay off the encumbrance is a collateral security acquired by the mortgagor, which enures by an equitable subrogation to the benefit of the mortgagee." Burr v. Beers, 24 N. Y. 178; s. c., 80 Am. Dec. 327.

Where a purchaser of real estate has assumed and agreed to pay a mortgage upon it as part of the consideration, the holder of the mortgage note is allowed to avail himself of this contract of assumption and hold the purchaser personally, and at the same time enforce the original contract and mortgage; but this is not a novation. Davis v. Hardy, 76 Ind. 272; Logan v. Smith, 70 Ind. 597; Risk v. Hoffman, 69 Ind.

and he cannot be held merely on his acceptance of a deed subject to a mortgage,¹ but, given the promise, it would seem that the

"There can be no doubt at this day that where the purchaser of land encumbered by a mortgage agrees to pay a particular sum as purchase money, and on the execution of the contract of purchase the amount of the mortgage is deducted from the consideration, and the land conveyed subject to the mortgage, that the purchaser is bound to pay the mortgage debt whether he agreed to do so by express words or grantee can be held even if it be only verbal.¹ If, however, the grantee has agreed to assume the mortgage debt, his liability to the mortgagee is fixed on his acceptance of the deed.² It would seem that this doctrine which allows a third person to sue on a contract to which he is not a party is an equitable rather than a legal one, and in some States the mortgagee must resort to a court of equity to enforce his right against the grantee.³ The same not. This obligation necessarily results from the very nature of the transaction. Having accepted the land subject to the mortgage and kept back enough of the vendor's money to pay it, it is only common honesty that he should be required either to pay the mortgage or stand primarily liable for it. His retention of the vendor's money for the payment of the mortgage imposes on him the duty of protecting the vendor against the mortgage debt." Heid v. Vreeland, 30 N. J. Eq. 591. And vide Thayer v. Torrey, 37 N. J. L. 339; Kennedy v. Brown, 61 Ala. 296; cf. Belmont v. Coman, 22 N. Y. 438; s. c., 78 Am. Dec. 213; Smith v. Truslow, 84 N. Y. 660.

On the other hand, it is said that the language is chosen by the grantor, who should express the intent in clear language, if any such obligation has been agreed upon. Hubbard v. Ensign, 46 Conn. 576.

"In this case there was no agreement or consent of the defendant to pay the mortgage debt, or to make it his own, and no consideration moving to him for its payment. He was merely a dry trustee, to whom the property came by the acts of others, and not his own. He is clearly not liable for the mortgage debt under the circumstances. The property was bound for it, but not himself personally. The criterion of personal liability, for an encumbrance to which property is subjected, appears to be the contract or consent of the purchaser to become bound for it where the debt forms a part of the price or consideration he is to pay for the encumbered property. His undertaking to pay the encumbrances is a contract with his vendor. But where property is cast upon him by act of the law, or by the agency of others who are the beneficiaries, there is no reason for assuming that he intended to bind himself. Girard L. Ins. etc. Co. v. Stewart, 86 Pa. St. 89.

But where the acceptance is distinctly refused there is no liability. Culver v. Badger, 29 N. J. Eq. 74; Cordts v. Hargrave, 29 N. J. Eq. 446.

3. Remedy in Equity.—"It would seem to be clear, then, that in ordinary cases the mortgagee does not, by force of the contract, acquire a right of action against the purchaser, but the benefit flowing to him from the contract is limited to a right to be subrogated to the rights of his debtor. He stands in his debtor's rights, and may appropriate to the satisfaction of his mortgage any security held by his debtor, for its payment. He can, therefore, only have a personal judgment against the pur-rules apply on the assignment of chattels subject to a mortgage which the grantee agrees to assume and pay.¹

5. Assignment of Lease.—Another class of cases is where a lessee of premises assigns his lease. The assignee is held bound directly to the lessor to pay the rent and to abide by the covenants in the lease.²

6. Suretyship.—Where the facts warrant an inference that the promisee by his contract with the promisor became a surety for chaser for his debt, when the mortgagor holds an obligation which will support such judgment. His right is simply the right of substitution, permitting a new creditor to take the place of an old one, and allowing the new one to succeed to the rights of the old one." Klapworth v. Dressler, 13 N. J. Eq. 62; s. c., 78 Am. Dec. 69; Crowell v. Currier, 27 N. J. Eq. 152; Mount v. Van Ness, 33 N. J. Eq. 262; Biddel v. Brizzolara, 64 Cal. 354; *Booth v. Connecticut Mut. L. But in some States the mortgagee sues at law. Urquhart v. Brayton, 12 R. I. 169, where the court says: "This is equivalent to regarding the transaction as a novation, or if not, we think it may be so regarded. The case stands thus: B is indebted to A; B sells land to C, who agrees, instead of paying the price in full, to assume the debt or to become A's debtor, in lieu of B. If A were present assenting, the novation would be concluded on the instant, but A, being absent, learns of the agreement afterward, and assents to it by bringing his action. Why may we not hold the novation consummated by the assent so given as effectually as if given on the instant? If it be said that in order to create a privity between A and C, the assent must be mutual, the answer is that C had already assented, and there was nothing wanting but A's assent to perfect the novation." 1. Chattel Mortgage.—Where a mortgagee in a chattel mortgage promised, in consideration of a surrender and delivery to him, of the mortgaged property by the mortgagor, to pay the amount due on a second mortgage to the holder thereof, held, a valid agreement which might be enforced by such mortgagee. Pulliam v. Adamson, 43 Minn. 511; Kollock v. Parcher, 52 Wis.

393; Pape v. Porter, 33 Fed. Rep. 7. But there must be a distinct agreement. Hamill v. Gillespie, 48 N. Y. 556.

2. This rule rests "upon the broader and more satisfactory basis, that the law, operating upon the acts of the parties, creates the duty, establishes the privity, and implies the promise and obligation upon which the action is founded. In the case at bar, the agreement, though made between Parmelee and Dyer, is in express terms to pay the rent to Brewer, the plaintiff, and he is the party to be benefited thereby. It is made upon a valid consideration; being the surrender of the shop by the former, and its occupation by the latter. To make the defendant liable, no consideration need move as between him and the present plaintiff. Nor is it any objection to the plaintiff's right to recover, that Parmelee might also have a remedy on the contract in case the plaintiff should not elect to adopt it. It does not operate to extinguish Parmelee's liability. The plaintiff, if he so elects, can seek his remedy on the agreement, or may rely on the original undertaking of his lessee, in which latter case, Parmelee could enforce the contract against the defendant. These principles are all well settled in the adjudged cases, and it is unnecessary to enlarge upon them." Brewer v. Dyer, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 337; cf. Mellen v. Whipple, 1 Gray (Mass.) 317; Bedford v. Terhune, 30 N. Y. 453; 86 Am. Dec. 394; Graves v. Porter, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 592; Davis v. Morris, 36 N. Y. 569; *Cox v. Where A leased premises to B, who assigned his lease to C, and C agreed with A to pay him the rent, it was held that this was not a novation, as C was under no liability to B to pay him rent. Meister v. Birney, 24 Mich. 435.

the latter, the cases allow the party benefited to sue the promisee.¹

7. The Statute of Frauds.—The statute of frauds is no defence to a suit by a third person on a contract made for his benefit, as it is held that the promisee does not agree to pay the debt of another, but is making a direct promise to pay his own debt.²

"Even here, however, the effect is to make a contract for the parties different from that which they intended. Certainly there is no express contract of suretyship; contrary to the fact, the court must assume a contract created not by the acts of the parties, but by the operation of a rule of law on those acts. The promisor agrees with the promisee to pay the debt, and thereby, as between themselves, becomes the principal debtor. But the promisee, not being discharged, is also liable to the third person. If compelled to pay, he is a surety only in this, that he has a right to call upon the promisor to indemnify him. But all this does not affect the third person and he is not a party to it. What interest has he in the transaction, and in what consists his equity? To make that relationship available to him, it is necessary not only to bring him into contract relations with other parties, but also to reverse the positions of principal and surety, and make the promisor the surety instead of the principal. According to what rule of law can this be done? By what process of reasoning can it be vindicated? This doctrine and the exception to the rule cannot both stand." 23 Am. L. Reg., N. S. 1.

Where the promise is to pay money in consideration of some benefit received by the promisor, it makes no difference that the promise is parol, or that incidentally the payment will extinguish an obligation of the promise to the third person. *Burkham v. In Fullam v. Adams, 37 Vt. 391, POLAND, C. J., referring to this class of cases, says: "And we believe it will be found in all the cases now regarded as sound, where it has been held that a parol promise to pay the debt of another is binding, the promisor held in his hand funds, securities and property of the debtor, devoted to the payment of the debt, and his promise to pay attaches upon his obligation or duty growing out of the receipt of the fund . . . The party making the promise holds the funds of the debtor for the purpose of paying his debt, and, as between him and the debtor, it is his duty to pay the debt, so that when he promises the creditor to pay it, in substance he promises to pay his own debt, and not that of another." A being indebted to B, C verbally promised B to pay him the amount and charged it to A, without his consent. Held, that as B had not released or assigned his debt,

VII. NOVATION AS AFFECTED BY THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS.—In a novation between three or more parties where a debtor agrees to pay the debt to a creditor of his own creditor and so discharge his debt to him, the substituted contract is not within the statute of frauds, if not in writing, as an agreement to answer for the debt of another. The debtor in such case makes a new contract on a valid consideration, and the debt, which it is claimed he has agreed to answer for, has been discharged by the novation.²

A son worked for his father and did work for which the father was indebted, and the defendant, in consideration of the son releasing the father from the debt, verbally promised to pay the son.

VIII. NOVATION IN INSURANCE.—An insurance company may, by the terms of its charter, reserve the right to assign its business and so relieve itself from liability on its policies.¹ If there is no such provision in the charter, whether such an assignment binds the insured is determinable only on the facts as to his acceptance of it.² Whether or not there is a novation in such case is a question of fact,³ but it is evident that all three parties, the old company, the new company, and the assured must assent to the arrangement.⁴ The assent of the assured may be inferred from his

Held that the promise was not within the statute and the defendant was bound. The court, per HOAR, J., said: "The plaintiff discharged the debt due to him from his father in consideration of the defendant's promise to pay him the amount due him. This promise was not a promise to pay the debt of another within the statute of frauds, but an original undertaking. The defendant promised to pay not as surety, or guarantor, but as the sole debtor; not as a collateral promise, but as a substituted promise. There was no debt of another as soon as the defendant's promise was made." Wood v. Corcoran, 1 Allen (Mass.) 405.

So when one thus undertaking agreed to "pay and guarantee" the debt, it was held that the word "guarantee" was not to be understood in a technical sense, but that the agreement was an absolute agreement to pay, and indebitatus assumpsit would lie. Packer v. Benton, 35 Conn. 343; s. c., 95 Am. Dec. 246. In this case BUTLER, J., said: "Here the contract was tripartite, between the debtor, a creditor, and a third person; and it contemplated the discharge of the original debtor, and a new obligation by the third party to the particular creditor. Such new obligation and indebtedness is not within the statute of frauds."

A, employed by T & Co. to haul timber to their mill, was promised by the defendants for whom T & Co. were manufacturing, that if he brought orders from T & Co. they would pay. Held a novation and not within the statute of frauds. Preston v. Young, 46 Mich. 103; s. c., 41 Am. Rep. 148. A wife bought a stove and then deserted her husband. She asked the dealer to take the stove back, but the husband needed it and promised to pay for it. Held, that his promise was not one to answer for his wife's debt. Palmer v. Witcherly, 15 Neb. 98.

If the original debt is not discharged, then the statute applies. Gunnels v. Stewart, 3 Brev. (S. Car.) 52; Jones v. Ballard, 2 Mills (Const. S. Car.) 113; Plummer v. Lyman, 49 Me. 229; *Richardson v. Where a surety who has paid a debt he has guaranteed, sues the principal, the original debt being discharged, the statute does not apply. Madden v. Floyd, 69 Ala. 221; Beal v. Brown, 13 Allen (Mass.) 114.

2. Conquest's Case, L. R., 1 Ch. Div. 334.

The burden of proof to show that a new policy taken on the surrender of a former one is a novation is on the party alleging it. McDonnell v. Alabama Gold Life Ins. Co., 85 Ala. 401. Although slight evidence is sufficient in the case of ordinary firms to show that a creditor who continues his dealings with incoming partners accepts the new firm as his debtors, instead of the old, yet strict proof will be required before it is held that a creditor of the company, under a special contract, has accepted the liability of another company with which the first is amalgamated. In re Family Endowment Soc., L. R., 5 Ch. App. 118. Per LORD HATHERLY.

subsequent acts, or acquiescence with knowledge of the facts, but his conduct must be unequivocal.¹ The subject of novation has

1. "Where on the amalgamation of two companies, notice is given to the policy holder of the fact, and in substance notice is given to him that he has his election whether he will choose to take a policy or liability of the new company in lieu of, and instead of, the policy of the original company, who were liable to him, even though he does not in terms assent to the novation by taking out a new policy, by having endorsed it, or by entering into an express agreement; yet, if he acts upon it and takes the benefits which he could only be entitled to receive upon the assumption that he had assented to it, that will be evidence on which the court may find, and, unless there is something to contradict it, ought to find, that he has agreed to take the liability of the new company in substitution for that of the old one." MEL- LISH, L. J., in Spencer's Case, L. R., 6 Ch. App. at p. 370.

Whether or not payment of premiums to the new company completes the novation does not seem to be clear. "In whatever way the circular may be worded, if it is such as to convey the information to the mind of the policy holder that he is to choose, and then, knowing that he has a choice, and that his choice is to be expressed by payment of his premiums in a particular way, he goes and pays them in that way, there would be enough to fix him." Conquest's Case, L. R., 1 Ch. Div. 334.

"It appears to me monstrous that a person having a contract of this kind is to be told that he has lost his right under his contract and must take such remedy as he can get from some other office, because he pays his premiums and takes receipts at the place where he is told to do so." JAMES, L. J., in Manchester etc. Life Assur. Co., L. R., 5 Ch. App. 640 at 649; Griffith's Case, L. R., 6 Ch. 347.

M effected a policy upon his life with the British Nation Life Assurance Association. The association subsequently was amalgamated with the European Society, and ceased to carry on business. Some time afterwards a memorandum, under the seal of the European Society, and signed by two of its directors, was endorsed on the policy declaring that the funds of the European Society, should be liable for the payment of the policy money, provided the future premiums were paid to the European Society. The subsequent premiums were accordingly paid to that society. Held, that there was a complete novation, and that on the winding-up of the two companies, M had no proof against the British Nation Association. Miller's Case, 3 L. R., Ch. Div. 391. In re Anchor Assur. Co., L. R., 5 Ch. App. 632; In re Medical, Invalid & Life Ins. Soc., L. R., 6 Ch. App. 362.

The payment of premiums for a long period of time will constitute a novation. Cocker's Case, L. R., 3 Ch. Div. 1 (15 years); National Provincial Life Assur. Soc., L. R., 9 Eq. 306; Here a claim for death was sent in.

If the new company endorses the policy, the payment of premiums constitutes a novation. Ex parte Blood, L. R., 9 Eq. 316; Hort's Case, L. R., 1 Ch. Div. 307; Miller's Case, L. R., 3 Ch. Div. 391.

Annuity.—An insurance company having transferred its business to another company, a person who had purchased an annuity from the former company declined to accept the liability of the latter company in lieu of his contract with the former; held that the receipt by him of payments in respect of his annuity from the latter company was not evidence of adoption by him of the transfer, or that he regarded that company in any other light than as the agent of the former company. India etc. L. Assur. Co., In re Dyke's Case, 29 W. R. 586; affirmed on appeal, 7 L. R., Ch. 651; 41 L. J., Ch. 601; 20 W. R. 790; 27 L. T., N. S. 191. In re Family Endowment Soc., L. R., 5 Ch. App. 118.

The receipt of a circular by a policy holder inviting him to elect to hold the assignee, and the payment of premiums to and acceptance of a bonus from the assignee, constitutes a novation. Spencer's Case, L. R., 6 Ch. App. 362; In re Times Life Assur. Co., L. R., 5 Ch. App. 381; In re Anchor Assur. Co., L. R., 5 Ch. App. 632.

But application to the assignee for endorsement of the policy, which was refused because the applicant declined to sign an assent to the transfer, coupled with taking receipts in the name of the come up in England, outside of the regular courts, in the proceedings in the winding up of the European and Albert companies under special acts of parliament. In the one case LORD CAIRNS, and in the other LORD WESTBURY, and later LORD ROMILLY acted as arbitrator, holding different views.¹ The question of novation in insurance does not seem to have, as yet, arisen in America.

But a policy holder is held when he makes application to the assignee in case of loss as the sole debtor. In re National Provincial L. Assur. Soc., L. R., 9 Eq. 306.

The position of the policy holder, whether a lawyer or business man, or woman, officer, or clergyman, is material in determining whether he has assented to the transfer. Conquest's Case, L. R., 1 Ch. Div. 334.

When by the terms of the policy the debt is to be paid out of the assets of the company, more evidence is necessary to show a novation than where a simple relation of debtor and creditor exists. In re Anchor Assur. Co., L. R., 5 Ch. App. 632.

A mutual society handed over its funds to another society which agreed to assume its liabilities. The assent of the insured was held to constitute a novation. In re Merchants' etc. Assur. Soc., L. R., 9 Eq. 694; In re United Ports etc. Ins. Co., L. R., 16 Eq. 354; cf. Harman's Case, L. R., 1 Ch. Div. 326.

1. LORD CAIRNS held that if a policy holder, after receiving notice of an amalgamation, paid his premium to the new company, he accepted the latter as his contractor and made what is called a novation of the contract, unless he showed expressly that the payments were made to them as agents of the original company.

LORD WESTBURY, however, held that it must affirmatively appear that the new company had the corporate power to assume the contracts of the old company; that the fact of transfer was communicated to the assured, with an offer to him to accept either a new policy or an assumption of the old one, and that his acceptance of the offer must be proved by "acts which unequivocally denote his understanding and acceptance of that proposal;" that there must be evidence of an intention to make a new contract as plainly as it it were expressed in writing; that the mere act of payment of the premium to the new company is equivocal, and that taking a receipt from the new company proves nothing, and that in the absence of evidence of other acts, those alone do not show a novation. LORD WESTBURY expressed the difference between his view and that of LORD CAIRN'S, as follows: "There is no difference between us in the principle of law that governs these cases: LORD CAIRNS held it to be a question of novation, and that novation was a question of fact. I hold also that novation is a question of intention, and that intention is a fact which must be proved. I will not admit of presumptions and inferences as the media from which I will infer that intention, any more than Justinian did when he referred to the uncertainty and difficulty that clouded the subject as long as it was possible to introduce those presumptions, and he superseded the presumptions by a plain and direct rule." Blundell's Case (L. T., E. A.), p. 45.

The whole matter is now regulated in England by statute. Life Insurance act, 1872, § 7, which is as follows: "Where a company, either before or after the passing of this act, has transferred its business or has amalgamated with another company, no policy holder in the first named company, who shall pay to the other company the premiums accruing due in respect of his policy, shall by reason of any such payment made after the passing of this act, or by reason of any other act done after the passing of this act, be deemed to have abandoned any claim which he would have had against the first mentioned company, on due payment of premiums to such company, or to have accepted in lieu thereof the liability of the other company, unless such abandonment and acceptance have been signified by some writing signed by him or by his agent lawfully authorized." This adopts the rule of

IX. NOVATION AS APPLIED TO PARTNERSHIP.—The doctrine of novation is applied to the law of partnership when a partner retires from the firm, or a new partner is taken in, or both such events take place, and the question arises whether the new firm, or continuing partner as the case may be, is solely responsible to a creditor for the debt of the old firm incurred prior to the change in the partnership.¹

1. Liability of Retiring Partner.—In the case of a retiring partner, it is well settled that he is not discharged from liability for the debts of the old firm even though the continuing partner, or the new firm, agrees with him to pay them, and, in general, the creditor is not to be affected or given any new rights, by an arrangement by, or between, his debtors to which he is not a party.² But, the civil law, Justinian III, tit. XXIX, par. 3.

These cases of LORDS CAIRNS and WESTBURY are all reported in full in Reilly's Report of the arbitration, and are stated very fully in Crawley's Life Insurance (London 1882), pp. 227-234. See also Bliss on Life Insurance (2nd ed.), § 424, note.

1. Let it be supposed that a firm of three members, A, B and C, is indebted to D; that A retires, and B and C either alone, or together with a new partner, E, take upon themselves the liabilities of the old firm. D's right to obtain payment from A, B and C is not affected by the above arrangement, and A does not cease to be liable to him for the debt in question. But if after A's retirement, D accepts as his sole debtors B and C, or B, C and E (if E enters the firm), then A's liability will have ceased and D must look for payment to B and C, or to B, C and E, as the case may be. When, therefore, a partner has retired, and a creditor of the firm continues to deal with the continuing partners, and such other persons, if any, as may have become associated with them in partnership, it is of great importance to ascertain whether the creditor has or has not accepted the new firm as his debtors in lieu of the old firm. If he has, the retired partner's liability will have ceased, whilst if he has not, it will still continue.

2 Lindley on Partnership 239 (2nd Am. ed.).

2. "It frequently happens that, upon the retirement of one partner, the remaining partners undertake to pay the debts, and to secure the credits of the firm. This is a mere matter of private arrangement and agreement between the partners, and can in no respect be admitted to vary the rights of the existing creditors of the firm. But in all cases of this sort, it may be stated, as a general doctrine, that if the arrangement is made known to a creditor and he assents to it, and by his subsequent act or conduct, or binding contract, he agrees to consider the remaining partners as his exclusive debtors, he may lose all right and claim against the retiring partner, especially if the retiring partner will sustain a prejudice, and the creditor will receive a benefit from such act, conduct, or contract."

Story, Partnership, § 158. Smith v. Jameson, 5 T. R. 601; Rogers v. Maw, 4 D. & L. 66; Dickenson v. Lockyer, 4 Ves. 36; Cummins v. Cummins, 8 Ir. Eq. 723. Harris v. Lindsay, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 271.

In the following cases a new partner had come in and agreed to assume the debts with the others. Vere v. Ashley, 10 B. & C. 288; Lee v. Fontaine, 10 Ala. 755; s. c., 44 Am. Dec. 505; Hicks v. Wyatt, 23 Ark. 55 (put on ground of "want of privity of contract"); Goode now v. Jones, 75 Ill. 48; Locke v. Hall, 9 Me. 133; Manny v. Frazier, 27 Mo. 419; Parmelee v. Wiggernhorn, 6 Neb. 322; Morehead v. Wriston, 73 N. Car. 398; Torrens v. Campbell, 74 Pa. St. 470; Kountz v. Holthouse, 85 Pa. St. 235; Shoemaker Piano Mfg. Co. v. Bernard, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 358, McKeand v. Mortimore, 11 U. C., Q. B. 428. In Shoemaker v. King, 40 Pa. St. 107. a firm sold all its assets to A who agreed to pay the firm debts, but it was held that the creditors of the firm had thereby no right of action against him. So in bankruptcy, where a new partner joins the firm on an agreement that the new firm shall assume the debts of the old, a creditor who has not assented to the arrangement cannot prove against the new firm for a debt due from the old. Ex parte Williams, Buck 13; Ex parte Freeman, Buck 471; Ex parte Fry, 1 G. & J. 96; Ex parte Parker, 2 M. D. & D. 511; Ex parte Peele, 6 Ves. 602. In In re Isaacs, 3 Sawy. (U. S.) 35, two traders agreed to unite their stocks in trade and to convert the separate business debts into firm debts. It was held that this would not entitle a separate creditor who had not acceded to the arrangement to prove in bankruptcy against the firm assets. The court says (dissenting views): "I am unable to see why a promise made by one partner to another, that he will hold himself jointly liable for the separate debt of the latter, may not, on the same principle, be availed of by the creditor. Why should evidence of the assent of the latter be exacted (and it is admitted that slight evidence will be sufficient, as was the case in Ex parte Kedie, 2 Deac. & Ch. 32), when that assent would in no case be withheld as the only effect of the arrangement would be to give to the creditor the security of the firm liability and that of the other partner, in addition to the liability of the partner with whom he had already contracted . . . But whatever may be said of the justice of the rule, I consider it too firmly established for me, at least, to depart from . . . If I have ventured to doubt the soundness of the rule thus laid down, it is because it has appeared to me that sufficient attention has not been given to the distinction between the cases where the creditor is supposed to have relinquished the old liability and accepted a new and substituted liability in its stead, and those where a new and additional liability has been created without impairing the old. In the former his assent is evidently necessary; in the latter, it seems to me it should be presumed, and he should be allowed the advantage of the promise made between third persons for his benefit. And in this view I have at least the countenance of MR. J. DILLON." In re Downing, 3 N. B. R. 182. But see Jones v. Bartlett, 50 Wis. 589.

The same rule holds where there is no new partner, but on the retirement of one partner, the others agree to assume and pay the debts of the old firm. Ex parte Bradbury, 4 Deac. 202. Robb v. Mudge, 14 Gray (Mass.) 534; Fowle v. Torrey, 31 Mass. 289; Ayres

v. Gallup, 44 Mich. 13; Spaunhorst v. Link, 46 Mo. 197; Merrill v. Green, 55 N. Y. 270.

A partnership debt is not provable against the private estate of one of the partners, who has received an assignment of all the partnership property and executed a bond to his retiring partner to assume and pay the partnership debts, without evidence of an express or implied consent by him to pay the same to the creditor as his private debt; and notice by the creditor of his election to treat it as a private debt is not sufficient. Wild v. Dean, 3 Allen (Mass.) 579.

A, one of the two partners, sold out to the other B, who agreed to assume all the firm debts and C joined as surety in a written guaranty for this purpose. D, a creditor of the firm, being unable to collect his debt from either A or B, brought suit against C on his guaranty; held, that the action could not be maintained as there was no privity of contract between C and D. Campbell v. Lacock, 40 Pa. St. 448.

Creditor Who Has Not Assented May Sue.—Some jurisdictions repudiate this rule and hold that an agreement between partners to assume debts of a prior firm enures to the benefit of a creditor of the prior firm who can sue the assuming partner or partners without any evidence of his assent to such an arrangement. Where there is no new partner. Warren v. Farmer, 100 Ind. 593; Bays v. Conner, 105 Ind. 415; Hardy v. Blazer, 29 Ind. 226; s. c., 92 Am. Dec. 347; Powers v. Fletcher, 84 Ind. 154; Hood v. Spencer, 4 McLean (U. S.) 168. Such an agreement is not within the statute of frauds. Haggerty v. Johnston, 48 Ind. 41. And see Hoyt v. Murphy, 18 Ala. 316, where a set-off was allowed. So in bankruptcy where one partner takes the assets and assumes the firm debts, the firm creditors are allowed to prove pari passu with the separate creditors of such partner. In re Lloyd, 22 Fed. Rep. 88; In re Collier, 12 Nat. Bank Reg. 266; In re Long, 7 Ben. (U. S.) 141; s. c., 9 Nat. Bank Reg. 227; In re Rice, 9 Nat. Bank Reg. 373.

The same is held where a new partner is taken in and the new firm assumes the old debts. Poole v. Hintrager, 60 Iowa 180.

Where A borrowed money and bought goods which were put in as assets in a firm of A and B then formed, the court held the firm for the debt, it considering that there was proof that B understood that the debts that A owed for goods brought into the firm were to be paid out of the partnership funds. Colt v. Wilder, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 484.

W purchased a half interest in the business of F, with whom he formed a copartnership, and thus acquired an interest in the assets to which the plaintiff had a right to look for the satisfaction of a debt due to him from F. As a part of the consideration for his purchase, W promised F to pay one-half of the latter's indebtedness to the plaintiff. Held, that this promise being for the benefit of the plaintiff, it enures to him by equitable subrogation, and he can maintain an action upon it against W. Ringo v. Wing, 49 Ark. 457. And vide Smead v. Lacey, 1 Disney (Ohio) 239.

Limitation of This Doctrine.—Elsewhere this doctrine is limited to cases where the partner or firm that assumes the debts also takes the assets, which should be held for the debts. Arnold v. Nichols, 64 N. Y. 117; Turner v. Joycox, 40 N. Y. 470; and cf. Merrill v. Green, 55 N. Y. 270; Wheat v. Rice, 97 N. Y. 296. And see also Torrans v. Campbell, 74 Pa. St. 470; Kountz v. Holthouse, 85 Pa. St. 235; Hopkins v. Johnson, 2 La. An. 842; Marsh v. Bennett, 5 McLean (U. S.) 117. In McKillip v. Cattle, 12 Neb. 477, it was held that where one partner took the assets and assumed the debts under a decree of court, he was bound to the creditor on the ground that the partner could not take the property without complying with the conditions. In Sedam v. Williams, 4 McLean (U. S.) 51, it was held that the partner taking the assets and assuming the liabilities was a trustee for the creditors and the retired partner, and the creditors might avail themselves of a mortgage given to the retired partner to secure him.

An agreement between a retiring partner and his co-partners that the latter will take the assets and assume the debts with them constitutes the new firm a trustee of the assets for the benefit of the creditors of the old firm, and new creditors must be postponed to them; and the statute of limitations does not apply. Bowman v. Spalding (Ky. 1887), 2 S. W. Rep. 911.

1. It would seem that the right to sue the new firm is not necessarily inconsistent with the right to hold the retired partner or the old firm. Harris v. Farwell, 15 Beav. 31; Story Part., § 369; Collyer Part., § 767. And see In re Isaacs, 3 Sawy. (U. S.) 35; Kirwan v. Kirwan, 2 C. & M. 617; Daniel v. Cross, 3 Ves. 277; Fergusson v. Fyffe, 8 C. & Fin. 121; Fogarty v. Cullen, 49 N. Y. Sup. Ct. 397.

Where A of B & Co. retired and C took his place, but the firm name was unchanged and no notice of dissolution was given, and an old customer, ignorant of the change, sold goods to the new firm; held that the old firm was liable by estoppel, and the new firm on the facts, but there could not be a joint liability and the creditor must elect. Scarf v. Jardine, L. R., 7 App. Cas. 350.

2. Assent of Creditor.—1. There is no a priori presumption to the effect that the creditors of the firm do, on the retirement of a partner, enter into any agreement to discharge him from liability.

"2. An agreement by a creditor of several persons, liable to him jointly, to discharge one or more of them and look only to the others, is not necessarily invalid for want of consideration.

"3. Except under special circumstances, a creditor who releases one partner discharges all. Consequently, if a creditor discharges a retired partner and acquires no fresh right to obtain payment from the others, either alone or with a new partner, the creditor will be altogether remediless. One test, therefore, to determine whether a retired partner has been discharged is to see whether the creditor has obtained a new right to demand payment; for if he has not, no discharge can possibly be made out by any evidence which fails to establish an extinguishment of the creditor's demand altogether." 2 Lindley Partnership, p. 241 (5th ed.).

Consideration.—It was formerly held in England that although the creditor to hold the continuing partner take the assets and agree to debts, yet there was no consideration or such agreement, and retired partner is not discharged. Lodge v. B. & Ald. 611; David v. B. & C. 196; s. c., 7 D. & R. 690. Thomas v. Shilliben, 1 M. & W. 100. And these cases have been followed in a few cases in America. Burt, 68 Iowa 716; Chase v. Burt, 30 Me. 412. And see Wildesden, 4 Met. (Mass.) 12, where a debtor with the consent of the creditor submitted to the creditor joint liability with the request that they be taken off his individual credit, and he paid with the bills drawn on the account, and the creditor replied "I had received the letter and the contents," it was held that he was not thereby released the other and that there would have been consideration for such an agreement if it been made.

Early English cases were criticized in Thompson v. Percival, 10 Q. B. 925, where DENMAN, C. J., said: "There was abundant evidence in Ellice to go to the jury, and in Alexander, 2 M. & W. 483, B. said: 'I apprehend the law to be settled, that if one partner goes out of a firm and another comes in, the old firm may, by consent of the three parties, the creditor, the old firm, and the new firm, be transferred to the new firm. In David v. B. & C. the retired partner was held liable. The court was substituted for a new firm in that case, and I much doubt whether twelve merchants would have done it as the court did.'" See van v. Kirwan, 2 C. & M. 617; Backus v. Low, 20 N. Y. 204. Where the court said: "It is quite true that the obligation of two joint debtors, substituted for that of both, affords no new consideration to the creditor. But if one of the debtors agree to surrender and does so to the other his interest in the debt and funds which they own, and an agreement of the creditor to release him and look to the other debtor is founded on that consideration." Ault, 7 Ex. 669, explains the nature of the consideration for such an agreement. ALDERMAN said: "It is demonstrable that the sole security of A may be taken for the joint security of B; for, by accepting the sole security of A, instead of the joint security of both debtors, the creditor possesses a legal remedy against A during his lifetime, and against his assets after his death, and no security whatever against B. Now as to the case where the security is joint—after the death of A, there exists a legal liability of B, and no legal liability of A's assets; but an equitable remedy against the assets of A, subject to the necessity of making B a party to a suit in equity. Now these two securities are different things, and therefore a bargain to take the one for the other is good." PARKE, B., said in course of the argument: "The plaintiff agrees to take the security of one partner instead of that of both. She is at liberty to enter into that arrangement, for the court cannot enquire into the value of the consideration. If there be any consideration whatever, it will support an agreement." Now although £10 would be no satisfaction for a debt of £100, yet an article of much less value than £10 may be given and received in satisfaction of such a debt. It may at first appear paradoxical, but the sole responsibility of one of many partners may be of greater value than that of all, for you may thereby obtain the security of his real and personal estate." The American cases in general agree with the modern English view. Collyer v. Moulton, 9 R. I. 90.

It was agreed between two partners and creditor of the firm, that it should be submitted to arbitrators to divide and appropriate the assets of the firm as they deemed fit, for the payment of debts, and to determine which of the partners should pay the creditor, and that the other should be discharged. Held, that such submission constitutes a sufficient consideration for the creditor's agreement, and that an award discharging one of the partners is a bar to an action against him. Backus v. Fobes, 20 N. Y. 204.

It is essential, however, that the creditor be a party to the agreement, or at least show by his conduct that he assents to it; otherwise, the agreement between the debtors is res inter alios. Hayes v. Knox, 41 Mich. 529; Rawson v. Taylor, 30 Ohio St. 389; s. c., 27 Am. Rep. 464. In these two cases, the creditor was not a party to the agreement and so was not allowed to recover. Rice v. Wolff, 65 Wis. 1.

A and B gave notes for their firm debt. C joined the firm, which then

Such assent or agreement may be either express,¹ or implied from the subsequent acts or conduct of the creditor, although neither the failure of the creditor to demand payment of the retired partner for a period of time less than that prescribed as a bar by the statute of limitations, nor a demand for payment from the new firm or continuing partner, nor the receipt of interest, nor even a partial payment of the debt by the new firm, nor all these facts combined necessarily establish such assent.² It is was styled A, B & Co. A then retired, and B and C gave him a bond to pay the debts of the firm of A, B & Co. A was obliged to pay one of the notes, and sued on this bond. It was held that he could not recover, as the debts of A and B were not covered by the bond until the creditors had agreed to the substitution. Childs v. Walker, 2 Allen (Mass.) 259. In re Stewart, 62 Iowa 614; Lisso v. Navra, 34 La. An. 1111; Laucks v. Martin, 20 W. N. C. (Pa.) 93; Luddington v. Bell, 77 N. Y. 138; s. c., 33 Am. Rep. 601. It is not enough that one member has retired with assent of creditor and transferred all his interest in the firm to the other partners. Clark v. Billings, 59 Ind. 508.

A promise of the vendor of goods to a firm to release the retiring partner from further liability and to look to the other partner alone for payment, must, in order to be binding, be founded on some new consideration; and where it is made after the dissolution, and not as an inducement to or consideration of it, and no new partner is introduced into the firm or assumes liability for the debt, and no different or additional security therefor is given, and a note already given and not surrendered or any new note given, and no change is made in the form, terms or time of the debt, and no other fact appears than the dissolution and the agreement of the partners, the promise is a mere nudum pactum. Eagle Mfg. Co. v. Jennings, 29 Kan. 657; s. c., 44 Am. Rep. 668. And see Walstrom v. Hopkins, 103 Pa. St. 118.

"But if the other partner promise the creditor to assume and pay the entire debt, and the creditor promises to look to him alone, a substitution of debtors is affected, and the other partner is released. This is founded on the doctrine that the sole liability of one of two debtors may, under many circumstances, be more beneficial and convenient than the joint liability of two, and therefore the change is founded upon a valuable consideration; and whether it was actually a benefit in each particular case will not be looked into, but the agreement will be sustained. 1 Bates on Partnership, § 505.

1. A verbal agreement is sufficient. Glover v. First Universalist Parish of the Dowagiac, 48 Mich. 595; Ex parte Lane, De Gex 300; Files v. McLeod, 14 Ala. 611; Durham v. Manrow, 2 N. Y. 541; Aikin v. Duren, 2 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 370; Rice v. Barry, 2 Cranch (C. C.) 447; Howes v. Martin, 1 Esp. 162; Stephens v. Squire, 5 Mod. 205; Hopkins v. Carr, 31 Ind. 260. And see Schindler v. Euell, 45 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 33.

2. Assent.—Hall v. Jones, 56 Ala. 493. "So, if the creditor should give up the securities of the old firm, and take those of the new firm in lieu thereof, or should give a prolonged credit to the new firm for the old debt, receiving from the latter in consideration thereof an additional interest or a new security; in all such cases, the retiring partner would be discharged. But the mere fact of the creditor's taking an additional security from the new firm, without surrendering the old, or of his receiving interest from the new firm without varying from that due on the old debt, or of his acquiescing in delay without contracting upon any new consideration to prolong the credit, will not absolve the retiring partner from his original responsibility." Story, Partnership, § 158.

Hayes v. Knox, 41 Mich. 529. "The plaintiff had money deposited with a firm composed of A, B and C, and annual accounts were rendered him. B and C successively retired and A took in K as a new partner, who put in much new capital. The plaintiff's account was transferred to the new firm and he disclaimed any right against the retiring partners. Annual accounts were continued and the plaintiff was paid interest and part of his principal

Where, after the dissolution of a firm in which the continuing partner, A, had assumed the firm debts, a creditor stated his account of firm debts and at the same time stated his account against A for his separate dealings with him, but included a firm debt in it, it was held that the retired partner was not thereby discharged, especially where he had given a note by way of security or satisfaction of such debt. Averill v. Lyman, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 346.

Interest.—The retired partner is not discharged where the new firm pays interest on the debt to the creditor, either at the new or the old rate. Hall v. Jones, 56 Ala. 493; Hawk v. Johnson, 34 Pitts. L. J. 213; Heath v. Percival, 1 P. Wms. 682; s. c., 1 Str. 403; Harris v. Farwell, 15 Beav. 31; Ex parte Parker, 2 Mont. D. & D. 511; Beale v. Moulis, 10 Q. Chute*, 3 N. Y. Supp. 102.

There must be a promise to the creditor on a new consideration or a release of the prior partner or firm. Morris v. Marqueze, 74 Ga. 86; Goodenow v. Jones, 75 Ill. 48; Shoemaker v. King, 40 Pa. St. 107, where it was said: "While the old debt remains, the new contract cannot be substituted, but only a collateral one, a promise to pay another's debt, and it is forbidden by the statute as a cause of action." And see Wallace v. Freeman, 25 Tex. Supp. 91; White v. Thieleus, 106 Pa. St. 173. Mere knowledge and approval is not enough. Birkitt v. McGuire, 7 U. C. App. 53; s. c., 31 U. C., C. P. 430.

Estoppel.—The new firm or continuing partner may so conduct themselves that they will be estopped to deny a liability to the creditor. McCracken v. Milhous, 7 Ill. App. 169; Lucas v. Coulter, 104 Ind. 81; Beall v. Poole, 27 Md. 645; Urdike v. Doyle, 7 R. I. 446; Shoemaker Piano Mfg. Co. v. Bernard, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 358, where the new firm allowed the old debts to be entered on the books of the new firm. And see Davison v. Donaldson, 9 Q. B. D. 623; Featherstone v. Hunt, 1 B. & C. 113 (a case of fraud). Rendering an account by the new firm with the old balance included in it does not make the new firm liable. Ex parte Parker, 2 M. D. & D. (Bank'cy) 381. Unless it was done at the creditor's suggestion. Then this is evidence of the adoption of the new firm by the creditor as his debtors, if they have assumed the debts of the old firm. Hine v. Beddome, 8 U. C., C. P. 381. But writing to a creditor, recognizing the debt and scheduling it as a firm debt shows an assumption. White v. Thielcus, 106 Pa. St. 173. And see Ex parte Parker, 2 Mont. D. & D. 146.

Merely crediting the new firm which has assumed the debts of the old with payments by them is not evidence of assent of the creditor. Hall v. Jones, 56 Ala. 493; Scull v. Alter, 16 N. J. L. 147. And see Botsford v. Kleinhaus, 29 Mich. 332. On this point, STORY says (Partn., § 157): "Where there is a cash account current between a firm and a customer, and the account is in favor of the latter, a retiring partner will be liable for the balance of this account, at the time of his retirement. But if the account be continued, the balance, the balance for which the retiring partner is liable, will be diminished by every payment which is made by the new firm, supposing such payment not to be appropriated to the discharge of any specific item, because, in such case, it is the first item on the debit side of the account which is discharged or reduced by the first item on the credit side."

Taking security from the new firm is not conclusive to release the retired partner. Thompson v. Percival, 5 B. & Ad. 925. The course of dealing may be looked at to show the intent of the parties, and if it is thus shown, it is not necessary to prove any agreement. Bill v. Barker, 16 Gray (Mass.) 62. Thus, acceptance of a dividend in insolvency on proof of a firm debt against the insolvent estate of a continuing partner who had assumed the firm debts is a bar to any action against the other partners, although in another State. Bucklin v. Bucklin, 97 Mass. 256. But see Bank of Wilmington v. Almond, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 169; Buxton v. Edwards, 134 Mass. 567. And see Regester v. Dodge, 19 Blatchf. (U. S.) 79; s. c., 6 Fed. Rep. 6. Contra, where it was held that proof of debt in bankruptcy against the new firm, and a delay of five years after the death of the retired partner to call upon his estate for payment, were held to constitute a discharge of the retired partner.

The pleadings and papers in a suit against a new firm are admissible in evidence to show an intention to release a retired partner. Baum v. Fryrear, 85 Mo. 151.

Where the sureties on a partnership note sign a renewal note signed by one partner on the assurance that it would be signed by the other partner, they can recover whatever they have paid on its account from all the partners, although it may have been signed by only one. McKee v. Hamilton, 33 Ohio St. 7.

A drew a bill on B, C & Co., which was accepted and by him negotiated. At maturity the bill was paid by a bill drawn on B alone, the firm having been dissolved. This bill, A, as endorser, had to take up, and it was held he had no action against the firm. Springer v. Shirley, 11 Me. 204.

A and B, partners, agreed to give C a commission if he would sell their goods to D. Pending negotiations, the firm was dissolved and B retired, A agreeing to assume all firm obligations. A then formed a partnership with E, and the new firm sold the goods directly to D. Held, that C could recover commission from A. Sinclair v. Galland, 8 Daly (N. Y.) 508.

1. Question for Jury.—"The law is this: When a creditor of a firm contracts or agrees with a new firm to take their security in discharge of that of the old, the retiring partner is discharged from any liability to pay the debt; but whether such a contract or agreement has or has not taken place is a fact to be submitted to a jury." Harris v. Farwell, 15 Beav. 31; Thompson v. Percival, 5 B. & Ad. 925; Hart v. Alexander, 2 M. & W. 484; Nightingale v. Chaffee, 11 R. I. 609; s. c., 23 Am. Rep. 531; Re Clap, 2 Low. (U. S.) 226; Backus v. Fobes, 20 N. Y. 204; Hayes v. Knox, 41 Mich. 529; Evans v. Drummond, 4 Esp. 89; Reed v. White, 5 Esp. 122. Where the creditor expressly refused to assent to the discharge of the retired partner, cirices are not to be taken against Adler v. Foster, 39 Mich. 87.

When one partner assigns part of the interest to A by an agreement containing in it the words "a partner in the firm" and the amount of one eighth of all its profits and losses from the time the partnership business," and such person is admitted by the firm as a member, he is a partner from the beginning and is liable for all debts. Eaton v. Mackey, 10 St. 452.

Cases hold that slight circumstances will be sufficient to justify the inference that the creditor has released the retired partner and accepted the new firm as his sole debtors. Shaw v. Cory, 105 Mass. 96. Where the facts are: "There was evidence that the defendants were the successors of from which only one partner remained, and this implies that they were jointly liable for its debts, had possession of its assets, and were carrying on the same business in the place. Under such circumstances, comparatively slight evidence tends to the inference that they assumed the debts of the old firm, when evidence is found in the fact that the plaintiff's account, which was paid and received by them without protest or objection, was wholly paid to the last firm, though containing items due from both con-

In this case, goods were sold to the A, B, C & Co. A retired and the plaintiff sold more goods to the continuing partners, who did business with A & Co. carrying on the same business. There was evidence that in a conversation lasting an hour when the plaintiff's account was presented and he signed therefor, B, a member of the firm was present, though he took no part in the conversation, and he kept the books and did not sell the goods. Held, that the jury were warranted in finding that he had assented to the making of the note.

Circumstances Enough.—"In the course of questions of this character, the courts have frequently held, that when the dissolution of an old firm has occurred and a new firm has agreed to assume the liabilities of the old firm, slight circumstances are required to justify finding an intention on the part of a creditor of the old firm, who knew of the dissolution and the assumption by the new firm, to accept the liability of the new firm in place of the old. In Ex parte Williams (Buck 13), the court speaking of such a case, says: "A very little will do." In In re Smith, Knight & Co. (L. R., 4 Ch. App. 671, LORD JUSTICE GIFFORD says: "There is no doubt whatever, that, if you have an old firm, and either a new partner is taken into it, or a new firm constituted, and the assets are taken over by that new firm, and the customer knowing all these circumstances, afterwards goes on and deals with the new firm, you infer, from slight circumstances, an assent on his part to accept the new firm as his debtors." In In re Family Endowment Soc. (L. R., 5 Ch. App. 518), speaking of a case very like the present, it was said that very slight evidence would be required to establish that the creditor had taken the liability of the new firm instead of the old. Regester v. Dodge, 19 Blatchf. (U. S.) 79; s. c., 6 Fed. Rep. 6.

In this case the plaintiff for several years, and until after the death of the retired partner, before bringing suit, and in the mean time, had accepted a dividend in bankruptcy from the estate of the new firm which had become insolvent. And see Citizen's National Bank v. Hine, 49 Conn. 236; Ex parte Kedie, 2 Deac. & Ch. 32; Ex parte Williams, Buck 13, per LORD ELDON. But where the creditor drew on the new firm and his drafts were refused, he was allowed to hold the retired partner. Skannel v. Taylor, 12 La. An. 773.

The burden of proof is on those who set up the extinguishment or release. Davis's Estate, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 530; s. c., 34 Am. Dec. 574; Kimberly's Appeal (Pa. 1886), 7 Atl. Rep. 75; Hall v. Jones, 56 Ala. 493.

Where the retired partner alleged that he had agreed with the agent of the creditor that a judgment against the firm should be in his control so that he could collect it from the continuing partner, who had assumed the firm debts, it was held that the burden was on him to show such an agreement, and under the facts of the case his property was liable for satisfaction of the judgment. Aiken v. Thompson, 43 Iowa 506.

The assent of the creditor is not had merely by a notification by him that he elects to hold the continuing partner, unless the former partners directly assent to this. The creditor must show what amounts to a contract. Wild v. Dean, 3 Allen (Mass.) 579.

2. Deceased Partner.—In the case of a deceased partner the creditor does not necessarily lose his right against the estate of such partner by continued dealings with the continuing partner, unless there is evidence of an intent to abandon his recourse on such estate.¹

1. Winter v. Innes, 4 Myl. & Cr. 101. And vide Devaynes v. Noble; 1 Mer. 616; Sleech's Case, 1 Mer. 539; Clayton's Case, 1 Mer. 572; Palmer's Case, 1 Mer. 623.

The New York law on this point is as follows: After the death of one partner, the surviving members of the firm alone are liable at law for the debts of the firm. Waydell v. Luer, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 410, per Lott, S. The creditor has merely an equitable recourse to the estate of the deceased partner upon showing that the surviving partners are insolvent or that he has exhausted his legal remedy against them. Lawrence v. Trustees of Lake etc. Orphan House, 2 Den. (N. Y.) 577; Van Riper v. Poppenhausen, 43 N. Y. 68; Pope v. Cole, 55 N. Y. 124; s. c., 14 Am. Rep. 198. The estate of the deceased partner is then a surety to the creditor for the payment of his debt by the survivors, and may avail itself when sued of any conduct of the creditor which violates its rights or suspends its remedies as a surety. Millerd v. Thorn, 56 N. Y. 402; Colgrove v. Tallman, 67 N. Y. 95; s. c., 23 Am. Rep. 90.

Where one of two partners dies and judgment is recovered against the surviving partner for a partnership debt, and he becomes a bankrupt before the judgment is satisfied, the executors of the other may be compelled in equity to make satisfaction. Storer v. Hinkley, Kirby (Conn.) 147. But the estate of the deceased partner cannot be reached while the surviving partner is solvent. Alsop v. Mather, 8 Conn. 584.

An attempt to obtain payment from the survivors is not sufficient evidence of an intent to abandon recourse to the estate of the retired partner, even though a judgment be obtained against the survivors. Jacomb v. Harwood, 2 Ves. 265; Buckingham v. Ludlum, 37 N. J. Eq. 137. So of partial payments from the survivor. Hammersley v. Lambert, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 508; Fogarty v. Cullen, 49 N. Y. Sup. Ct. 397.

So proof in insolvency, or bankruptcy against the continuing partner is not sufficient. Sleech's Case, 1 Mer.

570; Harris v. Farwell, 15 Beav. 31; and cf. Brown v. Gordon, 16 Beav. 302; Bilborough v. Holmes, 5 L. R., Ch. Div. 255.

If the creditor knows of the decease of the partner and allows his estate to be administered, he is precluded from claiming against it. Oakley v. Pasheller, 4 C. & Fin. 212; s. c., 10 Bli., N. S. 548. And see Swire v. Redman, 1 Q. B. Div. 536; Wilson v. Lloyd, L. R., 10 Q. B. 406 (discredited in Simpson v. Henning, L. R., 10 Q. B. 406). Brown v. Gordon, 16 Beav. 302, where the creditor was held to have lost his rights by sixteen years' delay.

An agreement to accept the new firm as sole debtors must be clearly proved. Bank v. Green, 40 Ohio St. 431; Leach v. Church, 15 Ohio St. 169; Fogarty v. Cullen, 49 N. Y. Sup. Ct. 397. But accepting a note of the new firm discharges the estate of the deceased. Citizen's Mut. Ins. Co. v. Ligon, 59 Miss. 305; Lewis v. Davidson, 39 Tex. 660.

Of course no dealing with the continuing partner induced by fraud can affect the creditor's rights. Plumer v. Gregory, 18 Eq. 621; Daniel v. Cross, 3 Ves. 277.

Note of Surviving Partner.—A note of the surviving partner given for the firm debt is not deemed payment unless such was the agreement. Thompson v. Briggs, 28 N. H. 40; McLane v. Spencer, 6 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 423; Leach v. Church, 15 Ohio St. 169; Titus v. Todd, 25 N. J. Eq. 458; Collier v. Leach, 29 Pa. St. 404; Boatmen's Sav. Ins. v. Mead, 52 Mo. 543 (in this case there was a special stipulation that the estate of the deceased should not be discharged).

But if the creditor is unaware of the death of the partner, or the dissolution of the firm, and the firm name is unchanged, a note given by the continuing partner is of course not an extinguishment of the debt. Mason v. Tiffany, 45 Ill. 392; Bernard v. Torrance, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 383; Buxton v. Edwards, 134 Mass. 567; Hill v. Marcy, 49 N. H. 265; First Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 73 N. Y. 593.

3. Liability of Incoming Partner.—It is equally well settled that a new partner coming into an existing firm is not liable for debts contracted by the firm before he entered it, without an agreement, express or implied with the creditor,¹ but he may become liable by an express promise or an assumption of the debt on proper consideration.² The presumption is against any such assumption, Liability of Widow.—If a widow goes on in her husband's place as a partner, and a contract is carried out from which she receives a benefit, the presumption is that she intended to assume his burdens. Frazer v. Howe, 106 Ill. 563. But see Serviss v. McDonnell, 107 N. Y. 260. If she gives a mortgage to secure certain firm debts, it is presumed that she intended to become liable for the debts, and the mortgage is good as against other creditors. Preusser v. Henshaw, 49 Iowa 41.

Under the Civil Code of Louisiana, a widow, even where she has accepted the succession of her husband without benefit of inventory, is not liable in solido with the surviving partners for the payment of a note made by a firm of which her husband was a member. Henderson v. Wadsworth, 115 U. S. 264.

1. "The doctrine is well established that an incoming partner is not liable for the debts incurred, nor upon contracts made before he entered the partnership, unless such liability is created by express contract, based upon a good consideration; and before the new firm can be made liable in any such case, there must be a novation, and the new contract must receive the consent of all the parties, and must have the effect to rescind and extinguish the original debt or contract, and create a new liability of debtor and creditor, or of contractors between the creditor or contractor and the new firm, and such new contract must be founded on some good consideration moving to the new firm." Parmalee v. Wiggenhorn, 6 Neb. 322; Atwood v. Lockhart, 4 McLean (C. C.) 350; Butler v. Henry, 48 Ark. 551; Ringo v. Wing, 49 Ark. 457; Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Hine, 49 Conn. 236; *Bryan v. A as A & Co., borrowed money from the plaintiff under an agreement to purchase and ship grain and turn the bills of lading to cover the advances made. He used the money in the purchase of grain, sold it, and used the proceeds as his contribution to the capital stock of a firm he formed with B and others. It was held that the plaintiff had no lien or equity on the grain so purchased which it could enforce, and could not follow the fund as a trust fund in the new firm, and that its only remedy was to proceed against A as an ordinary debtor, and attach or levy on his interest in the new firm. Bank v. Gray, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 459.

"It is not necessary that an incoming partner should do something in order to escape liability for the previous debts and obligations of his copartners, but on the contrary, it is necessary that he should do something in order to make himself liable for such debts and obligations. It is in fact necessary that the incoming partner should do something from which it may be inferred that he intends to assume, or that the new partnership shall assume the previous debts and obligations of his copartners." Gauss v. Hobbs, 18 Kan. 500.

Where the new member of the firm covenants with the retiring partner whose share he has purchased, to pay the latter's share of the firm debts, and the new firm has made payments on the plaintiff's claim, and the retiring partner had assigned to the plaintiff all claim he might have against the new member, it was held that the jury would be warranted in holding the new firm liable to the plaintiff. Osborn v. Osborn, 36 Mich. 48. And cf. also McCracken v. Milhous, 7 Ill. App. 169; Frazer v. Howe, 106 Ill. 563; Poole v. Hintrager, 60 Iowa 180.

1. Presumption.—An incoming partner (that is, a new partner coming into an existing firm) will not be liable in respect to debts contracted by the firm previously to his entering it. But although this is the clearly established doctrine, yet it does not follow that an incoming partner may not become liable for such debts by expressly assuming them upon a proper consideration, or otherwise dealing with the creditor in such manner as to create an implied obligation and duty to pay the same in common with the old firm. The presumption of law, indeed, is against any such liability; but the presumption, like many others, may be removed by due and satisfactory proofs of the contrary intention and agreement. Thus, for example, if the balance due from the old firm be, with the consent of the creditor and all of the new firm, carried to the debit of the new firm, the latter deriving a benefit therefrom as a credit or deposit, it is very clear that the new firm will be bound thereby and therefor, as their own debt. "A fortiori, the same rule will apply where it is an express stipulation of the partnership between the old firm and the incoming partner, that the new firm shall assume all the outstanding debts of the firm, and shall pay the same, and the creditor shall assent thereto and take the new firm as his debtors." Story Partn., § 152.

"The inference that a retired partner has been discharged is greatly facilitated by the circumstance that a new partner has joined the firm and become liable to the creditor in respect to the debt in question. But this is not necessarily conclusive, for there may be circumstances showing that such was not the intention of the parties. At the same time, in the absence of any such evidence, the acceptance by the creditor of the liability of a new partner will practically preclude him from afterwards having recourse to the retired partner." 2 Lindley on Partnership (5th ed.) 248.

The receipt of money by the new firm is sufficient to raise a presumption that the incoming partner made a parol contract binding himself to fulfil the covenants and conditions of the original contract, because the liability must rest on a novation, and a new contract receiving the express consent of all the parties, and which effects a rescission and extinguishment of the original contract. Parmalee v. Wiggernhorn, 6 Neb. 322. The mere act of joining the firm is not enough. Beall v. Poole, 27 Md. 645.

In Bracken v. Dillon, 64 Ga. 243; s. c., 37 Am. Rep. 70, the court say: "The jury must be satisfied from the evidence," but other cases hold slight evidence is sufficient to warrant the court in inferring that the new partner has assumed the debts, especially if he has received a benefit from them. Ex parte Peele, 6 Ves 602; Ex parte Jackson, 1 Ves. 131; Cross v. Burlington Nat. Bank, 17 Kan. 336; Wheat v.

on Books.—An entry on the f the new firm as a debt of the of a debt incurred by the old es on a new partner the knowl- it it is claimed that the debt be- the new firm to pay, and is : that it does so. *Cross v. St. 452.

The assumption of old debts by the new firm is inferable from the fact that the course of business of the new firm was to pay all debts indiscriminately without charging anything to the old firm, and no account of stock was taken when the new partner came in, and no change was made in the book-keeping. Smead v. Lacey, 1 Disney (Ohio) 239.

Fraud.—Where a new partner is induced to come in and assume the old debts by fraud, he can make any defence he could in a suit by a partner on the agreement to assume, for the creditor's rights are based on that agreement. Morris v. Marqueze, 74 Ga. 86; Torrens v. Campbell, 74 Pa. St. 470 (semble). But the new partner must repudiate at once on discovering the fraud, or he cannot take advantage of it. Arnold v. Nichols, 64 N. Y. 117. So an agree- ment to release a retired partner is not valid when induced by fraud. Clark v. Taylor, 68 Iowa 519.

Assent of Creditor.—It is too late for the creditor to assent after the new partner has retired from the firm. McKeand v. Mortimore, 11 U. C., Q. B. 428. Or after the bankruptcy of the new firm. Ex parte Freeman, Buck 471. Where the creditor was a lunatic, see Ex parte Parker, 2 Mont. D. & D. 511. But evidence of the willingness of the cred- itor to look to the new firm is not suf- ficient evidence of the intent to dis- charge the old firm. Gough v. Davies, 4 Price 200.

1. Assent of All Parties.—"Where it is established by satisfactory evidence that upon the accession of a new partner, a new promise has been made by the entire new firm, in respect of the old debt, with the consent of the old partners as well as of the creditor, it will amount to a novation of the debt, as it is called in the Roman law, and the new partner will be chargeable with the debt. But such an adoption or ratifi- cation of the new promise by the new partner must be clearly shown, other- wise it will not be obligatory upon him, and it cannot be inferred from the mere act of joining the partnership without other circumstances in aid of the infer- ence." Story Partn., § 153; Giddings v. Seevers, 24 Md. 363; Ex parte Gib- son, L. R., 4 Ch. 662; Rolfe v. Flower, L. R., 1 P. C. 27; s. c., 3 Moore P. C., N. S. 365.

ner alone to the creditor, where the original liability is not discharged, is within the statute of frauds.¹

4. Note of Continuing Partner.—Where, after the retirement or death of one partner, the continuing partner or partners give a note in payment of a debt of the prior firm, even though the note is made in the name of the old firm, the retired partner is not thereby discharged; in such case the note binds only the actual maker, and the liability of the prior firm is undisturbed,² unless partners on common counts will sustain proof that the debt was incurred by two of them, and that the other two subsequently joined the firm and the new firm agreed to pay. Beall v. Poole, 27 Md. 645.

1. Statute of Frauds.—Bracken v. Dillon, 64 Ga. 243; s. c., 37 Am. Rep. 70; Sternberg v. Callanan, 14 Iowa 251; cf. Poole v. Hintrager, 60 Iowa 180.

It is too late to raise the question after payments by the new firm on the old account. Mueller v. Wiebracht, 47 Mo. 468.

Ligon*, 59 Miss. 305; Torrey v. Baxter, 13 Vt. 452 (where a note of a third person was given by the firm to its creditor who was unable to enforce it through an agreement made between the maker and the firm). Miller v. Miller, 8 W. Va. 542 (renewal of a note is not payment). So where a retired partner confessed judgment on a note, the judgment binds him alone. McCleery v. Thompson, 25 W. N. C. (Pa.) 130. But a note by one partner, after dissolution given to parties who have had no notice of the dissolution, is good. Graves v. Merry, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 701; s. c., 16 Am. Dec. 471. In Fowler v. Richardson, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 508, it was held that the retiring partner was discharged as the old debt was extinguished, but the note binds only the party that gave it.

In a suit on such a note, the recovery is had on the original consideration. Perrin v. Keene, 19 Me. 355; s. c., 36 Am. Dec. 759; Burris v. Whitner, 3 S. Car. 510; Seward v. L'Estrange, 36 Tex. 295. Neither is the individual note of one partner after dissolution a payment of the firm debt without proof of an agreement. Swire v. Redman, 1 Q. B. Div. 536; Medberry v. Soper, 17 Kan. 369; Yarnell v. Anderson, 14 Mo. 619; Leabo v. Goode, 67 Mo. 126; Ellswagner v. Coleman, 7 Mo. App. 582; Leach v. Church, 15 Ohio St. 169 (a surviving partner); *Little v. And see Featherstone v. Hunt, 1 B. & C. 113. Where the note is considered as a higher security, there may be a merger. Isler v. Baker, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 85. Rep. 75. But mere neglect to surrender the firm note does not invalidate an agreement to accept an individual note in payment. Dages v. Lee, 20 W. Va. 584. Acts and declarations inconsistent with an intent to take the note merely as collateral may be shown. Bank v. Green, 40 Ohio St. 431. And see Hoopes v. McCann, 19 La. An. 201.

"The difference between the law of Massachusetts and that of England and most of the States of the Union, I understand to be merely this: That in the courts of this State (Massachusetts), a negotiable bill or note is taken to be a mere beneficial security than a book account, or any debt of that kind, the creditor to the paying partner, short of an agreement, express or implied, to take him as his debtor and to discharge the other partner, can place them in the situation of principal and surety, so as to discharge the retiring partner. To support a defence of this kind, such an agreement must be satisfactorily made out . . . But we do not mean to concede that where two persons are indebted by simple contract, and the note of one for the amount of the debt is taken by the creditor, it is in all cases necessary to the discharge of the other to provide an express agreement to accept the note in satisfaction of the original debt. The agreement may be inferred from the nature and operation of the new contract, or from circumstances clearly indicating that such was the intention of the parties." Harris v. Lindsay, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 271.

No agreement to discharge can be inferred when the creditor is ignorant of the retirement of the partner and the new notes are signed like the old. Bernard v. Torrance, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 383; Heroy v. Van Pelt, 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 60. And see Smith v. Turner, 9 Bush (Ky.) 417.

The question whether the note was taken in settlement or not is for the jury. Bowyer v. Knapp, 15 W. Va. 277.

If the evidence is conflicting as to whether the note of a former partner was taken as payment, the amount and value of the property taken by him when he agreed to assume the debts and his liability to pay the creditor are material evidence as to whether the creditor discharged the other partner. Gates v. Hughes, 44 Wis. 332. But the intent of the parties must be clear, Loveridge v. Larned, 7 Fed. Rep. 294.

Where a note of the new firm is accepted in payment of the prior debt, the promise to discharge the retired partner is based on a sufficient consideration, and is valid. Thompson v. Where a firm becomes a corporation, the promise of the president of the corporation to pay the debt is without consideration. Georgia Co. v. Castleberry, 43 Ga. 187.

1. "If the jury or the court should find as a fact that the money was borrowed by and loaned to the firm, and upon its credit, then the taking of the individual note of one member of the firm would not be a payment of such firm debt, unless it was affirmatively shown that such note was taken in payment of the same." *Hoeflinger v. Taking the note of the individual partner for goods sold to the firm is no discharge of the liability of the others unless an agreement to that effect is affirmatively shown. Folk v. Wilson, 21 Md. 538; s. c., 83 Am. Dec. 559. But recovery on the individual note may be shown. Allen v. Owens, 2 Spear L. (S. Car.) 70.

C loaned A of the firm of A & B, who were wheat buyers, $300 to buy wheat for the firm. A gave C his note. The firm was then dissolved, and A paid part of the note and gave a new note for the balance. The court held the original loan a partnership debt and C had a claim on it against the firm for the balance unpaid. Rose v. Baker, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 230.

But the novation is complete if the agreement of the parties is shown. Higgins v. Packard, 2 Hall (N. Y.) 547; Sheehy v. Mandeville, 6 Cranch (U. S.) 253; Andrews v. Smith, 9 Wend. (N. Where the partner gives his individual security as a mortgage the note is prima facie payment. Loveridge v. Larned, 7 Fed. Rep. 294; Baxter v. Bell, 86 N. Y. 195 (reversing 19 Hun N. Y. 367); Pierce v. Cameron, 7 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 114; Dillon v. Kauffman, where the creditor accepts the note of each partner for his proportional share of the firm debt, all joint liability of the firm is at an end.¹ Of course, taking the note of an ostensible partner is no discharge of a dormant partner, as the creditor cannot be held to have discharged what he did not know he had got.²

5. Note for Debt of a Prior Firm.—When a new partner joins a firm, and a note is given in the name of the new firm for a debt of the old concern without the assent of the new partner, he is not bound by the note, except in the hands of an innocent purchaser for value before the maturity of the note,³ but the new

It is held in some cases that the creditor who takes the paper of the continuing partner is held to assent to the change in the firm. Springer v. Shirley, 11 Mc. 294; Hoopes v. McCann, 19 La. An. 210 (where the note was taken in full settlement); Townsend v. Stevenson, 4 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 59 (here the firm note was surrendered); Evans v. Drummond, 4 Esp. 89. See contra, Keating v. Sherlock, 1 Cin. Sup. Ct. 257; Leach v. Church, 15 Ohio St. 169. But where the creditor expressly reserves his rights against the other partners the note is not payment. Bedford v. Deakin, 2 B & Ald. 210. Boatman's Sav. Inst. v. Mead, 52 Mo. 543.

1. Bowyer v. Knapp, 15 W. Va. 277; Arnold v. Camp, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 409; s. c., 7 Am. Dec. 328; Crooker v. Crooker, 52 Me. 267; s. c., 83 Am. Dec. 509; Ganet v. Taylor, 1 Esp. 117.

The creditor agreed with one partner that if he would give his note for one-half the debt and pay it, he would release him from the other half. This was held binding, the court assigning as reasons, that this arrangement gave the creditor equality in the separate estate with individual creditors, and the maker's time being extended he cannot sue his partner for contribution. Ludington v. Bell, 77 N. Y. 138; s. c., 38 Am. Rep. 601; reversing 11 J. & Sp. (N. Y.) 557. It may be doubted whether either of these two reasons is valid. And see Maxwell v. Day, 45 Ind. 509.

Where a firm of two assigned for the benefit of creditors, with a condition that the assignment should enure to those alone who would look to each partner individually for half the balance, and the creditors covenanted to look to each for the half only, this was held to be no severance of the debt until or unless the partners covenant individually to pay the half, and hence an action must be against both. Le Page v. McCrea, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 164; s. c., 19 Am. Dec. 469.

"Upon the like ground, if the creditor should receive the separate security of each partner for his own share of the debt, in satisfaction thereof, all joint liability of the partnership for the debt would be henceforth gone. The doctrine is equally true in the converse case where a partnership is a creditor and the separate and distinct security of the debtor is taken to each partner severally for his share of the debt." Story, Part., § 155.

But where, after the dissolution of the firm, the retiring partner desired a full discharge from his liability on a certain note, which the continuing partner had agreed to assume and pay, and paid the holder of the note one half of it under an agreement to discharge him entirely, this was held to be no defence in an action against him on the note. Fensler v. Prather, 43 Ind. 119.

Where the new note includes debts of the new and old firms together, the payee can recover to the extent of the valid consideration, if he acted in good faith in receiving the note. Guild v. Belcher, 119 Mass. 257; Wilson v. Lewis, 2 M. & G. 197.

"The firm of A & Co., with others, formed a new firm of B & Co., and A & Co. had a sum to its credit on the books of B & Co. D, a member of both firms, drew on B & Co. in favor of a creditor of A & Co. for an amount less than the credit on the books and accepted the draft in the name of the new firm. Held, the new firm was held for this was merely paying the debt of the new firm to the old. Hester v. Lumpkin, 4 Ala. 509.

1. Wilson v. Dozier, 58 Ga. 602; Cross v. Burlington Nat. Bank, 17 Kan. 336. If the new partner is present when the propriety of giving a note is discussed and he makes no objection, the jury are warranted in finding that he assented to the note. Shaw v. McGregory, 105 Mass. 96. Where a partner retired and a new partner was admitted to the firm, and an execution on a debt of the old firm was levied on the firm property, and the new firm receipted for the goods to the sheriff and promised to pay, they were held to pay the debt. Morrison v. Blodgett, 8 N. H. 238; s. c., 29 Am. Dec. 653.

A mere statement by the new partner that he had "no loose money about him but would like to give notes," for a debt of the old firm, is not an assent to such notes if given by another partner. Howell v. Sewing Machine Co., 12 Neb. 177.

2. Markham v. Hazen, 48 Ga. 570; Morris v. Marqueeze, 74 Ga. 86; Silverman v. Chase, 90 Ill. 37; Johnson v. Barry, 95 Ill. 483; Rice v. Wolff, 65 Wis. 1.

Where, however, no note is given, and the mere receipt of goods purchased by the prior firm or individual does not bind the incoming partner, and where one person makes a contract and afterwards takes a partner, and the benefit of the contract enures to the firm, the other contracting party has thereby no right of action against the firm, but only against the original contracting party. Fifield v. Adams, 3 Iowa 487; Froun v. Davis, 97 Ind. 401; Taggart v. Phelps, 10 Vt. 318; Barlow v. Wainwright, 22 Vt. 88; s. c., 52 Am. Dec. 79; Goodenow v. Jones, 75 Ill. 48; Adkins v. Arthur, 33 Tex. 431; Duncan v. Lewis, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 183; Brooke v. Evans, 5 Watts (Pa.) 196; Beale v. Moulds, 10 Q. B. 976.

A and B conversed about forming a partnership, but came to no agreement. A then bought goods from the plaintiff in the name of A & B. The partnership was then formed, and these goods were put in as part of the firm assets. It was held that B was not liable for them, and would not have been, had he learned the facts, for he was under no obligation to repudiate responsibility. Gause v. Hobbs, 18 Kan. 500.

But if the delivery is made to the new firm on joint account at the request of the original contractor, the incoming partner is liable, as his partner has power to bind him. Johnson v. Barry, 95 Ill. 483; Watt v. Kirby, 15 Ill. 200 (semble).

A bought cattle of B, but they were not delivered until after A and C had formed a partnership, and the cattle were taken, killed and sold, by the firm which received the price. Held, that the firm was liable to B, for A had authority as member of the firm to annul the original purchase and take the cattle on the firm account. Smith v. Hood, 4 Ill. App. 360. And where there is a continuing contract to furnish goods, the new firm is held for deliveries to it under the contract. Dyke v.

X. NOVATION AS APPLIED TO SURETYSHIP.—Where a contract, the performance of which has been guaranteed by a third person, is altered or modified by the principal parties to it without the consent of the surety, he is thereby discharged from liability on the contract. He is entitled to say, "non hæc in fœdera veni."¹ It

Brewer, 2 Car. & K. 828; Helsby v. Mears, 5 B. & C. 504 (as explained in Beale v. Moulis, 10 Q. B. 976); cf. Winston v. Taylor, 28 Mo. 82; s. c., 75 Am. Dec. 112, where cattle were delivered to a firm to be herded. One partner retired with the knowledge of the bailor, and some cattle were lost. In an attempt to hold the retired partner for the loss, it was held that as the bailment was for no definite time, the bailor must remove his property on the change in the firm, or look to the new firm. Directing the new firm to sell and remit was held a discharge of the retired partner.

So where a consignee of goods (a factor) takes a partner and the firm sells the goods, it will be held for the proceeds. Dix v. Otis, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 38; Shoemaker Piano Mfg. Co. v. Bernard, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 358.

But if a partner retires, he cannot exonerate himself by notifying the shipper that the new firm or continuing partners will receive the goods. Dean v. McFaul, 23 Mo. 76; Hall v. Jones, 56 Ala. 493.

Where the new firm agreed with the retiring partner to continue deliveries under a contract with the plaintiff and accepted payments from him, that gives the plaintiff no right of action against the new firm for breach of contract. Parmalee v. Wiggenhorn, 6 Neb. 322. And see Goodenow v. Jones, 75 Ill. 48.

Where goods were consigned to O for sale on commission, and before any order of sale was given, the consignor was notified that O had taken a partner P, and was led to believe in various ways that the firm had taken the consigned goods to sell, and then accepted the firm as consignees, it was held that, on the insolvency of O, P was estopped to show that O had converted the goods to his own use before the formation of the firm. Coleman v. Pearce, 26 Minn. 123.

Assumption of Lease.—Where one leases property and then forms a firm to occupy the property, the new partners do not become liable for the rent merely by occupying. Pierce v. Als- paugh, 83 N. Car. 258; Brooke v. Evans, 5 Watts (Pa.) 196; Barlow v. Wainwright, 22 Vt. 88; s. c., 52 Am. Dec. 79.

A written agreement between a lessee of a store and an incoming partner that the partners should be equally liable for all joint obligations does not include rent accruing after the dissolution of this firm, although there was an oral understanding that the new partner should be liable during the term of the lease. Durand v. Curtis, 57 N. Y. 7.

Where, however, the firm holds a lease and one partner assigns his interest to the other, the landlord can recover the whole rent from this partner. Dwight v. Mudge, 12 Gray (Mass.) 23. And see Lucas v. Coulter, 104 Ind. 81, where it was held that the new partner had adopted the lease by his conduct. And see also Wilgus v. Lewis, 8 Mo. App. 336. And Jackson v. Salmon, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 327, contra.

1. "Where, after breach of a contract, the performance of which is guaranteed, the creditor and principal debtor enter into a new contract, by which the amount of damages then due is made payable on a future day, and upon terms different from those imposed by the original agreement, such new contract presumptively merges the old. In such case, the new obligation, having been taken upon a sufficient consideration, becomes the exclusive medium by which the rights of the parties in respect to the payment of damages are to be ascertained. Such a contract is not collateral to the original, but in respect to the subject to which it appertains, it merges and supersedes the other . . . It thus appears that the sureties are sought to be held for the failure of their principal to discharge new obligations, not contemplated by the contract to secure the performance of which the bond was given. Into these are imported new terms. They suspended the right of the creditor to proceed against the principal to collect the original liability, in settlement of which they were given. Because they are new obligations, different in character makes no difference that the alteration may be for the benefit of the surety; he is entitled to stand on the terms of his agreement:¹ The alteration or change in the contract must be in some material point,² but, bearing that in mind, a very slight change in the contract will discharge the surety.³ The same is true of an instru-

A surety guaranteed payment of the premiums upon a life policy, which had been assigned by the principal debtor to his creditor to secure payment of part of the debt. Subsequently, the creditor, without the knowledge of the surety, agreed with the debtor to take the security, with the liability of the debtor and surety to pay the premiums thereon, in substitution for the personal liability of the debtor, in respect of that portion of the debt, and released the debtor from personal liability in respect thereof. Held, that this arrangement discharged the surety. Lawes v. Maughan, 1 C. & E. 340 (DENMAN, J.).

"Any variation in the agreement to which the surety has subscribed, which is made without the surety's knowledge and consent, and which may prejudice him, or which may amount to a substitution of a new agreement for the one to which he subscribed, will discharge the surety, upon the principle of the maxim non hæc in fœdera veni." *Smith v. a note that had been altered the holder brought suit at the of the surety, who gave bonds to dissolve an attachment. The words added to the note were then erased at his request. It was held that the surety had ratified the alteration and could not take advantage of it. Gardiner v. Harback, 21 Ill. 129.

It is always competent to show that the alteration was made with the consent of the surety. Brand v. Johnrowe, 60 Mich. 210; Fowler v. Brooks, 13 N. H. 240.

But if at the time the surety does such acts as would amount to a ratification of the alteration, he does not know that it has been made, he will not be presumed to have ratified it. Benedict v. Miner, 58 Ill. 19; Fowler v. Brooks, 13 N. H. 240; Merrimac Co. Bank v. Brown, 12 N. H. 320.

Where a surety signed a note in pencil, promising to "ink it over" afterwards, and the note was altered, without his knowledge before he "inked it," it was held that he was discharged. Boalt v. Brown, 13 Ohio St. 364.

Surrender.—Where a note is taken and the old one is surrendered, the surety on it is discharged. Rhodes v. Hart, 51 Ga. 320.

But not where the new note is a forgery and purports to bear the name of the surety. Kincard v. Yates, 63 Mo. 45.

Lease.—Where by agreement a new tenant is substituted for the one in possession, the transaction amounts to a surrender of his lease by the latter and his surety is discharged. Koenig v. Miller Bros. Brewing Co., 38 Mo. App. 182.

A surety on a lease is not discharged by an agreement to which he was not a party by which the rent is reduced. Preston v. Huntington, 67 Mich. 139. And this is so even where the rent is reduced by a parol agreement. White v. Walker, 31 Ill. 422. But not where the parol agreement has not been executed. Chapman v. McGrew, 20 Ill. 101.

Where a surety is bound by one bond for the performance by the principal of two distinct things, and the contract is varied as to one of the things to be performed, the surety is discharged as to such matter but not as to that in regard to which the contract has been changed. Harrison v. Seymour, L. R., 1 C. P. 518; Skillett v. Fletcher, L. R., 1 C. P. 217; s. c., L. R., 2 C. P. 469.

Where the bond is left blank as to the amount, it cannot be filled up without his consent. Rhea v. Gibson, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 215; People v. Organ, 27 Ill. 27; s. c., 79 Am. Dec. 391.

Except where it is understood that the principal is to fill the blank. Wright v. Harris, 31 Iowa 272.

But the rights of the surety are not affected by filling in his name in a blank left for that purpose. Smith v. Crooker, 5 Mass. 538; State v. Pepper, 31 Ind. 76.

Official Bonds.—"Officers are often required by statutes to give new bonds, and whether such bonds are supplemental, cumulative, and additional, or substitutes for the old bonds, is often a question of absorbing interest to the parties concerned in both. Of course, the question depends chiefly on the language of the statute itself. If it says that the new bond shall be given instead of the old, it is a substitute for the old bond and not a supplement to it; and in such case, and whenever by fair construction the meaning of the statute appears to be to furnish a substitute for the old bond, the sureties on the old are not bound after the new bond has been duly executed." Murfree on Official Bonds, § 221, citing United States v. Wardwell, 5 Mason (U. S.) 82.

And if the statute requires a new bond to be given on or before a certain date, the sureties on the old bond remain liable until the new bond is duly executed. United States v. Nicholl, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 505; United States v. Van Zandt, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 184; United States v. Kirkpatrick, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 720.

Any material alteration in the bond increasing in any way the liability of the surety or diminishing his remedies, discharges him. Smith v. United States, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 219; Crawford v. Dexter, 5 Sawy. (U. S.) 201.

The alteration of the duties of a public officer by the legislature will not discharge the sureties so long as his duties remain appropriate to the office. People v. Vilas, 36 N. Y. 459; s. c., 93 Am. Dec. 520; vide Miller v. Stewart, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 680; United States v. Hillegas, 3 Wash. (U. S.) 70; Postmaster General v. Reeder, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 678.

commencement of the tenancy. White v. Holson, 4 M. & G. 95.

Now and in Future.—Where a lease was held at a certain rent, and in future," this was held to be a tenancy from year to year. v. Stone, 54 L. J. R., Ch. 497.

Exempted by Law.—In the N. Y. vs. of 1887, ch. 713, the words "exempted by law" do not apply to a foreign corporation, except from the laws of the jurisdiction of origin. Catlin v. Domestic etc., 13 N. Y. 625.

Now in Force.—An Indiana statute is that "all laws upon the subject of pezzlement, now in force, are repealed: Provided, that all actions now pending under the law now in force, and all offences already committed, may be prosecuted under the law now in force." Held, that the words "now in force" must be taken to have the meaning in the proviso as in the dealing clause, and, therefore, to be the old law, that is, the law in force at the time the statute was repealed. State v., 72 Ind. 350.

Last Past.—In a deed, a day last past" means, last preceding the date of the delivery, not of the date. v. Mart, 4 B. & C. 272.

Possessed or Entitled.—An assent of all household goods and state and effects of or to which a person is "now possessed or entitled" "belonging or due" to him, will be a contingent interest under a will. Pope v. Whitcombe, 3 Russ. 124; right, 15 Bea. 367.

Standing.—"A mortgage of now standing and growing" in a lease is held not to include grain which has been cut. Jones on Mort., § 62, citing Lord v. Sutherland, 440.

Now Laid Out.—The grant of a lease now laid out" precludes the tenant from maintaining any gates or obstructions on the way which run upon it at the time of the lease. Welch v. Wilcox, 101 Mass. c., 100 Am. Dec. 113.

Charter-Party.—"Now in the port" these words in a charter party of a warrantee. Behn v. Burness, 3 M. & G. 751. So do the words "Now on board." Gorrisen v. Perrin, 2 C. B., 81.

Statute.—Now in statutes refers to the time when the act takes effect. Clark v. Lord, 20 Kan. 390, 396. See also Savings Bank v. New London, 20 Conn. 115.

In a Will.—"Where a testator speaks of an actually existing state of things, his language should be construed as referring to the date of the will, as 'the house where I now reside,' the estate whereof 'I am now seized.' A gift to descendants 'now living' excludes those born after the will. When 'now' is used incorrectly in connection with the word 'heir,' the latter word is made to surrender its strict meaning, and the term is applied to the heir apparent at the date of the will. But the word 'now' is never construed so as to produce intestacy." Beach on Wills 156, and cases there cited.

Family Now at Home.—Where a testator provided that a farm should be let to a good tenant, the rent to be used for the maintenance of the "family now at home," it was held that a daughter was entitled to share in the rents who, though residing on the farm at the time of making the will and testator's death, afterwards moved away permanently; and that the words designatio personarum. Dawson v. Fraser, 18 Ont. 496.

The word "now" in a devise of "the property I now reside upon" was not allowed to control the other parts of the will, and was held not sufficient to oust the statute by virtue of which the will is to speak from the death. Hatton v. Bertram, 7 Can. L. T. (Occ. N.) 199.

I Now Possess.—"Admit that in reference to the real estate devised the word 'now,' as between those having equal claims on the testator's bounty, might as well be construed to refer to the time of his death as to the date of his will, it would be otherwise as between the heir and one claiming under a devise to a party who did not take by purchase, and who could not have taken by inheritance. In every such case the word 'now' should be construed to refer to the state of things existing at the date of the will." Quinn v. Hardenbrook, 54 N. Y. 83.

In a Will.—"The word 'now,' 'any property I now possess,' would pass all the property possessed by the testator at the time of his death." Per KAY, J., Re Portal to Lamb, 53 L. J., Ch. 1163—reversed without affecting this proposition, II. Nuisances in Relation to Particular Subjects, 943.

1. In General, 943.

I. ELEMENTS; GENERAL PRINCIPLES—1. General Definition.—The term nuisance, in legal phraseology, is applied to that class

30 Ch. D. 50—citing Wagstaff v. Wagstaff, L. R., 8 Eq. 229; Re Ord, 12 Ch. D. 22; Everett v. Everett, 7 Ch. D. 428; Goodlad v. Burnett, 1 K. & J. 341; Re Otley and Ilkley Committee, 34 Bea. 525. But see Wms. Exrs. 225. It will, however, be observed that this interpretation is based on the rule embodied in section 24, Wills act (1 Vict., ch. 26), which says that every will “with reference to the real estate and personal estate comprised in it,” shall speak from the death.

For other purposes—e. g., ascertaining persons or classes, or for fixing a particular description of property, 1 Jarm. 332, 334—“it may be stated, as a general rule, that wherever a testator refers to an actually existing state of things, his language is referential to the date of the will, and not to his death, as this is then a prospective event. Such, it is clear, is the construction of the word ‘Now,’ or any other expressions pointing at present time. 1 Jarm. 318. See also 154 Ib., where it is said that a testamentary “gift to children ‘now living’ applies to such as are in existence at the date of the will, and those only.”

So “now occupied by A” are words of description and relate to the date of the will. Hutchinson v. Barrow, 6 H.

& N. 583. See further, Cole v. Scott, 1 Mac. & G. 518.

“I now possess.” Hepburn v. Skirving, 4 Jur., N. S. 651.

But in the case of a residuary gift, “now” does not always have the effect of making the gift speak from the date of the will. Miles v. Miles, L. R., 1 Eq. 462; Cox v. Bennett, L. R., 6 Eq. 422; Saxton v. Saxton, 13 Ch. D. 359. See further, Dart 309.

A devise of “the lands which I have” speaks from the death, and not the date of the will, and therefore includes lands acquired after the will. Doe d. York v. Walker, 12 M. & W. 591. And on the balance of the authorities (and, semble, of good sense) that larger interpretation would not be narrowed to the date of the will if the phrase were “the lands which I now have.” Castle v. Fox, L. R., 11 Eq. 542; Miles v. Miles, L. R., 1 Eq. 462; Cox v. Bennett, L. R., 6 Eq. 422; Wedgwood v. Denton, L. R., 12 Eq. 290; Saxton v. Saxton, 13 Ch. D. 359; Backwell v. Child, 1 Amb. 260; Struthers v. Struthers, 5 W. R. 809; Re Russell, 19 Ch. D. 432. But see, per contra, Cole v. Scott, 1 M. & G. 518; Emuss v. Smith, 2 De G. & S. 722.

of wrongs that arise from the unreasonable, unwarrantable, or unlawful use by a person of his own property, real or personal, or from his own improper, indecent, or unlawful personal conduct, working an obstruction of or injury to a right of another or of the public, and producing such material annoyance, inconvenience, discomfort, or hurt, that the law will presume a consequent damage.¹

1. Wood's Law of Nuisances (2nd ed.) 1.

A nuisance may be said to be anything wrongfully done or permitted which injures or annoys another in the enjoyment of his legal rights.

Cooley on Torts, p. 565. It will be noticed that this definition is so broad as to include many wrongs, not regarded as nuisances, such as trespass, malicious prosecution, false imprisonment, etc. "Nuisance, nocumentum, or annoyance, signifies anything that worketh hurt, inconvenience or damage.

. . . Private nuisances . . . may be defined as anything done to the hurt or annoyance of the lands, tenements or hereditaments of another. 3 Black. Com. (Cooley's ed.) p. 215. This definition fails to embrace actionable nuisances not connected with real property rights, as, for instance, a vicious animal. "A private nuisance is an act done, unaccompanied by an act of trespass, which causes a substantial prejudice to the hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal of another." Adams' Equity, p. 210. This is at once too broad and too narrow—too broad as embracing slander of title, and too narrow in that it is limited to injuries to inheritable property rights.

What amount of annoyance or inconvenience will constitute a nuisance cannot be precisely defined, being a question of degree, depending on varying circumstances. Columbus Gas Light etc. Co. v. Freeland, 12 Ohio St. 392.

In Abbott's Law Dictionary, tit.

"In matters of this description it appears to me that it is a very desirable thing to mark the difference between an action brought for a nuisance upon the ground that the alleged nuisance produces material injury to the property, and an action brought for a nuisance on the ground that the thing alleged to be a nuisance is productive of sensible personal discomfort. With regard to the latter—namely, the personal inconvenience and interference with one's enjoyment, one's quiet, one's personal freedom, anything that dis-composes or injuriously affects the senses or the nerves—whether that may or may not be denominated a nuisance, must undoubtedly depend greatly on the circumstances of the place where the thing complained of actually occurs.
If a man lives in a town, it is necessary that he should subject himself to the consequences of those operations of trade which may be carried on in the immediate locality, which are actually necessary for trade and commerce, and also for the enjoyment of property, and for the benefit of the inhabitants of the town and the public at large. If a man lives in a street where there are numerous shops, and a shop is opened next door to him which is carried on in a fair and reasonable way, he has no ground of complaint, because, to himself individually, there may arise much discomfort from the trade carried on in that shop. But when an occupation is carried on by one person in the neighborhood of another, and the result of that trade or occupation or business is a material injury to property, there unquestionably arises a very different consideration. I think that in a case of that description the submission which is required from persons living in society to that amount of discomfort which may be necessary for the legiti-mate and free exercise of the trade of their neighbors, would not apply to circumstances the immediate result of which is sensible injury to the value of the property." LORD WESTBURY, in St. Helen's Smelting Co. v. Tipping, 11
H. L. C. 642.

2. Public Nuisances.—Public or common nuisances affect the community at large, or some considerable portion of it, such as the inhabitants of a town; and the person therein offending is liable to criminal prosecution. A public nuisance does not necessarily create a civil cause of action for any person; but it may do so under certain conditions. A private nuisance affects only one person or a determinate number of persons, and is the ground of civil proceedings only. Generally it affects the control, use, or enjoyment of immovable property; but this is a not necessary element according to the modern view of the law.¹

exchequer, said: "It was proved incontestably that smoke did come, and in some degree interfere with a certain person; but I said, 'You must look at it, not with a view to the question whether abstractedly that quantity of smoke was a nuisance, but whether it was a nuisance to a person living in' the town in question.

Whether a thing is or is not a nuisance does not depend on the notions of people living in a designated locality. Owen v. Phillips, 73 Ind. 284.

VICE CH. KNIGHT BRUCE, in Walter v. Selfe, 4 De G. & Sm. 322: "Both on principle and authority, the important point next for decision may properly, I conceive, be put thus: Ought this inconvenience to be considered in fact as more than fanciful, more than one of mere delicacy or fastidiousness, or as an inconvenience materially interfering with the ordinary comfort physically of human existence, not merely according to elegant or dainty modes and habits of living, but according to plain and sober and simple notions among the English people?"

1. Pollock on Torts, 324: "A common nuisance is an unlawful act or omission to discharge a legal duty, which act or omission endangers the lives, safety, health, property, or comfort of the public, or by which the public are obstructed in the exercise or enjoyment of any right common to all her majesty's subjects." English Criminal Code (Indictable Offences) Bill, 1879.

In King v. Morris etc. R. Co., 18 N. J. Eq. 397, where the question was whether a locomotive which threw out sparks along the road was a public nuisance or not, the chancellor said: "This is not a public nuisance, although it may injure a great many persons. The injury is to the individual property of each. The nuisance is public when it affects the rights enjoyed by citizens as part of the public."

In Lansing v. Smith, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 146, it was said that a public nuisance is that which injures whatever portion of the public may come in contact with it.

Hackney v. State, 8 Ind. 494 defines a public nuisance at common law as "anything offensive to the sight, smell or hearing, erected or carried on in a public place where the people dwell or pass, or have a right to pass, to their annoyance."

A public nuisance is what injures the citizens generally who may be so circumstanced as to come within its influence. Westcott v. Middleton, 43 N. J. Eq. 478.

4 Black. Com. 167 says: "Common nuisances are a species of offences against the public order and economical regimen of the state; being either the doing of a thing to the annoyance of all the king's subjects, or the neglecting to do a thing which the common good requires." See also 1 Hawk. P. C. 197; 1 Russell on Crimes 294, 295; Bacon's Abr. Nuisances, 2 Roll. Abr. 83.

"In order to constitute a public nuisance, the injurious results to the public must always be of such a character and extent that, if affecting the rights of an individual only, they would form the basis of a private action. The only distinction between a public and private nuisance arises from the difference in effect. In the one case, it is confined to a single individual or to an injury to individual rights, while in the other it affects the rights of individuals only as members of the public. It is not so much a question whether a large number of persons happened to be annoyed by the act, as whether the act itself was such, and in such a place, as that the natural effect thereof would be to annoy or offend all who came within its sphere." Wood's Law of Nuisance, p. 76.

A nuisance, to be a public nuisance, must be in a public place, or where the public frequently congregate, or where members of the public are likely to come within the range of its influence; for if the act or use of property be in a remote and unfrequented locality, it will not, unless malum in se, be a public nuisance.¹

In Soltau v. De Held, 2 Sim., N. S. 133, the Vice Chancellor said: "To constitute a public nuisance, the thing must be such as, in its nature or its consequences, is a nuisance, an injury, or a damage, to all persons who come within the sphere of its operations, though it may be so in a greater degree to some than it is to others."

In the case of the Attorney General v. Evart Booming Co., 34 Mich. 462, COOLEY, C. J., defined a public nuisance as "something which subjects the public to some degree of inconvenience or annoyance."

Urinating in a spring near a public highway from which travellers are accustomed to drink, was held an indictable nuisance in State v. Taylor, 29 Ind. 517; as was selling unwholesome provisions, not fit to be eaten by man, in State v. Smith, 3 Hawks (N. Car.) 378.

The draining of school privies into a brook flowing through a village was held to be a public nuisance. New Brighton v. Kasey, 3 N. Y. Supp. 399.

Telegraph poles are not public nuisances. Com. v. Boston, 97 Mass. 555. Nor telephone poles. Irwin v. Great So. Tel. Co., 37 La. An. 63. An unguarded area so near to an alley as to be dangerous may constitute a public nuisance. Bond v. Smith, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 219. But a basement staircase opening on a sidewalk is not necessarily a nuisance. Everett v. Marquette, 53 Mich. 450. A Salvation Army parading on Sunday was held, in People v. Rochester, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 166, not to be a public nuisance. It is not necessarily a nuisance to make a speech in the street. Fairbanks v. Kerr, 70 Pa. St. 86; s. c., 10 Am. Rep. 664. The projection of a bow window over a street in violation of law is not necessarily a nuisance. Jenks v. Williams, 115 Mass. 217. Scaffolding suspended from the eaves of a house is not necessarily a nuisance. Hexamer v. Webb, 101 N. Y. 377; s. c., 54 Am. Rep. 703. Pipes in which naphtha stood, when pumps by which it was carried through pipes through a city were not in use, were held not to constitute a nuisance. Lee v. Vacuum Oil Co., 7 N. Y. Supp. 426.

1. Thus a brewhouse, glasshouse, chandler's shop, sty for swine, are common or public nuisances when set up in such inconvenient parts of a town that they necessarily incommode the neighborhood. Bacon's Abr. Nuisances A; Ellis v. State, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 534; Greene v. Nunnemacher, 36 Wis. 50; Com. v. Perry, 139 Mass. 198.

In Ray v. Lynes, 10 Ala. 63, it was held that a noisome trade is a public nuisance in a thickly settled community but not in a remote place. Thus an act or use of property may be a public nuisance on a city street but not on a country road. Such as keeping swine. Regina v. Wigg, 2 Salk. 460.

So in King v. Pierce, 2 Shower 327, it was held that a soap boilery was a public nuisance if maintained in the principal part of a city, but not if on the outskirts.

A cemetery is not per se a public nuisance, but may be in a certain locality. Begein v. Anderson, 28 Ind. 79; Dunn v. Austin (Tex. 1889), 11 S. W. Rep. 1125; Musgrove v. St. Louis Church, 10 La. An. 431; New Orleans v. Wardens, 11 La. An. 244; Monk v. Packard, 71 Me. 309; s. c., 36 Am. Rep. 315; Kingsbury v. Flowers, 65 Ala. 479; s. c., 39 Am. Rep. 14. See also CEMETERIES, 3 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law 55.

So a tallow factory, though lawful in itself, becomes a public nuisance when in a thickly settled locality. Allen v. State, 34 Tex. 230; Howard v. Lee, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 281; Smith v. Cummings, 2 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 92; Allen v. State, 34 Tex. 230.

In United States v. Hart, Pet. (C. C.) 390, it was held that fast driving, though not a nuisance per se, may be a nuisance in the streets of a city.

In State v. St. Louis Board of Health, 16 Mo. App. 8, the question was whether or not a brick kiln was a public nuisance. The court, after holding that it was not in itself, discussed very fully the effect of locality in regard to nuisances. In the course of its

But the mere fact that the act or use of property is unpleasant to the public or renders property in the vicinity less valuable will opinion, the court said: "Even what is a nuisance per se may be carried on in a remote locality so as to be no common annoyance to the public. And, on the other hand, what is not a nuisance per se, such a trade as has been harmlessly and beneficially carried on for years in a particular locality, may become a public nuisance without any change in the way it is conducted, by reason of public streets being laid out near it, or numerous dwellings erected in its vicinity so that it becomes a serious annoyance."

A blacksmith's shop may be a public nuisance in certain localities in a city, but not on a side street. Foucher v. Grass, 60 Iowa 505; Whitney v. Bartholomew, 21 Conn. 213; Ray v. Lynes, 10 Ala. 63.

In Tipping v. St. Helen Smelting Co., 4 B. & S. 608, it was held that the court will always consider the convenience of the place in determining whether the act or use of property be a public nuisance.

So keeping unprotected a large quantity of gunpowder in a building situated near others is a nuisance per se. Myers v. Malcolm, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 292; s. c., 41 Am. Dec. 744; Weir's Appeal, 74 Pa. St. 230.

So a tree or post on the margin of a crowded street may be a public nuisance, although it would not be on a retired street. Franklin Turnpike Co. v. Crockett, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 263; Com. v. Reed, 34 Pa. St. 275; s. c., 95 Am. Dec. 661.

So a soap-boiling establishment in a populous portion of a large city is a nuisance per se. Howard v. Lee, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 281.

So the manufacture of poudrette (superphosphate of lime) in such manner that the fumes escape into the outside air, is a public nuisance in an inhabited district. Coe v. Schultz, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 64.

A tannery is not per se a nuisance, but may become one by reason of its location. State v. Street Commrs., 36 N. J. L. 283.

A livery stable in a city is not a nuisance per se, but if near dwellings it may become one. Coker v. Birge, 10 Ga. 336; Kirkman v. Handy, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 406; s. c., 54 Am. Dec. 45; Shivery v. Streeper, 24 Fla. 103;

Dargan v. Waddill, 9 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 244; s. c., 49 Am. Dec. 421; Rounsaville v. Kohlheim, 68 Ga. 668; s. c., 45 Am. Rep. 505.

A slaughterhouse in a remote locality is not a nuisance per se, but if in the populous part of a city or town it is prima facie a public nuisance. Dubois v. Budlong, 10 Bosw. (N. Y.) 700; s. c., 15 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 445; Pruner v. Pendleton, 75 Va. 516; s. c., 40 Am. Rep. 738; Catlin v. Valentine, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 575; s. c., 38 Am. Dec. 567; Bushnell v. Robeson, 62 Iowa 542; Com. v. Upton, 6 Gray (Mass.) 473; Dennis v. State, 91 Ind. 291; Attorney General v. Stewart, 20 N. J. Eq. 415; Babcock v. New Jersey Stockyard Co., 20 N. J. Eq. 296; Fay v. Whitman, 100 Mass. 76; Bishop v. Banks, 33 Conn. 118; s. c., 87 Am. Dec. 197.

A wagon loaded with matter that emits an offensive odor, though not in itself a public nuisance, may become so on a public street. Lippincott v. Lasher, 44 N. J. Eq. 20.

In Beadmore v. Tredwell, 31 L. J., Ch. 892, a brick kiln within three hundred and fifty yards of a residence was held a nuisance.

In Basshan v. Hall, 22 L. T. 116, a brick kiln was held prima facie a nuisance within one hundred yards of a dwelling. See also Bamford v. Tumley, 2 B. & S., Q. B. 62; Brady v. Weeks, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 157; Cambell v. Seaman, 63 N. Y. 584; s. c., 20 Am. Rep. 567.

In State v. Wetherall, 5 Harr. (Del.) 487, it was held generally that any trade or business carried on in a town, or populous neighborhood, or near a public road or highway, which produces noxious or offensive smells, to the annoyance of the neighborhood, or persons travelling along the public road, is a common nuisance.

In Ashbrook v. Com., 1 Bush (Ky.) 139; s. c., 83 Am. Dec. 740, the court said: "The pursuit of a noxious trade is lawful so long as it does not interfere with the rights of the public; but when it does so interfere with these superior rights, it becomes illegal, and no length of time can sanctify it." See 2 Greenl. Ev., p. 472, § 473; Cleveland v. Citizens' Gas Light Co., 20 N. J. Eq. 201; State v. Close, 35 Iowa 570; Moses v. State, 58 Ind. 185.

not alone be a sufficient invasion of a public right to constitute it a public nuisance. Provided the act or use of property be not in itself illegal, the law will not, for slight cause, interfere with the business or actions of any man. To constitute a public nuisance, there must be a substantial injury to the public at large.¹

3. Private Nuisances.—A private nuisance, of the sort which is redressed at the suit of the party, is anything done on one's premises or elsewhere, or put into circulation, or omitted to be done contrary to a legal duty, wherefrom, through the separate action of nature or of the common course of events, an injury follows to or directly menaces another; or, it is any indictable nuisance which has wrought a special harm to the individual.²

The conception of private nuisance was formerly limited to injuries done to a man's freehold by a neighbor's acts, of which stopping or narrowing rights of way and flooding land by the diversion of water courses appear to have been the chief species. In the modern authorities it includes all injuries to an owner or occupier in the enjoyment of the property of which he is in possession, without regard to the quality of the tenure. The ways in which this may happen are indefinite in number, but fall for practical purposes into certain well recognized classes.³

1. Walter v. Selfe, 4 Eng. L. & Eq. 15, was a case where the smoke arising from a brick kiln was complained of as a nuisance. The court decided that it was, basing the decision upon the fact that while the annoyance was not perhaps injurious to the health, yet it was more than fanciful. BRUCE, VICE-CHANCELLOR, said the decision turned upon this question: "Ought this convenience to be considered, in fact, as more than fanciful, or as one of mere delicacy or fastidiousness—as an inconvenience materially interfering with the ordinary comfort, physically, or human existence, not merely according to elegant or dainty modes and habits of living, but according to plain, sober and simple notions among the English people? And I am of opinion that this point is against the defendant."

In Morris etc. R. Co. v. Prudden, 20 N. J. Eq. 530, the court said that to constitute a public nuisance there "must not only be a violation of the plaintiff's rights, but such a violation as will be attended with substantial and serious damage. Mere diminution of the value of the property of the party complaining, by the nuisance, without irreparable mischief, will not furnish any foundation for equitable relief." So McLaughlin v. Charlotte etc. R. Co., 5 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 583.

16 C. of L.—59

In Robinson v. Baugh, 31 Mich. 291, where the question was as to a public nuisance, the court said: "The subject cannot be safely dealt with by resorting to subtle refinements and nice distinctions. Extreme claims must give way. Those activities which are right in themselves and belong to the neighborhood and are reasonable in their mode may not be quite agreeable to the fastidiousness of some or the special or peculiar susceptibilities of others, but those thus affected must bear their little discomforts if they choose to stay where they are so caused . . . and of course the existence of these slight personal annoyances can afford no ground for saying that the concerns causing them are not suitably situated, and are therefore nuisances."

In Cleveland v. Citizens' Gas Light Co., 20 N. J. Eq. 201, the court said: "The discomforts must be physical; not such as depend upon taste or imagination."

In Price v. Grantz, 118 Pa. St., 402, the court held that a trifling injury or unpleasantness will not justify a court in holding that an otherwise lawful business is a public nuisance.

2. Bishop on Non-Contract Law, § 411.

3. Pollock on Torts 328

A public nuisance may be a private nuisance as well, when viewed in its relations to an individual specially injured by it. Nuisances having such double relation are denominated by Mr. Wood mixed nuisances.¹

4. Intent or Motive Immaterial.—The intent or motive with which the act is done is immaterial to the determination of the question of nuisance or no nuisance. One acting strictly within his legal rights may not be held liable in an action by his neighbor, even if what he did was done maliciously and with intent to injure the neighbor;² while, on the other hand, if that done in fact creates a nuisance, either in itself or by reason of its surroundings, it does not matter how innocent the intent, or that the trade or occupation causing the annoyance is, apart from that annoyance, an innocent or laudable one. "The building of a lime kiln is good and profitable; but if it be built so near a house that when it burns the smoke thereof enters into the house, so that none can dwell there, an action lies for it."³ "A tan house is necessary, for all men wear shoes; and nevertheless it may

1. "There is a class of acts which may properly be denominated mixed nuisances, being both public and private in their effects. Public, in that they produce injury to many persons or all the public; and private, because, at the same time, they produce a special and particular injury to private rights, which subjects the wrongdoer to indictment by the public, and to damages at the suit of the persons injured." Of this class are obstructions placed in a highway, which produce a special injury to one person, by injuring his horse, carriage or himself, while others of the public are only hindered, inconvenienced or delayed. Also establishments which, by reason of the nature of the business carried on, produce such noxious smells and vapors as to annoy the whole community, and at the same time are a special injury to those residing or doing business in their immediate vicinity, by rendering their houses untenable, or their enjoyment so uncomfortable that they sustain a special and particular damage apart from and beyond the rest of the public.

2. In South Royalton Bank v. Suffolk Bank, 27 Vt. 505, which was a private action against one who, on his own land, had obstructed water from reaching plaintiff's land, the court said: "It may be laid down as a position not to be controverted, that an act, legal in itself, violating no right, cannot be made actionable on the ground of the motive which induced it. If the act is lawful, although it may be prejudicial, it is damnum absque injuria." It is said in Comyns' Digest, under the head of "Nuisance," that an action on the case does not lie for the reasonable use of any right, though it be to the annoyance of another. See also Mahan v. Brown, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 261; s. c., 28 Am. Dec. 461, where the defendant had built a high fence for the sole purpose of obstructing the lights of his neighbor's house, and it was held that no action would lie, where the lights were not injured and no right had been acquired by grant or user, and that the motive with which the act was done was immaterial. In Greenleaf v. Francis, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 117, there is a dictum to the contrary, but the point was not adjudged. See also Ashby v. White, 1 Smith's Lead. Cas. 472, and notes thereto; Radcliff v. Mayor etc. of Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 195; Pickard v. Collins, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 444; Ellis v. Duncan, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 230; Scott v. Shepherd, 2 W. Black. 894; Lambert v. Bessey, T. Raym. 423; Weaver v. Ward, Hobart 134; Fletcher v. Rylands, L. R., Exch. 263; Gibbon v. Pepper, 2 Salk. 637; Underwood v. Hewson, 1 Stra. 596; Leame v. Bray, 3 East 595; Vandenburgh v. Truax, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 464; s. c., 47 Am. Dec. 268; Guille v. Swan, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 381; Bonnell v. Smith, 53 Iowa 281; Olmsted v. Rich, 6 N. Y. Supp. 826.

3. Aldred's Case, 9 Co. Rep. 59a.

be pulled down if it be erected to the nuisance of another. In like manner of a glass house; and they ought to be erected in places convenient for them."¹ So it is an actionable nuisance to keep a pig sty so near my neighbor's house as to make it unwholesome and unfit for habitation, though the keeping of swine may be needful for the sustenance of man.² Learned and charitable foundations are commended in sundry places of our books; but the fact that a new building is being erected by a college for purposes of good education and the advancement of learning, will not make it the less a wrong if the sawing of stone by the builders drives a neighboring inhabitant out of his house.³

5. Injury Must be "Common."—In order to constitute a public nuisance, the act or use of property must be an annoyance common to the public generally. The test is not the number of persons annoyed, but the possibility of annoyance to the public by invasion of its rights.⁴

6. Care Not an Element.—If the facts be sufficient to constitute a public nuisance, the defendant may not show that the business is carried on in the most approved manner. Care is not an element. The fact that injurious results proceed from the act will be sufficient.⁵

"I shall here only remind the student that common nuisances are such inconvenient and troublesome offences as annoy the whole community in general, and not merely some particular person." 4 Black. Com. 167.

In Com. v. Smith, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 80, an indictment charging a public nuisance to the "disturbance of divers citizens" was held insufficient. The court held that the indictment must allege "great damage to all the citizens," etc.

In People v. Jackson, 7 Mich. 432, which was an indictment for obstructing an alley, the court said: "To make an obstruction like this an indictable offence, it must injuriously affect some public right—some right in which the public in their aggregate capacity have a common interest, as distinguished from a mere individual or private right. If it affects only the rights of an individual, or of a definite number of individuals less than the whole, in their individual capacity, the several persons actually injured have their remedy by private action, but no indictment lies. 4 Black. Com. 5; 1 Bish. Cr. L., § 348. Of course it is not necessary that all should be actually injured, but the tendency of the act must be to affect injuriously a right which all are entitled to exercise if they see fit."

Thus in Rex v. Lloyd, 4 Esp. 200, it was held that where the business of a tin-smith annoyed a few persons living in the vicinity, it was not sufficient annoyance to make the trade a public nuisance. In this case only three persons were annoyed. The court held that it was not an invasion of any public right.

Soltau v. DeHeld, 2 Sim., N. S. 133, held that a peal of bells was not a public nuisance. The test is not the number of persons annoyed, but the fact that it is in a public place and annoying to all who come within its sphere.

In Seifried v. Hayes, 81 Ky. 377; s. c., 50 Am. Rep. 167, it was held that the fact that five neighbors unite in a suit to enjoin a nuisance does not prove that the nuisance is public. See also Regina v. Webb, 2 C. & K. 933; Rex v. Medley, 6 C. & P. 292; State v. Rye, 35 N. H. 368; State v. Strong, 25 Me. 297; Phillips v. State, 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 151; Com. v. Lyon, 1 Pitts. (Pa.) 466.

5. Cahill v. Eastman, 18 Minn. 324;

7. Benefits Not to be Considered.—The fact that the act or use of property complained of may be or is beneficial or necessary to the public will not excuse or justify the continuance of a public nuisance.¹

8. Place; Convenience.—Nor is it an answer to the charge of maintaining a nuisance to say that the offending work or manufacture is carried on at a place in itself proper and convenient for the purpose. In the sense of the law a place is not convenient

In Fletcher v. Ryland, 1 L. R., Exch. 265, BLACKBURN, J., said: "Some years ago actions were brought against the owners of some alkali works in Liverpool for the damage alleged to have been occasioned by the chlorine fumes from their works. The defendants proved that they, at great expense, erected contrivances by which the fumes of chlorine were condensed and sold as muriatic acid, and they called a great body of scientific evidence to show that their apparatus was so perfect that no fumes could possibly escape from their chimney. But the jury found otherwise, and no attempt was made to disturb the verdict, on the ground that the defendants had taken all the precautions that prudence and skill could suggest to keep the fumes in, and that they were not liable, unless negligence was shown. If they had, the answer would have been that he whose stuff it is must keep it at his peril."

The doctrine that the fact that an offensive trade is carefully conducted and managed so as to cause as little annoyance to the public as possible, does not prevent it from being condemned as a public nuisance, is well stated in Moses v. State, 58 Ind. 185.

1. Works v. Junction R. Co., 5 McLean (U. S.) 425.

In State v. Kaster, 35 Iowa 221, the offence charged was keeping pigs to the great discomfort of the public. The evidence for the prosecution showed facts which would constitute a public nuisance. The defendant then proposed to show that the enclosure charged as a nuisance "was a great and essential accommodation to the public."

The court held that this testimony must be excluded.

In Seacord v. People, 121 Ill. 623, where the indictment set forth a public nuisance occasioned by rendering dead animals, the court, in an exhaustive opinion, said: "It is also insisted, with great apparent earnestness, that the acts of defendant are justified by the immediate urgency for the disposition of the dead animals, out of regard for the public health and convenience. . . . The law does not, however, balance conveniences, and it makes no difference if the work is really in the interest of society or necessary for the preservation of the public health. It is now well settled 'that the circumstance that the thing complained of furnishes upon the whole a greater convenience to the public than it takes away,' is no answer to an indictment for a nuisance."

In Attorney General v. Leeds, 39 L. J., Ch. 254, the town of Leeds was indicted for a public nuisance created by the discharge of sewerage into a river and thereby polluting the stream. The defence was that there was no other practical way to drain the town, and the health of the inhabitants depended upon maintaining this outlet for its sewerage. It was held to be no defence, the court holding that in prosecutions or actions for nuisance, the court would not balance conveniences.

In Rex v. Russel, 6 B. & S. 566, it was held that where a great public benefit ensues, the benefit will balance the injury, but this case was expressly overruled in Rex v. Ward, 4 Ad. & El. 384. So in Rex v. Tindall, 6 Ad. & El. 143; Rex v. Morris, 1 B. & Ad. 441. But see Pilcher v. Hart, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 524.

In Reg. v. Train, 2 B. & S. 640, it was held that a railway track in a highway so laid out as to cause horses to slip was a nuisance, and the fact that the railroad benefited the public was no defence. Respublica v. Caldwell, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 150; Regina v. Barry, 9 for the burning of bricks, or smelting of copper, or carrying on of chemical works if a nuisance to those near by is created.¹

1. Ellis v. State, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 534.

In Rex v. Cross, 2 Car. & P. 483, the court stated the rule thus: "If a certain noxious trade is already established in a place remote from habitations and public roads, and persons afterwards come and build houses within the reach of its noxious effects; or if a public road be made so near to it that the carrying on of the trade becomes a nuisance to the person using the road: in those cases the party would be entitled to continue his trade, because his trade was legal before the erection of the houses in the one case, and the making of the road in the other."

The case of Com. v. Upton, 6 Gray (Mass.) 473, was an indictment for nuisance in the keeping of a slaughter house. It appeared that when the slaughter house was built and for a long time after, there were no other buildings and no public way in the vicinity. At a later period and before the time of the alleged commission of the offence complained of, a highway was located and buildings were erected in the neighborhood. The defendant claimed that on this state of facts there was no nuisance. The court held that the facts did not constitute a defence. The remarks of the court in Rex v. Cross, 2 Car. & P. 484, were declared to be mere obiter dicta, and unsupported by authority or reason.

In Taylor v. People, 6 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 347, the defendant indicted for creating and maintaining a nuisance, attempted to show the original convenience of the place. The court, by DANIELS, J., in an exhaustive opinion said: "The supposition that persons who erect and occupy their dwellings where they may be affected by a nuisance already erected and maintained, have no legal right to complain of the annoyance it may occasion them, seems to have been derived from what was incidentally and unnecessarily said by ABBOTT, Ch. J., in the case of Rex v. Cross, 2 Car. & P. 226. The case was decided at nisi prius, and this point was in no manner involved in it . . . Such a doctrine would render the property of others subordinate to the purposes of him who might, before they had erected their dwellings, have devoted his own to an offensive and unwholesome business. There is no sound principle of law that will protect any man in thus depriving others of the substantial use and enjoyment of their property. A person erecting a nuisance upon his own property when all other human habitations were so far removed from it as not to be annoyed or disturbed by the nuisance, would not be indictable for the erection merely because others afterwards took up their residence within the reach of its noisome and unwholesome vapors; for while it annoyed no one it could not strictly and legally be affirmed to be a nuisance. But after the adjacent territory should become devoted to domestic or business uses, and the inhabitants should be disturbed, annoyed and rendered uncomfortable by the continuance of the establishment, no good reason would exist for protecting the person then maintaining it from an indictment and conviction for a nuisance on account of such continuance. While an offensive or unwholesome trade or business is carried on at a point so remote from others as in no manner to affect or disturb them, the pursuit is lawful: but it necessarily becomes unlawful whenever the adjacent owners may so far devote their own property to the purposes of business or residence as to render its continuance incompatible with such purposes. This necessarily results from the legal principle which secures to all the right of devoting their property to the ordinary uses to which property is appropriated."

In Brady v. Weeks, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 157, the act complained of was the maintenance of a slaughter house in a city. The defence offered to show that the vicinity had become peopled since the establishment of the slaughter house. The court held such evidence to be inadmissible, and said: "As the city extends, such nuisances should be removed to the vacant ground beyond the immediate neighborhood of the residences of citizens. This public policy as well as the health and comfort of the population of the city demand."

Tipping v. St. Helen Smelting Co., L. R., 1 Eq. 66, was a case where the plaintiff purchased and removed to land near some copper works which emitted noxious gases; the plaintiff at the time of going upon the land knew of the existence of these copper works. The vice-chancellor held that the fact that the plaintiff had come to the nuisance did not bar him from relief, and this is the law both as to public and private nuisances. Crumden's Case, 2 Camp. 89; Sudley's Case, Lid. 168; Lynch's Case, 6 City Hall Rec. (N. "The party who at the time suffers the inconvenience of a nuisance is entitled to complain of it, and it is immaterial whether it was or was not a nuisance to him in its origin. Therefore it is of no importance to the right of action that the plaintiff has come into the neighborhood since the nuisance was created; he has the right to locate himself wherever he can do so to his satisfaction, and no one can have the authority to set limits to his choice of location by interposing something which is offensive. Moreover, it would detract very seriously from the value of the property if the owner, desiring to dispose of it, could not transfer all his rights, including his right to protection, in its complete enjoyment, but must, when a nuisance is created near him, either await the result of proceedings for its abatement or dispose of his land with the nuisance practically assented to, and for a price which the nuisance has assisted in establishing. Nothing can be plainer than if the grantor could have complained when he conveyed, the grantee may complain afterwards; and to whatever use the grantor might have put the land, as being suitable and proper for the locality, the grantee is at liberty to choose and adopt. Nevertheless, if one were to purchase an estate in the neighborhood of a nuisance for the express purpose of litigation, and should demand the extraordinary process of injunction to put a stop to another's business, it may be that the court of equity, in its discretion, would refuse his relief, while conceding his uned right to a remedy in damages." Id. on Torts 612, 613.

9. Coming to a Nuisance.—In ascertaining whether the property of one complaining is in fact injured, or his comfort and convenience materially interfered with by an alleged nuisance, the character of the neighborhood and the pre-existing circumstances are entitled to consideration; but the previous existence of a nuisance does not preclude complaint for an additional nuisance of the same kind, nor does it matter that third persons are also wrongdoers, nor that the very nuisance complained of existed before the person complaining came into the neighborhood. It was at one time held that if a man came to the nuisance, as was said, he had no remedy; but this has long ceased to be the law as regards both the remedy by damages and by injunction.¹

Leading case is Barwell v. Brooks, 11 N. S. 454, decided in 1843. An in rem injunction had been granted to stop the operation of a brick kiln on the plaintiff's land, which was afterwards dissolved, on the ground that the plaintiff purchased his land after the defendant's land for burning was publicly known. But subsequently the court made the injunction absolute, holding that "coming to a nuisance" does not deprive a person of the right to complain of it.

Tipping v. St. Helen Smelting Co., 11 Ch. 66, the nuisance complained of was a copper foundry, which the complainant admitted he knew the existence of when he purchased the property in which he lived at the time of his bill for abatement. VICE-CHANCELLOR PAGEWOOD held, and sustained on appeal (11 H. L. Cas. 101), that the fact that the complainant came to the nuisance did not deprive him of a right to equitable relief; the facts that the parties had purchased from the same vendor, and that the defendant purchased for the express purpose of erecting copper works, and actually erected them before the complainant purchased, did not present the question as might have arisen if the vendor had himself erected the nuisance before selling. Also that his knowledge, when he sold to the defendant, that the latter intended to erect copper works would not estop him or his subsequent grantee from complaining of the works as a nuisance. And see Murges v. Bridgman, L. R., 11 Ch.

Brady v. Weeks, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 511, which was a suit to enjoin the defendant from slaughtering cattle in a building in the city of New York, the defendant claimed that, as the plaintiffs did not come into the neighborhood until after the slaughterhouse was established, they were estopped to complain of its effects. On this point Judge, J., said: "When the slaughterhouse was erected, it was remote from the thickly settled part of the city; but now that the city has now grown up around it, and that the necessities of the population require the occupation of lots in its immediate vicinity for slaughterings. When it was erected it inconvenienced no one, but now it interferes with the enjoyment of life and property, and tends to deprive the plaintiffs of the use and benefit of their dwellings. There can be no real necessity for conducting such an offensive business as slaughtering cattle in this part of the city, which is now occupied by valuable and costly dwellings. As the city extends, such nuisances should be removed to the vacant ground beyond the immediate neighborhood of the residences of the citizens. This public policy, as well as the health and comfort of the population of the city, demands, and it seems that whenever any offensive trade becomes an injurious nuisance to any person, such person has a remedy by an action on the case for damages, or by a writ of nuisance to have the nuisance abated, upon the principle that every continuance thereof is a new or fresh nuisance."

In Smith v. Phillips, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 10, the plaintiff was a lessee from year to year of the premises injured by the nuisance (chemical works), and it was urged by the defendant that he ought not to recover because he had voluntarily renewed his lease after the erection of the nuisance, and thus placed himself in a position to be injured by it; and also because, by paying the same rent as before the nuisance existed, he had practically admitted that he did not suffer any serious injury from it. But the court denied that either of these defences was good or that they even affected the measure of damages.

One who hires land on which a railroad company maintains a nuisance may maintain an action if the nuisance is not abated. It is no defence that he need not have hired the land. Central R. Co. v. English, 73 Ga. 366.

The fact that plaintiff purchased and located on his land after the city had established its dump ground will not preclude his recovering damages for the negligent manner in which it uses the place for that purpose, whereby it becomes a nuisance. Sherman v. Langham (Tex. 1890), 13 S. W. Rep. 1042.

Where offensive matter from A's privy percolated into B's cellar six inches away, B having built while the privy existed, and when the nuisance was noticeable, it was held that A should be ordered to stop the percolation. Perine v. Taylor, 43 N. J. Eq., 128.

The fact that the neighborhood to be affected by offensive smells from the business which defendant proposes to establish already contains other establishments where disagreeable or noxious

Neither is it a defence to an indictment for a public nuisance that when the business constituting it was established it was remote from habitations and public roads, and that the persons suffering from it afterwards built their dwellings within the range of its stench or noisome effects.¹

10. Whether Question Is of Law or Fact.—What is a public nuisance is a question of law for the court, but the existence of facts which the court may declare sufficient to constitute a public nuisance is a question of fact for the jury.²

11. What Not a Defence.—It is no defence to an indictment for a public nuisance that the defendant was pecuniarily unable to trades are carried on is not sufficient reason for denying an injunction, unless the neighborhood has been for years so wholly given up to such establishments that the addition of the one proposed by the defendant will not sensibly increase the discomfort. Cleveland v. Citizens' Gas Light Co., 20 N. J. Eq. 201; Mulligan v. Elias, 12 Abb. Pr., N. S. (N. Y.) 259.

But equity will not enjoin the rebuilding of a mill useful to the public, upon the old mill site, on the ground that it will be injurious to the health of complainant's family only, especially where the mill existed at the time he purchased the premises which he occupies at the commencement of the suit. Eason v. Perkins, 2 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 38. See also Bradsher v. Lee, 3 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 301.

In an action for damages caused to adjoining property by the explosion of a powder magazine unlawfully maintained, the facts that the plaintiff knew of the existence of the nuisance at the time he bought his property, and that he was interested in similar magazines in the same neighborhood, are not a bar to his right of action. Laflin & Rand Powder Co. v. Tearney, 131 Ill. 322.

1. Taylor v. People, 6 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 347; Com. v. Upton, 6 Gray (Mass.) 473. In the latter case, the business had been carried on for twenty years before the neighborhood was settled up, but the court held that made no difference.

But in Ellis v. State, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 534, it was held that the defendant, who was indicted for establishing a noxious trade near certain dwellings, could show in bar of the prosecution that the dwelling houses were built after the establishment of the alleged nuisance. And in Platte & Denver Ditch Co. v. Anderson, 8 Colo. 131, it was held that one who buys land near which is an authorized ditch is entitled to no damages from those maintaining the ditch, if it is as carefully kept up as is possible in the circumstances. The uniform current of authority, both in Great Britain and the United States, is, however, the other way.

2. People v. Carpenter, 1 Mich. 273, 3 Kent's Com. 430.

Where A built four houses upon a lot of land, no cellars being built, but a vacant space being left below the basement floors, and four complaints were brought against A, each charging him with permitting stagnant water to stand upon a distinct lot of land, it was held that the court did not err in declining to rule that there was only one lot of land and but one offence committed, and in charging that the question was one of fact. Com. v. Colby, 128 Mass. 91.

In Pilcher v. Hart, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 524, the court held that it was the province of the jury to determine whether the erection of a whariboat be a nuisance or not.

But in State v. Woodward, 23 Vt. 92, the court held that where the act constituting the nuisance was taking lands dedicated to the public, it was the province of the court to declare such act a nuisance.

In Gateswood v. Blincoe, 2 Dana (Ky.) 159, the question was as to the abatement of a public nuisance. ROBERTSON, C. J., said: "Whether the evidence was sufficient to prove that the milldam was a nuisance . . . or whether, if it were a nuisance, it was public or private merely, and, if the latter, whether defendants . . . were prejudiced by it . . . are questions of fact," to be decided by the jury and not by the court.

In Hart v. Mayor etc. of Albany, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 218, the chancellor said:

abate it ;¹ nor that the public will derive some advantage from it ;² nor that the municipal authorities have not exercised their power of assigning a place for the carrying on of the offensive business complained of ;³ nor that similar nuisances have been permitted or acquiesced in by the public ;⁴ nor that he has leased the premises on which the nuisance exists, and cannot lawfully enter to abate it ;⁵ nor that he has used every possible degree of care to prevent it from doing injury.⁶

A principal or master is criminally liable for a public nuisance committed by his agent or servant having general authority to do the act or manage the business from which the nuisance arises; and this although the principal or master has no actual knowledge of what his subordinate has done, or even though it has been done contrary to his general orders, or to his understanding of the plans.⁷

Conversely, one indicted for a nuisance cannot defend on the ground that he acted as the agent of another in maintaining the nuisance though this circumstance may serve to lessen the punishment.⁸

12. Nuisances Per Se.—As to the meaning of the term nuisance per se, there seems to be some confusion in the books. The tendency of modern times has been to restrict its use and to apply it only to such things as are nuisances at all times and under all circumstances and irrespective of their location and surroundings, as for example, things prejudicial to public morals, as disorderly houses; or dangerous to life, as powder magazines or nitro-glycerine works, or injurious to public rights, as obstructions to highways and navigable streams.

Strictly speaking, a trade or occupation, lawful in itself and which becomes a nuisance because of its location or the manner in which it is conducted, is not a nuisance per se, though it may be a prima facie nuisance. The confusion seems to be due to the loose way in which the term has sometimes been used and to the growth of the tendency to restrict its use and meaning.⁹

"The question of nuisance or no nuisance is always a question of fact."

English Doctrines.—The English courts formerly held many trades and uses of property nuisances per se which are not now regarded as such, though as to some of them the prima facie presumption still is that they are nuisances if located or carried on in towns. Thus, a smelting house for lead. Poynton v. Gill, 2 Roll. Abr. 140. Or for copper. David v. Grenfell, 6 C. & P. 607. A candle factory. Toyhale's Case, Cro. Car. 510; Rankett's Case, Pasch. 3. A pig sty. Aldred's Case, 9 Coke 59; 1 Hawk. P. C. 363. A privy. Stynan v. Hutchinson, 2 Selw. 1047; and many other things of an equally lawful character have been designated as nuisances per se.

In Arnot v. Brown, 1 Macf. (Sc.) 229, the modern changes of view are indicated by the court in its ruling that "a candle manufactory is not necessarily a nuisance. Science has gone far to prevent many things from being a nuisance that were formerly of that description. It is not, therefore, very easy to determine beforehand whether or not any given thing shall prove a nuisance."

American Rulings.—In the United States, the courts have held that the following, among other things, are not necessarily and per se nuisances:

A blacksmith shop. Foucher v. Grass, 60 Iowa 505; Whitney v. Bartholomew, 21 Conn. 213; Ray v. Lynes, 10 Ala. 63. A brick kiln. State v. St. Louis Board of Health, 16 Mo. App. 8. A gunpowder factory. Wier's Appeal, 74 Pa. St. 230; Huckenstine's Appeal, 70 Pa. St. 102; s. c., 10 Am. Rep. 669. A slaughterhouse. But it is, prima facie, if within corporate limits. Pruner v. Pendleton, 75 Vt. 516; s. c., 40 Am. Rep. 738; Bushnel v. Robeson, 62 Iowa 540; Seifried v. Hays, 81 Ky. 377; s. c., 50 Am. A ditch dug in a borough street to lay a waterpipe from a spring to a private house, in pursuance of a municipal licence is not a public nuisance per se. Smith v. Simmons, 103 Pa. St. 32; s. c., 49 Am. Rep. 113. Nor are hitching racks on the side of a public city square. Harrison Co. Ct. v. Wall (Ky. 1889), 12 S. W. 130. Nor a pipe discharging water from the roof of a building to the sidewalk and there forming ice, the pipe not obstructing the sidewalk and being properly constructed. Wenzlick v. McCotter, 87 N. Y. 122; s. c., 41 Am. Rep. 358. An excavation near a public highway may constitute a nuisance per se if unguarded. State v. Soc. for Estab. Useful Mfg., 42 N. J. L. 504; Atty. Gen. v. Stewart, 20 N. J. Eq. 415.

In the latter case it was said by the court that "there are certain things and certain trades which are considered as nuisances of themselves, as a slaughterhouse in a thickly settled town, a pig-sty near a dwelling house; and, perhaps, to these may be added a fat-melting or rendering house when carried on extensively in a populous neighborhood or near inhabited dwellings. But these are not nuisances simply because they are erected within the limits of an incorporated city, and the question whether they will be a nuisance depends upon the extent of business carried on there and the manner in which it is con-

ture of the amusement, the manner in which the place is used, and its location.¹

Purprestures—(a) Definition.—A purpresture has been judicially defined as “an enclosure, by a private party, of a part of which belongs to, and ought to be open and free, to the use of the public at large. It is not necessarily a public nuisance. A public nuisance must be something which subjects the public to some degree of inconvenience or annoyance; but a purpresture may exist without putting the public to any inconvenience whatever.”²

Att’y. Gen. v. Evert Booming Co., 10 Ch. 462.

In the above case it was held, however, that the appropriation by a corporation of a portion of the bed of a small stream, not navigable except for floating rafts, etc., was neither a purpresture nor a nuisance, in the absence of proof that such appropriation was unreasonably abridged or inconvenient to the public use; also that as some appropriation of the bed of the stream was essential to the reasonable operation of the business of booming companies, the State having by general law provided for the incorporation of such companies, must be regarded as having waived its right to complain of a reasonable appropriation of that kind.

Additional Definitions of Purpresture.—The following definitions have also been given by the courts:

An encroachment upon, and an enclosure of the property of the crown in a highway, river or harbor. Attorney General v. Utica Ins. Co., 2 Johns Ch. (N. Y.) 381.

An unauthorized encroachment upon, and appropriation of land or water which is common and public. Moore v. Jackson, 2 Abbott’s N. Cas. (N. Y.) 215.

The encroachment by any person, by building or otherwise, on a street or some part of it, or such an enclosure, impediment or obstruction of it thereby, as to amount to the exclusion and hinderance of the citizens and the public from the full and beneficial enjoyment of it as a public street. Drake v. Hudson River R. Co., 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 548.

In Attorney General v. Chamberlaine, 4 K. & J. 292, it is observed by the court that any invasion of, or encroachment on, the soil of the sea-shore or bed of an estuary or navigable tidal river between high and low water mark while the title thereto remains in the crown, is a purpresture.

Purpresture signifies a close, or enclosure; that is, when one encroacheth and maketh that serviceable to himself which belongs to many. And because it is properly, when there is a house builded or an enclosure made of any part of the king’s demesne, or of a highway, or a common street, or public water, or such like things, it is derived of the French word pourpris, which signifies an enclosure; but specially applied, as is aforesaid, by the common law. (Quoting Coke on Lit., vol. 3.) Mayor etc. of Columbus v. Jaques, 30 Ga. 506.

(b) Remedies.—The remedies for injuries or offences of this character are by indictment;¹ by proceedings at law known as an “information of intrusion,” resulting in abatement;² and also by proceedings in equity for abatement and injunction, on information of the attorney general, and sometimes, but not usually or necessarily, at the relation of a private person.³

The Encyclopædic Dictionary states that its derivation is from the French pourprendre, to seize, to surround; pourprisure, an enclosure. In law, “a wrongful enclosure of, or encroachment on, the property of another.” It will be seen that this definition overlooks the very essential point that the property enclosed or encroached upon must be public property.

A purpresture is any encroachment upon real property or rights and easements incident thereto belonging to the public, by an enclosure or erection thereon, which, if made upon the property of an individual, would be a trespass. Wood Nuisance (2d ed.), § 77.

Recognizing Difference Between Purprestures and Public Nuisances.—The author first quoted also emphasizes the distinction between purprestures and public nuisances, and says that a purpresture, “strictly, is an encroachment upon a public right in lands or navigable streams, that does not operate as an obstruction or injury to individual members of the public, but only to some right incident and peculiar to it in its aggregate capacity as such. The distinction between nuisances and purprestures is really broad, although at first thought there may appear to be no material difference, and courts have very often fallen into grave errors from a failure to observe the real boundaries between the two.” Section 80.

It may be doubted, however, whether the fact that an encroachment on the public domain works also a special private injury, renders it any the less a purpresture in the technical sense.

In Hargrave's Law Tracts, De Jure Maris, p. 85, the author says: “It is not every building below the low-water mark that is ipso facto in law a nuisance; for that would destroy all the quays that there are in all the ports of England; for they are all built below high water mark, for otherwise vessels could not come at them to unload; and some are built below low-water mark, and it would be impossible for the king to license the building of a new wharf or quay, whereof there are a thousand instances, if ipso facto it were a common nuisance because it straitens the port, for the king cannot license a common nuisance. Indeed, where the soil is the king's, the building below the high-water mark is a purpresture, an encroachment and intrusion upon the king's soil, which he may either demolish, seize, or assent to, at his pleasure; but it is not ipso facto a common nuisance, unless, indeed, it be a damage to the port or navigation.”

In Bouvier's Law Dictionary the word is defined as “an enclosure by a private individual of a part of a common or public domain.”

Abbott's Law Dictionary gives it as “a taking wholly away. The act of a private individual in enclosing or building upon part of a common or public domain, and thus taking it away from the public.”

Purpresture in a forest signifieth any encroachment upon the king's forest, whether by building, enclosing, or using any liberty without lawful warrant so to do. Termes de la Ley.

Lord Coke (2 Co. Inst. 28) gives as instance of a purpresture, the erection of a building by an individual between high and low-water mark on the side of a public river.

But a court of equity will not interfere in this way when the nuisance or purpresture is of such a nature that it may be removed with equal facility by other means or legal authority.¹

In those cases where the purpresture did not produce actual damages to the public, but amounted merely to an encroachment upon a portion of the public domain, it was sometimes allowed to remain and be "arrented;" that is, a reasonable compensation for its continuance ascertained and paid on behalf of the public.²

(c) Indictment.—It has been said that a purpresture is not necessarily a nuisance, and that in order to render it indictable it must be shown to have caused the public actual annoyance or

Chancery and the Exchequer.—In Attorney General v. Forbes, 2 Myl. & C. 129, LORD COTTENHAM said: "With respect to the question of jurisdiction, it was broadly asserted that an application to this court to prevent a nuisance to a public road was never heard of. A little research, however, would have found many such instances. Many cases might have been produced, in which the court has interfered to prevent nuisances to public rivers and to public harbors. And the court of exchequer, as well as this court, acting as a court of equity, has a well established jurisdiction, upon a proceeding by way of information, to prevent nuisances to public harbors and public roads; and in short, generally to prevent public nuisances."

"The ground of this jurisdiction of courts of equity in cases of purpresture, as well as of public nuisances, undoubtedly is their ability to give a more complete and perfect remedy than is attainable at law, in order to prevent irreparable mischief, and also to suppress oppressive and vexatious litigation." Story's Eq. Jur. (13th ed.), § 924.

damage.¹ But, with a few exceptions, whenever the question has been presented to the courts in criminal or equitable proceedings, they have either intimated or expressly ruled that to encroach upon any part of the public domain is a public nuisance per se, and, it would seem to follow, indictable.²

1. Wood on Nuisances (2nd ed.), ch. 3; Attorney General v. Evarts Booming Co., 34 Mich. 402. And see dictum of BAYLEY, J., in Blundell v. Catterall, 5 B. & Ald. 268; s. c., 7 Eng. Com. L. 21, that "where an erection is made on the seashore without authority, the crown may treat it as a purpresture, and prosecute it accordingly; but it has never yet been held abatable or indictable, because it happens to interfere with the supposed common law right of bathing."

Existence of Natural Obstruction.—In State v. Shinkle, 40 Iowa 131, it was held not to be an indictable offence to obstruct a public highway in a portion thereof which on account of natural obstacles cannot be used by the public, BECK, J., said: "The act of erecting the structure did not obstruct the road; the obstruction was complete before the act was done. To punish a man for such an act would be contrary to the spirit of the law. He has injured no one; he has deprived no one of the exercise of any right, for the abstract right claimed it was impossible for any one to exercise."

Arkansas.—In State v. Holman, 29 Ark. 58, it was held that after the repeal of a statute making it an indictable offence to obstruct a public road, an indictment for such an obstruction would lie only where it was alleged that the defendant's act caused annoyance and interference with the rights of the entire community.

Infrequency of Injury.—In Rex v. Tindall, 6 Ad. & El. 143; s. c., 1 N. & P. 719, the defendant was indicted for a nuisance by erecting and continuing piles and planking in a harbor, and thereby obstructing it and rendering it dangerous. The jury found specially that by the defendant's works the harbor was, "in some extreme cases," rendered less secure. The court held that the defendant was not criminally liable for consequences so slight, uncertain and rare, and that a verdict of not guilty must be entered.

Benefits to Public.—In the case of Rex v. Russell, 6 Barn. & C. 566, which was an indictment for obstructing the navigation of the river Tyne by erecting staiths for the loading of coal into vessels, BAYLEY, J., charged the jury that "the use of the public water is not for passage only, but for many other purposes; and many of these purposes are entitled to supersede the right of passage and to narrow the right of passage to those parts which may not be requisite for greater and more beneficial purposes. Where there is a space of water of very considerable extent, some part may be most usefully applied for the purposes of commerce, and that which is so applied may be over and above that which is sufficient for navigation; and where a great public benefit results from the abridgment of the exercise of the rights of passage, the great public benefit makes that abridgment no nuisance, but a useful, beneficial and proper purpose." On motion for a new trial, this charge was sustained, though LORD TENTERDEN, C. J., took a contrary view.

2. Nuisance of Purpresture Cannot be Left to Jury.—In State v. Woodward, 23 Vt. 92, which was an indictment for an erection on public land, the court dispose of the question by saying: "Where the act complained of is the taking of property devoted to public use, and applying it to his own, the respondent is not entitled to have the question as to whether the erection is a nuisance submitted to the jury. Such an act is a nuisance in law, for the commission of which there can be no justification." This was approved and followed in State v. Atkinson, 24 Vt. 448.

Use Gained by Removal of Natural Obstruction.—In Com. v. Wilkinson, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 175, it was held that an indictment would lie for maintaining buildings within the limits of a highway though the portions thereof covered by them were entirely outside of the travelled path, and they had been built by removing a high bank.

The same principle is adhered to in Brownlow v. Tomlison, 1 M. & G. 484; Rex v. Wright, 3 B. & Ald. 681; Rex v. Carlisle, 6 Car. & P. 636.

II. NUISANCES IN RELATION TO PARTICULAR SUBJECTS—1. In General.—The variety of things, acts and omissions which may constitute a nuisance is so great as to render an enumeration impossible, no particular combination of sources of annoyance being necessary to constitute a nuisance, and the possible sources of annoyances not being exhaustively defined by any rule of law.

In making a particular classification of nuisances, the distinctions between that which is simply a trespass, and that which, while a trespass, is also a nuisance, must be borne in mind. Again, there are many acts and omissions which, in the accepted classification of legal topics, fall more accurately and readily into the subject of negligence than that of nuisance. Frequently the terms trespass and nuisance coincide in reference to a particular subject matter, certain nuisances being also continuing trespasses.

The scope of the term nuisance, however, is wider than that of trespass. "A man shall have an assize of nuisance for building a house higher than his house, and so near his, that the rain which falleth upon that house falleth upon the plaintiff's house."¹ And it is stated to be a nuisance if a tree growing on one's land overhangs a public road or the land of an adjoining owner.² In this class of cases, nuisance means nothing more than encroachment upon the rights of the public or upon one's neighbor. Generally, in former times, when forms of action were strict, and a mistake in choosing the proper form was fatal, there was a greater variety and choice of remedies in the case of such continuing trespasses as were denominated nuisances than in ordinary trespasses. Still, there is a real distinction between trespass and nuisance even when they are combined; the cause of action in trespass is

In People v. Vanderbilt, 28 N. Y. 396; s. c., 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 282, which was a proceeding to restrain the defendant from enlarging a pier or crib in New York harbor, the court held that the pier, being in public waters, was a purpresture and was a nuisance; and that the trial court properly excluded evidence to show that the pier had not been, and would not be when enlarged, any inconvenience to the public or interference with navigation. And see Hart v. Mayor of Albany, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 571; People v. Cunningham, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 524.

In Rex v. Ward, 4 Ad. & El. 384, it was held, on indictment for erecting an embankment in a navigable river, that a finding by the jury that the embankment was a nuisance, but that the inconvenience was counterbalanced by the public benefit arising from the alteration, amounted to a verdict of guilty; also that it was no defence that, although the embankment was in some degree a hinderance to navigation, it was advantageous in a greater degree to other uses of the port.

The enclosure by private persons of vacant public school lands belonging to the State, expressly forbidden by statute, was held to be both a purpresture and a nuisance, in State v. Goodnight (Tex.), 11 S. W. Rep. 119.

An indictment will lie at common law for obstructing a navigable sound, by placing posts therein, whether navigation has been actually interfered with or not, if it is thereby rendered less secure and less expeditious. State v. Narrows Island Club, 100 N. Car. 477; s. c., 5 S. E. Rep. 411.

1. Penruddock's Case, 5 Coke Rep. 100 b; Fay v. Prentice, 1 C. B. 829.

2. Lonsdale v. Nelson, 2 B. & C. 302.

interference with the right of a possessor in itself, while in nuisance it is the incommmodity which is proved in fact to be the consequence, or is presumed by the law to be the natural and necessary consequence of such interference: thus, an overhanging roof or cornice is a nuisance to the land it overhangs because of the necessary tendency to discharge rainwater upon it.¹

"Smoke, unaccompanied with noise or noxious vapor, noise alone, offensive vapors alone, although not injurious to health, may severally constitute a nuisance to the owner of adjoining or neighboring property."² The persistent ringing and tolling of large bells,³ the loud music, shouting, and other noises attending the performances of a circus,⁴ the collection of a crowd of disorderly people by a noisy entertainment of music and fireworks, to the grave annoyance of dwellers in the neighborhood,⁵ have all been held to be nuisances. The use of a dwelling house in a street of dwelling houses, in an ordinary and accustomed manner, is not a nuisance, though it may produce more or less noise and inconvenience to a neighbor. But the conversion of part of a house to an unusual purpose, or the simple maintenance of an arrangement which offends neighbors by noise or otherwise to an unusual and excessive extent, may be an actionable nuisance.⁶

2. Noise.—Whether noise alone constitutes a nuisance depends on circumstances. Trifling or occasional noises incident to the ordinary use of property, or pursuance of a trade or calling, do not, ordinarily, though those in the neighborhood are disturbed; but even a lawful trade not especially noisy, may constitute a nuisance if pursued at unseasonable hours; and the quality or character of the noise may be an important element on the question of nuisance or no nuisance. The fact that certain persons annoyed are supersensitive is not to be taken into account, the average susceptibility being the test. So a noise may be a nuisance if made mischievously or maliciously, while a similar noise might not be if made in carrying on a lawful calling. The matter of locality has much to do with the question. A noisy trade brought into a quiet neighborhood of dwelling houses may there be a nuisance, while it would not be elsewhere.⁷

The stamping of horses in a livery near the plaintiff's dwelling was adjudged an actionable nuisance. Bishop v. Banks, 33 Conn. 121; 87 Am. Dec. 197, noises from a pen to the disturbance of the plaintiff's rest were also adjudged a nuisance. In Rex v. Smith, 2 Stra. 704, and *Rex v. Dec. 254, there was a recovery against one who used a part of a building as a blacksmith's shop and let it out for the finishing of steam engines. In Bradley v. Gill, Lutwyche 69, conversion of a dwelling-house into a forge was adjudged a nuisance. Blotson v. Feetham, 2 Bing. Co.*, 1 Ch. 499, the business of hardening was adjudged a nuisance. In ... v. Firth, 1 H. & M. 573, the erection of a steam hammer was enjoined, and in Kinloch v. Robertson, 8 Sel. Dec. 175, a forge and anvil on the lower floor of a building, the upperment of which was used as a residence, was held an actionable nuisance. Again, in Roskell v. Whitworth, 19 W. R. 804, a steam hammer near a Catholic church, dwelling-house and school was held a nuisance. In Inchbald v. Barrington, L. R., 4 Ch. 388, a circus was enjoined, and in Walker v. Brewster, L. R., 5 Eq. 31, an injunction was granted against fetes, accompanied with music, dancing and fire-works, to the depreciation in value of the plaintiff's residence. In this case, however, the decision was not placed alone on the ground of the noise, but the collection of crowds was a material element. In McKeon v. See, 51 N. Y. 300; s. c., 10 Am. Rep. 659, the sawing of marble, accompanied by a jar which shook the plaintiff's building, was held a nuisance which should be enjoined. In Tanner v. Village of Albion, 5 Hill (N. 3. Smoke—(a) In General.—The owner of land has the right to the enjoyment of the air above it in a reasonably pure and wholesome condition; anything which deprives him of this enjoyment by polluting the air with smoke, dust, smells, noxious gases, or vapors, thus producing injury to property, health or comfort, is a nuisance.¹

The case of First Baptist Church v. Utica etc. R. Co., 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 313, is perhaps the only case wherein it is asserted that mere noise cannot, under any circumstances, constitute a nuisance, and this case was overruled in another case between the same parties, reported in 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 77, though in fact decided after the case in 6 Barb.; nor has the case in 6 Barb. been recognized since as an authority on this point. In discussing the question of the right to pure air, the courts of this country have often quoted the language of KNIGHT BRUCE, V. C., in Walter v. Selfe, 4 Eng. Law & Eq. 15, who there assumed that in order to render actionable the injury complained of, it should cause "an inconvenience materially interfering with the ordinary comfort, physically, of human existence, not merely according to elegant or dainty modes and habits of living, but according to plain, sober and simple notions among the English people."

In Embry v. Owen, 4 Eng. Law & Eq. 486, PARKE, B., observes that: "A man cannot occupy a dwelling and consume fuel in it for domestic purposes, without its in some degree impairing the natural purity of the air; he cannot erect a building or plant a tree near the house of another, without in some degree diminishing the quantity of light he enjoys; but such small interruptions give no right of action; for they are necessary incidents to the common enjoyment by all."

While some degree of smoke in the atmosphere, greater or less, according to the commercial character and the size of the community, is an evil unavoidably connected with life in modern times, and especially with life in cities; yet the law does not hesitate to declare smoke a nuisance when it permeates the atmosphere in unreasonably dense volumes, or is for any reason so carelessly or unskillfully disposed of as to produce an interruption of the comfortable enjoyment of life or property.

"By an atmosphere free from artificial impurities is meant, not air as free and pure as it naturally is, entirely devoid of impregnation from artificial cause, but an atmosphere as free and pure as could reasonably be expected, in view of the location and its business." Wood's Law of Nuisance (2nd ed.), § 496.

The difficulty of stating a rule which shall determine just what degree of inconvenience or annoyance in this class of cases must be endured as an evil necessarily incident to civilized life, in more or less thickly settled communities, is well expressed by POLLOCK, C. B., in his dissenting opinion in Barnford v. Turnley, 113 Eng. C. L. 66, as follows: "The compromises that belong to social life, and upon which the peace and comfort of it mainly depend, furnish an indefinite number of examples where some apparent natural right is invaded, or some enjoyment abridged, to provide for the more general convenience or necessities of the whole community; and I think the more the details of the question are examined the more clearly it will appear that all the law can do is to lay down some general and vague proposition which will be no guide to the jury in each particular case that may come before them."

In Crump v. Lambert, L. R., 3 Eq. 409, LORD ROMILLY, M. R., granted an injunction to restrain the issuing of smoke and noxious effluvia from a factory chimney, and the making of disagreeable noises in the factory, though the building was located in a manufacturing town, it being made to appear that such smoke, effluvia and noise seriously increased the discomfort caused by pre-existing nuisances of a similar character. The learned judge said: "The real question in all the cases is the question of fact, viz: whether the annoyance is such as to materially interfere with the ordinary comfort of human existence. This is what is established in St. Helen's Smelting Co. v. Tipping, and that is the question to be tried in the present case."

A more precise and satisfactory rule governs in cases where the damage complained of is done not to the plaintiff's mere enjoyment of pure air, but to his tangible property, as where smoke or vapor has damaged shade trees. In such cases the rule is that the injury must be tangible and substantial, "apparent to an ordinary person, and not merely such damage as can only be perceived by means of scientific or microscopic investigation." Salvin v. North Brancepeth Coal Co., 31 L. T., N. S. 154. In that case the plaintiff complained that the defendant's coke burning works emitted such quantities of smoke and sulphuric acid as to greatly damage the trees on his plantation adjoining the works. The affidavits considered by the master of the rolls and by the court on appeal, showed that a vast amount of smoke and vapor from defendant's works and from many others of a similar nature passed over the premises, but it was not shown that a single tree had been killed or outwardly injured thereby; and the court refused to consider evidence of experts based upon microscopical and other scientific investigations, tending to show the probable injury to the growth of the trees if the nuisance were continued. LORD JUSTICE JAMES said: "When the master of the rolls said that the damage must be visible, it appears to me that he was quite right, and, as I understand it, it amounts to this, that although when you once establish the fact of actual substantial damage, it is quite right and legitimate to have recourse to scientific evidence upon the question of causes to which that damage is to be referred. Yet if you are obliged to start with scientific evidence, such as that procured by the microscope of the naturalist or the tests of the chemist, for the purpose of establishing the damage itself, that will

In the case of smoke, dust, or noxious vapors, the law recognizes only a tangible or visible injury.¹ There must be, also, to justify the interposition of the law, an unreasonable use by the defendant of his property—that is, an unreasonable use in view of the circumstances relied on to sustain the charge of nuisance; for example, if one sort of fuel will produce a smoke less obnoxious than another sort, it is his duty to use the least troublesome;² so a smoke which left a bad taste in the mouths of those breathing it,³ and a peculiarly pungent smoke,⁴ were held nuisances. The degree of personal discomfort necessary to make a lawful business a nuisance is one of fact in the circumstances, not of law.⁵ A rule of law cannot be laid down.⁶ There must be a sensible diminution of the comfortable enjoyment of the plaintiff's premises, or such physical discomfort as to detract sensibly from the ordinary enjoyment of life. The tangible injury to property required may consist of a discoloration of buildings or furniture, or of clothes or goods, an injury to vegetation, a deposit of cinders.⁶ It is not enough that the rental value of the plaintiff's property is impaired,⁷ or that a fastidious taste or delicate sensibility is disturbed.⁸ The subject has often been before the courts.⁹

not suffice. It must be an actual damage, capable of being shown by a plain witness to a plain common jurymen. The damage must also be substantial, and it must be, in my view, actual—that is to say, the court has no right whatever, in dealing with questions of this kind to have regard to contingent, prospective or remote damages.”

The leading case on this subject is St. Helen's Smelting Co. v. Tipping, 12 L. T., N. S. 776; 11 H. of L. Cas. 642, which holds that the injury must be “sensible.”

3. Saville v. Kilner, 26 L. T., N. S. 277, where the court said: “If smoke produces an unpleasant taste in the mouths of persons passing the works, why are they not to be protected? It is only necessary to establish the fact that it is hurtful to life, or detrimental to its comfortable enjoyment.”

But the diminution in rental value may constitute an element of damage, and may be, where a nuisance is proved of which the law will take cognizance, the measure of damage in some cases. *Houghton v. 9. In Galbraith v. Oliver, 3 Pittsb. Smith*, 8 Sim. 272, a chimney, the top of which was lower than surrounding chimneys, was enjoined as a nuisance. In Whitney v. Bartholomew, 21 Conn. 213, there was a verdict against the owner of a blacksmith's shop, the chimneys of which passed cinders, ashes and smoke in large quantities. Rhodes v. Dunbar, 57 Pa. St. 274; s. c., 98 Am. Dec. 221, was the case of a planing mill, the chimneys of which created similar damage. In Saville v. Kilner, 26 L. T., N. S. 277, the smoke from glass-works

(b) From Brick Burning.—The business of brick-burning may constitute a nuisance by the creation of smoke and noxious gases, vapors or odors, to the injury of property or to the discomfort of neighbors. The cases are cases of private nuisance; but this, doubtless, is owing to the fact merely that the question has not come before an appellate court in a criminal prosecution.

The rule of law is only that applicable to nuisances generally. At an early day it was suggested that brick-burning could not be deemed a nuisance where it was done upon the land from which the brick were taken; but this notion has no place in the law as it stands to-day; nor is convenience of place an excuse any more than in other cases of the exercise of trades and occupations, which become nuisances by reason of their location and surround-furnaces was adjudged a nuisance, and in Cartwright v. Gray, 12 Grant's Ch. (Ont.) 400, the smoke from a carpenter's shop containing a planing machine and circular saw propelled by steam. In the following cases smoke alone has been held a nuisance: Hyatt v. Myers, 71 N. Car. 271, and Rhodes v. Dunbar, 57 Pa. St. 275; s. c., 98 Am. Dec. 221, smoke from a planing mill; in Hutchins v. Smith, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 252, from a lime-kiln; Regina v. Waterhouse, L. R., 7 Q. B. 545, from dye-works; Higgins v. Guardians, 22 L. T., N. In Daniels v. Keokuk Water Works, 61 Iowa 549, the court refused to relieve one who complained of smoke and gases escaping from a smoke-stack belonging to water works, on which the city was dependent for its water supply; in Dunsmore v. Central Iowa R. Co., 72 Iowa 182, the court refused to sustain a verdict in favor of one who contended that a coal-chute on a railroad near his dwelling-house was an actionable nuisance; and in Richards' Appeal, 57 Pa. St. 105; s. c., 98 Am. Dec. 202, the court refused to enjoin the use of semi-bituminous coal in iron works, though the plaintiff proved a sensible injury, and might have been entitled to some damages at law. And see Baltimore etc. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317; Sullivan v. Royer, 72 Cal. 248; Hurlburt v. McKone, 55 Conn. 31; Carhart v. Auburn Gas Light Co., 22 Barb. (N. The English Public Health act of 1875, § 91, makes a chimney of a manufacturing establishment which does not consume its smoke as far as practicable an abatable nuisance. See, on the construction of this statute, Weekes v. King, 53 L. T. 31.

ings.¹ The business is not a nuisance per se,² and the question becomes one of fact in the circumstances, the test being the actual injury done.³ An injury to trees, plants and shrubs may give a cause of action.⁴

4. Dust.—To fill the air with dust or chaff in the pursuit of a trade or occupation, or otherwise, to the injury of others, is a nuisance.⁵ This rule is illustrated in the cases appertaining to smoke and noxious vapors.

5. Vapors.—In the case of nuisances consisting of noxious vapors, the rule is similar to that laid down in the cases relating to smoke, and differs only in its application to the subject matter. At an early day the courts enunciated the rule with reference to

1. The earliest case on the subject of brick burning is that of the Duke of Grafton v. Hilliard, decided in 1736, not reported, but referred to in Attorney General v. Cleaver, 18 Ves. Jr. 210, wherein LORD ELDON says that the court in the Duke of Grafton's case held that "the manufacture of bricks, though near the habitations of men, if carried on for the purpose of making habitations for them, is not a public nuisance." It is very doubtful, however, if any such decision was made or such language used. See note to Walter v. Selfe, 4 Eng. L. & Eq. 18, from which it would appear that the facts of the unreported case were that an injunction had been granted in the first instance restraining brick burning, but was dissolved upon the defendant's showing that it would really produce no annoyance or injury to the plaintiff.

The leading case is Walter v. Selfe (1851), 15 Jur. 416; 4 Eng. L. & Eq. 18, where an injunction was granted against the burning of bricks in such a manner as to annoy the plaintiff or injure his buildings and shrubbery.

In Great Britain, with the exception of the case of Hole v. Barlow (1858), 4 C. B., N. S. 336, the decisions are harmonious. Hole v. Barlow is entitled to no weight at the present time, having been overruled in effect four years after its decision in Beardmore v. Tredwell, 31 L. J., Ch. 892, and overruled directly in Bamford v. Turnley, 31 L. J., Q. B. 286. In Cavey v. Ledbitter, 13 C. B., N. S. 470, in Roberts v. Clark, 18 L. T., N. S. 49, Bareham v. Hall, 22 L. T., N. S. 116, and Luscombe v. Steer, 17 L. T., N. S. 229, the doctrine of Hole v. Barlow was again departed from, and has been to the present time.

There is a Pennsylvania case, Huckentine's Appeal, 70 Pa. St. 102; s. c., 10 Am. Rep. 669, where language not essential to the decision was so used as to make it possible that in that State the rule recognized elsewhere would not prevail. Here an injunction was refused on the ground that the burden of proving injury and damage had not been sustained. This language was disapproved in Campbell v. Seaman, 2 N. Y. Sup. Ct. Rep. 231 (affirmed on appeal, 63 N. Y. 368; s. c., 20 Am. Rep. 567).

This was a case where the plaintiffs owned improved lands adjacent to the defendant's brickyard upon which he burned brick by the use of mineral coal, thus generating sulphurous acid gas, poisonous to vegetation. This gas was carried by the wind over and upon the plaintiffs' land, and had already destroyed many of their ornamental trees, and would apparently continue to destroy them. The defendant's premises had been used as a brickyard for more than 25 years, and before the plaintiffs acquired their land. It was held that the defendant should be enjoined from burning mineral coal, and that the beneficial nature of the business was no defence. Upon the question of reasonable use of one's property, the court (per POTTER, J.) said: "A reasonable use can never be construed to include those uses which produce destructive vapors and noxious smells that result in material injury to the property, and to the comfort of the existence of those who dwell in the neighborhood."

Richards*, 4 Assize Book, fol. 3, p. 3, where it was held that a nuisance consisting of vapors arising from a limekiln and escaping over the plaintiff's premises and burning and scorching his trees was well assigned. In Poynton v. Gill, 2 Rolle's Abr. 140, it was held that an action lay for melting lead so near the plaintiff's land that it spoiled his grass and trees, and caused him the lives of two horses and a cow. In Rex v. Wilcox, 2 Salk. 458, one maintaining a glasshouse from which smoke and vapors escaped, was held properly convicted of maintaining a public nuisance. In Rex v. Pierce, 2 Shower 327, the vapors from a soap-boiling establishment were held a public nuisance. There is an anonymous case reported in 1 Ventris 26, sustaining a presentment against a glass manufacturer; and in Eldred's Case, 9 Coke 59, it was said that a limekiln was a nuisance when so near a dwelling-house as to render it uninhabitable by reason of smoke. zance may be created not only by a manufacture or occupation, but by collecting or setting back water.¹

6. Stenches—(a) In General.—The creation of stenches and noisome odors has been recognized always as a nuisance. The cases are very numerous where this class of nuisances has been discussed,² and a trade or manufacture so conducted as to produce offensive stenches will be enjoined, or deemed a subject for damages, or an indictment, as the case may be. Here, as in the case of smoke, dust or vapors, the difficulty is not in defining the rule of law, but in applying it. The stenches or odors must be sensibly offensive or produce such actual physical discomfort as to interfere materially with comfort;³ and, this being so, it is not required that the odors be positively hurtful or unwholesome.⁴

(b) Slaughterhouses.—A slaughter-house prima facie is a nuisance: if in a public place, a public nuisance; if where indi-

In Catlin v. Valentine, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 575; s. c., 38 Am. Dec. 567, WALWORTH, CH., said, upon an application for an injunction against the erection of a slaughter-house: "To constitute a nuisance, it is not necessary that the noxious trade or business should endanger the health of the neighborhood. It is sufficient if it produces that which is offensive to the senses, and which renders the enjoyment of life uncomfortable."

By the 112th section of the English Public Health act of 1875, it is provided that persons establishing within the district of an urban authority, without its consent in writing, the trade of blood boiler, bone boiler, fellmonger, soap boiler, tallow melter, or tripe boiler, or any other noxious or offensive trade or manufacture, shall be liable to a penalty. It was held in Braintree Local Board v. Boyton, 52 L. T. 98, that a fish-frying business was not a noxious or offensive business within the meaning of the section.

vidual citizens are annoyed, a private nuisance as to them.¹ Slaughterhouses are frequent subjects of legislative or municipal regulation.

(c) Miscellaneous Offensive Occupations.—These rules have been applied, with such variations only as the circumstances of the particular cases in which they have been invoked have required, to tanneries,² tallow factories and melting houses;³ soap boiling,⁴ fat boiling,⁵ and bone boiling⁶ establishments; glue works,⁷ gas works,⁸

(d) Privies and Cesspools.—So a privy or cesspool is prima facie a nuisance, and is liable to be adjudged such unless so arranged as not to constitute an annoyance by reason of the escape of smells or of matter on neighboring premises or to the corruption of wells and springs.¹

7. Excessive Heat.—Other instances of nuisances arising from the use of property are the maintenance of such an excessive degree of heat in a building as to prevent the owner of an adjoining building from using his property for ordinary purposes.²

8. Explosive and Inflammable Substances.—The keeping of explosive or inflammable substances in such a way as to render them dangerous, or the maintenance of a powder magazine endangering neighboring property.³

469, an establishment for the boiling of horseflesh and carrion; in Styan v. Hutchinson, 2 Selwyn 1047, a tobacco mill; in Rex v. Morris, Ventris 26, a brewery; in Kennedy v. Phelps, 10 La. 2. In Grady v. Walsner, 46 Ala. 381; s. c., 7 Am. Rep. 593, defendant's dwelling and plaintiff's store adjoined, being separated by an ordinary partition wall. Defendant operated a cooking range in his house, in such close proximity to the partition that the heat from the range as it was ordinarily used injured the goods in plaintiff's store, and rendered the temperature therein unpleasantly high. It was held that such use of the range, though it was for ordinary domestic purposes, was a nuisance and that the landlord who put it there was liable for the damage, as well as the tenant in whose possession it was.

In Reinhardt v. Mentasti, 61 L. T., N. S. 328, the owners of a hotel in the city of London erected a stove in their hotel kitchen which, though used in a reasonable and careful manner, produced such a heat as to render the wine cellar of an adjoining dwelling house unfit for use as such. It was held that such use of the kitchen would be restrained. In this case the question of reasonable use of one's own property was carefully discussed by KEENEWICH, J., and the following conclusion arrived at: "It seems to me, therefore, that notwithstanding some passages to the contrary, the application of the principle governing the jurisdiction of the court in cases of nuisance does not depend on the question whether the defendant is using his own reasonably or otherwise. The real question is, does he injure his neighbor?"

9. Fires.—Fires so maintained in buildings or in the operation of machinery as to be dangerous.¹

Collerd, 42 N. J. L. 189; s. c., 36 Am. Rep. 508; Cook v. Anderson, 85 Ala. 99.

In Myers v. Malcolm, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 292; s. c., 41 Am. Dec. 744, the substance was powder kept in the upper story of a carriage shop surrounded by frame buildings. It was held that such keeping was negligent. In People v. Sands, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 78; s. c., 3 Am. Dec. 296, it was held that to charge the keeping of fifty barrels of powder near a street was not sufficient to charge a nuisance, there being no allegation that it was negligently kept. But in Heeg v. Licht, 80 N. Y. 579; s. c., 36 Am. Rep. 654, it was held that the element of negligence cut no figure in the case, and that the fact that the defendant maintained a powder magazine on his premises, and that it exploded to the plaintiff's injury, created a cause of action irrespective of the question of negligence, and the court said that neither People v. Sands, which raised only a question of criminal pleading, nor Fillo v. Jones, 2 Abb. C. & App. Dec. (N. Y.) 421, was authority for a contrary doctrine.

In Bradley v. People, 56 Barb. (N. Y.) 72, a conviction for maintaining a powder house near a city was sustained; in Comminge v. Stevenson, 70 Tex. 642, it was held that a powder magazine within four hundred feet of a dwelling house constituted an actionable nuisance. In Emory v. Hazard Powder Co., 24 S. Car. 476, it was held that a powder magazine might be a nuisance, although one household only was endangered thereby.

In Wier's Appeal, 74 Pa. St. 230, the court, in view of the locality and the quantity of gunpowder to be kept in a powder magazine half a mile from dwellings, but in a neighborhood where further building was to be expected, granted an injunction.

In Cheatham v. Shearon, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 213, the court said that a powder house in a populous part of a city, wherein were stored large quantities of powder, was per se a nuisance, and founded its decision on the elementary treatises and on the anonymous case reported in Holt's Reports 499, where one was indicted for a nuisance for keeping several barrels of gunpowder in a house till he could conveniently send them to the city. And a similar decision was reached in Laffin-Rand Powder Co. v. Tearney (Ill.), 23 N. E. Rep. 389.

In Blanc v. Murray, 36 La. An. 162; s. c., 51 Am. Rep. 7, the court enjoined, at the instance of the owner of a dwelling house, the construction within the fire limits of a city and in violation of its ordinance, of a wooden building to be filled with lumber and employed in manufacture.

In Duncan v. Hayes, 22 N. J. Eq. 25, however, the complaint sought to enjoin the erection of a planing and sawmill, on the ground that it would expose her own buildings to danger from fire, and greatly increase insurance rates. The injunction was denied, ZABRISKIE, CH., saying: "I know of no precedent for an injunction against any business on account of an increased risk from fire to the adjoining buildings." To the same effect are Dorsey v. Allen, 85 N. Car. 358; s. c., 39 Am. Rep. 704, the case of a planing mill and cotton gin; Green v. Lake, 54 Miss. 540; s. c., 28 Am. Rep. 360, a flouring mill, and Rhodes v. Dunbar, 57 Pa.

10. Blasting.—Blasting rocks, to the danger of the neighborhood.¹

11. Spring Guns and Traps.—Spring guns and traps placed by one upon his own premises, but to the danger of others, are a nuisance.²

12. Common Scold.—A common scold is a common-law nuisance. The practice of scolding must be habitual. At common law the offence was confined to women and was punishable by fine.³ By

The fact that defendants have complied with a city ordinance requiring certain precautions in all cases of blasting, does not prevent a court from continuing an injunction restraining the defendants from "so blasting . . . that any rock so blasted shall fall or be thrown upon the premises of the plaintiff, or said premises be in any way injured." Rogers v. Hanfield, 14 Daly 339.

2. State v. Moore, 31 Conn. 479; s. c., 83 Am. Dec. 159, was a criminal prosecution for maintaining loaded guns with springs attached to their triggers in defendant's blacksmith shop as a protection against burglars who had entered and tried to enter the shop. It was held that the facts did not authorize a conviction in that it did not appear that the shot could injure one upon the highway.

In Ilott v. Wilkes, 3 B. & Ald. 304, the plaintiff was a trespasser and was injured by a spring gun, but he had had ample notice that there were spring guns in that locality, though not of the precise spot, and the court held that because of such notice he could not recover. But the principle of the text was fully recognized, BAYLEY, J., saying: "Although it may be lawful to put those instruments on a man's own ground, yet, as they are calculated to produce great bodily injury to innocent persons (for many trespassers are comparatively innocent), it is necessary to give as much notice to the public as you can, so as to put people on their guard against danger."

In Deane v. Clayton, 7 Taunt. 489; s. c., 2 Eng. C. L. 461, the plaintiff was hunting with his dog on A's land by the latter's permission. Immediately adjoining was the land of the defendant, who, to protect his hares from dogs, had fastened sharp spikes into trees in the lane of the hare paths, at such height that dogs would be injured by running against them. The defendant had posted numerous notices on his premises giving warning of the existence of the spikes, but the plaintiff could not and did not see the notice. While the plaintiff was hunting, his dog started a hare on A's land, which ran in the direction of the defendant's land, hotly pursued by the dog. The plaintiff used every effort to call the dog back, but without success; he followed the hare into the defendant's close, and was killed by coming in contact with one of the spikes. In an action for the value of the dog it was held that the defendant was liable.

In Bird v. Holbrook, 4 Bing. 628, the plaintiff was trespassing on the defendant's premises, in pursuit of a stray fowl, and stepped on a wire which discharged a concealed spring gun set by the defendant, and was injured. The court held that an action for the damages would lie, notwithstanding the plaintiff was a trespasser. To the same effect is Jay v. Whitfield, 3 B. & A. 308. And see Jordin v. Crump, 8 M. & W. 787.

The English statute (24 & 25 Vict., ch. 100, § 31) makes it a misdemeanor to set spring guns or traps with the intent to harm trespassers or other persons, otherwise than in dwelling houses at night for their protection.

In Com. v. Mohn, 52 Pa. St. 243; s. c., 91 Am. Dec. 153, WOODWARD, C. J., said: "As to the unreasonable-statute it is sometimes made to extend to both sexes.¹

13. Collecting Crowds.—Any business, use of property or act that assembles or tends to assemble disorderly crowds in public places is a nuisance per se.²

14. Exciting Public Alarm.—Anything that tends unnecessarily to create public alarm or disturb the feeling of public security is a public nuisance.³

ness of holding women liable to punishment for a too free use of their tongue, it is enough to say that the common law, which is the expressed wisdom of ages, adjudges that it is not unreasonable." Anger is not an element of the offence. United States v. Royall, 3 Cranch (C. C.) 620. On the contrary, anger and provocation may excuse it. Greenwault's Case, 4 City Hall Rec. (N. Y.) 174.

1. In Massachusetts, for example, where the statute speaks of "common railers and brawlers," and is applied to both sexes.

2. In Rex v. Moore, 3 B. & Ad. 184, the defendant devoted a lot near a highway to the use of a shooting alley. In this lot large numbers of people habitually assembled to shoot at pigeons and other marks. Many of these persons were disorderly, and with their firearms created much disturbance. It was held that an indictment would lie against the defendant for maintaining a nuisance.

So in Bostock v. North Staffordshire R. Co., 5 De G. & S. 584, it was held that holding a regatta near plaintiff's house, calling together a crowd, was a nuisance per se.

In Walker v. Brewster, L. R., 5 Eq. 25, it was held that the assembling of noisy people to the annoyance of the neighborhood outside grounds in which entertainments with music and fireworks are being given for profit is a nuisance. Also that firing rockets and establishing a band of music which played twice a week for several hours continually near a public place was a nuisance. In this case the court said: "That the collection of crowds is a nuisance has been fully established." See also Inchbald v. Robinson, L. R., 4 Ch. App. 388; Crump v. Lambert, L. R., 3 Eq. 409.

In Morristown v. Moyer, 67 Pa. St. 355, it was held that loungers on the street were a public nuisance.

So in Com. v. Miliman, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 403, it was held that a constable who obstructed a highway by collecting a crowd to attend an execution sale was indictable as maintaining a nuisance. Com. v. Passmore, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 217.

But in State v. Hughes, 72 N. Car. 25, the collecting of a crowd on the street to view a procession, or the reasonable celebration of a great public event was held not to be a nuisance per se, even though in violation of the orders of the mayor. In this case the court said: "In a popular government like ours the laws allow great latitude to public demonstrations, whether political, social or moral, and it requires but little reflection to foresee if such acts are to be construed to be indictable, that the doctrine of riots and common nuisances would be extended far beyond the limits hitherto circumscribing them, and would put an end to all public celebrations however innocent or commendable the purpose."

In Rex v. Carlile, 6 C. & P. 628, it was held that an exhibition in a shop window tending to collect a crowd on the street in front is a common nuisance.

So the exhibition of an effigy on the street is a nuisance, as it tends to collect a crowd. Com. v. Haines, 4 Clark (Pa.) 17.

In Barker v. Com., 19 Pa. St. 412, it was held that a person addressing a crowd on the street in boisterous and indecent language is guilty of a public nuisance.

So in Com. v. Spratt, 14 Phila. (Pa.) 365, it was held that an outcry in the streets so that people collect in consequence, and the street is obstructed is a public nuisance.

In Village of Des Plaines v. Poyer, 123 Ill. 348, it was held that public picnics and dances are not per se common nuisances, and a village ordinance prohibiting them in general terms is unreasonable and void.

3. In Com. v. Cassidy, 6 Phila. (Pa.) 82, where a handbill was distributed which described a black woman, falsely declaring her to be a child stealer, it was held that such a

III. INJUNCTION—1. Principles Governing—(See also INJUNCTION).
 —The remedies for nuisances are threefold: preventive, compensatory and punitive. The first divides itself again into the remedy by abatement, without process of law, and by injunction. The compensatory remedy is an action at law for damages, the punitive remedy an indictment on behalf of the public.

The most efficient and flexible remedy is that of injunction. Under this form the court can prevent that from being done which, if done, would cause a nuisance; it can command the destruction of buildings or the cessation of works which violate a neighbor's rights; ¹ where there is a disputed question of right between the parties, it can suspend the operations complained of until that question is finally decided; and its orders may be either absolute or conditional upon the fulfilment by either or both of the parties of such undertakings as appear just in the particular case.²

It is a matter of common learning and practice that an injunction is not, like damages, a remedy (as it is said) ex debito justitiæ. Whether it shall be granted or not in a given case is in the judicial discretion of the court, now guided by principles which have become pretty well settled. In order to obtain an injunction it must be shown that the injury complained of as present or impending is such as by reason of its gravity, or its permanent character, or both, cannot be adequately compensated in damages. The injury must be either irreparable or continuous. This remedy is therefore not appropriate for damage which is in its nature temporary and intermittent, or accidental and occasional, or for an interference with legal rights which is trifling in amount and effect.

Apprehension of future mischief from something in itself lawful and capable of being done without creating a nuisance is no ground for an injunction. "There must, if no actual damage is proved, be proof of imminent danger; and there must also be proof that the apprehended damage will, if it comes, be very substantial."³ But where a nuisance is shown to exist, all the probable consequences are taken into account in determining whether the injury is serious within the meaning of the rule on which the court acts. But there must be substantial injury in view to begin with.⁴

bill was a public nuisance, in that it created alarm and tended to disturb the peace and order of the community.

1. The form of order does not go to prohibit carrying on of such and such operations absolutely, but "so as to cause a nuisance to the plaintiff," or like words. See Lingwood v. Stowmarket Co., 1 Eq. 77, 336, and precedents in Seton, pt. 2, ch. 5, § 5.

2. Thus, where the complaint was of special damage or danger from something alleged to be a public nuisance, an interlocutory injunction has been granted on the terms of the plaintiff bringing an indictment. Hepburn v. Lordan, 2 H. & M. 345.

3. Fletcher v. Bealey, 28 Ch. Div. 688.

4. Salvin v. North Brancepeth Coal Co., 9 L. R., Ch. 705; Pollock on Torts 344.

2. Laches and Acquiescence—(See also LACHES).—The right to invoke the interposition of a court of equity may be barred by delay and acquiescence.¹

Where a trifling trespass or interference with an ancient right has been submitted to without protest for six years, equity will not exercise its jurisdiction, but will leave the plaintiffs to their remedies at law. Gaunt v. Fynney, 8 L. R., Ch. 8; 42 L. J., Ch. 122.

The owners of glassworks which were erected in 1845, erected in 1847, and subsequent years down to 1863, seven new furnaces, by reason of which the quantity of smoke and vapor emitted from the works was greatly increased. Plaintiff owned property adjoining the works, which he and his predecessors in title had enjoyed long before the erection of the works, and he had at considerable expense fitted up a portion of the property for building purposes, but on account of the offensive smoke, etc., from the glassworks he had been prevented from carrying out this plan. In 1870 he filed a bill to restrain the emission of smoke and vapor from the new kilns. It was held that he was not barred by delay, and that he was entitled to an injunction as to the whole of the new works. Savile v. Kilner, 26 L. T., N. S. 277.

Where a person lies by and permits another to erect works at great expense, and to use and operate them for a number of years without raising any objection, he has no standing in a court of equity to restrain the use of the works in the same manner that they have always been used. Having acquiesced so long, he must continue to acquiesce or look to a court of law for his remedy. Southard v. Morris Canal Co., 1 N. J. Eq. 518.

So if he has given his consent, either expressly or impliedly, to the erection of expensive works, he cannot afterwards enjoin their operation, though they prove more annoying and injurious than he anticipated. Nor can he restrain the erection of further works necessary to the use of, and connected with, the original. But he cannot be compelled to submit to a radical change in the manner of operating the works. Hulme v. Shreve, 4 N. J. Eq. 116.

Where a party does not take an injunction in the first instance, but permits the others to go on erecting the building and fixtures from which a nuisance is anticipated, he can obtain a perpetual injunction against the continuance of the nuisance only by showing that in the meantime the fact of the existence of the nuisance has been established by an action at law, or, at all events, he must support his application by strong and unanswerable proof of nuisance. Simpson v. Justice, 8 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 115.

In the case of a private nuisance, the fact that the complainant has slept upon his rights for seven years, during all of which time the nuisance openly existed, raises a strong, if not conclusive, presumption that the injury complained of is not of such a pressing and urgent nature as to entitle him to have it restrained by a special injunction. Heiskell v. Gross, 7 Phila. (Pa.) 317.

Where three years' delay in applying for an injunction against the obstruction of a public road remains unaccounted for, and the complainant appears to be inconvenienced by the ob-

Mere delay without acquiescence will not necessarily constitute a bar to relief.¹

Silence, while the perpetrator of the nuisance is expending money to perpetuate it, may preclude relief on the principle of estoppel.²

IV. CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS—1. Where Maintainable.—In general, it may be said that a nuisance is indictable where the injury is general, and where public rights are affected, even though the nuisance may produce at the same time a special and actionable injury to individuals. The subjoined extract from Addison on Torts will serve to illustrate the common-law definition of indictable nuisances:

“The following nuisances have been held indictable: The overcrowding of houses with poor people in time of infection of plague, and thereby endangering the health of the neighborhood; the carrying of people infected with contagious disstruction merely as one of the public, the injunction will be denied. Richeson v. Richeson, 8 Ill. App. 204.

Where a factory alleged to emit cinders from its smokestack had been operated in the same manner for seven years without complaint, a very clear and positive showing of nuisance is necessary to warrant an injunction. Louisville Coffin Co. v. Warren, 78 Ky. 400.

A mining company constructed and operated its first washer more than three years before the complainant sued to enjoin its operation, on the ground that it polluted a watercourse on which he was a riparian owner. Prior thereto, he having made no objection, defendant from time to time enlarged its business by constructing and operating additional washers on the same stream. Held, that the complainant had not exercised reasonable diligence and must be left to his remedy at law. Clifton Iron Co. v. Dye, 87 Ala. 468.

The acquiescence of plaintiff's grantor in the acts of defendant is no defence. Learned v. Castle, 78 Cal. 454.

In Snow v. Williams, 16 Hun (N. Y.) 468, it was held that the owner of a farm through which a stream flowed was not precluded from maintaining an action to enjoin the operation of a cheese factory on the stream above in such manner as to pollute the water with whey, by the fact that at the time the factory was built he was acquainted with the custom of such factories to thus dispose of surplus whey, and that he had patronized the factory for two years before the defendant purchased it.

Plaintiff's mere failure to protest against the construction of a mill and the use of a mill pond, in the absence of evidence that the defendant was induced by his silence to do anything he would not otherwise have done, and a reasonable delay in suing in order to be sure that the pond was a nuisance, will not estop the plaintiff from maintaining an action to abate it. Leonard v. Spencer, 108 N. Y. 338.

orders along public thoroughfares in such a way as to endanger the health of the passengers;¹ the exposure for sale in a public place of a horse affected with glanders;² the keeping of large quantities of gunpowder in dangerous proximity to populous neighborhoods;³ the carrying on of noxious and offensive manufactures in public places or adjoining public thoroughfares, so as seriously to incommode and annoy large numbers of persons;⁴ holding out inducements to people to collect together in large crowds, to the obstruction of public thoroughfares, the treading down the grass of the neighboring meadows, the destruction of fences, or the creation of alarm and disturbance in the surrounding neighborhood;⁵ the making of a great noise in the night with a speaking trumpet, to the disturbance of divers householders;⁶ sawing of logs of timber in a public street, an incumbering a road or footpath with barrels of beer;⁷ the opening of new coal holes, and unloading coals in a public thoroughfare, in places where no coal-hole previously existed, and where the highway was not originally dedicated subject to the use of it for domestic coaling;⁸ making excavations and openings in the soil of a highway, or in the pavement of a public street, for water, gas, sewerage, or other purposes, without parliamentary authority;⁹ the use on a highway of a traction steam-engine, which, by its noise and appearance, frightens horses and makes the highway dangerous to persons riding or driving;¹⁰ mixing of large quantities of alum and deleterious and prohibited ingredients in bread, intended for the use and consumption of the public.¹¹

2. Indictment—(a) Description.—The nuisance should be described with certainty, according to the circumstances, and with the detail and fulness usual in indictments. Enough must be alleged to identify the act and to show guilt prima facie. If the statute makes it an offence to put carcasses into rivers, fields, etc., "to the injury of the health or to the annoyance of the citizens," a complaint not charging such injury or annoyance is insufficient. State v. Wahl, 35 Kan. 608.

A complaint which charges "the disturbance of divers citizens" by noises in the public streets will not support a conviction. There should have been an allegation that the noises were to the common nuisance of all the citizens of the commonwealth, etc. Com. v. Smith, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 80.

As, under the New York Penal Code, § 365, one cannot be guilty of maintaining a public nuisance without being guilty of an unlawful act or omission, an indictment charging merely that the proprietor of certain premises unlawfully permitted the playing of base ball there on Sunday, and allowed bad language and great noise, confusion, and uproar, is demurrable as failing to charge unlawful action or participation on his part, or more than a mere negative permission. People v. Monteverde, 43 Hun (N. Y.) 447.

An indictment for maintaining a nuisance, which charges that in a certain county, continually from a named day till the finding of the indictment, defendant wilfully and unlawfully caused and suffered carcasses, filth, and offal to be collected near the dwelling houses of named persons, to their prejudice, and to the common nuisance of all the people lawfully in that locality, sufficiently describes the character of the nuisance and its locality, under Crim. Code Ill., § 221. Seacord v. People, 22 Ill. App. 279; affirmed, 121 Ill. 623.

Bill of Particulars.—If the indictment be so general that it fails to give the defendant sufficient information to enable him to procure his defence, the court will order the public prosecutor to furnish a bill of particulars of the several acts of nuisance intended to be proved. Rex v. Curwood, 3 Ad. & El. 815; Rex v. Marquis of Downshire, 4 Ad. & El. 698.

Surplusage.—In an indictment for keeping a nuisance in a certain building, it is surplusage to charge that the building was under defendant's control. State v. Schilling, 14 Iowa 455.

Intent.—Under a statute making corporations criminally liable for obstructing highways, allegations that there was a highway; that defendant obstructed it in a specified manner, and that travel was thereby obstructed and the public greatly inconvenienced, are sufficient, though there is no charge of criminal intent. State v. Baltimore etc. R. Co., 120 Ind. 298.

And a complaint for keeping a house of ill fame need not allege an unlawful or guilty intent, where the act charged is expressly forbidden by statute. Com. v. Shea, 150 Mass. 314.

And an indictment for quarrelling by cursing and swearing, to the disturbance of the public peace, may be good without an allegation of intent. State v. Archibald, 59 Vt. 548; s. c., 59 Am. Rep. 755.

So where the statute makes it an offence "to obstruct or injure any road," the words "knowingly and wilfully" are surplusage in the indictment, and may be disregarded. State v. Chesapeake etc. R. Co., 24 W. Va. 809.

To charge one with furnishing unwholesome and poisonous water to the public is bad unless it is also charged that he did so knowingly or intentionally. Stein v. State, 37 Ala. 123; s. c., Ala. Sel. Cas. 29.

Nuisances to Highways.—An indictment for obstructing a watercourse so as to overflow a highway need not aver the length and breadth of the overflow. Respublica v. Newell, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 417; s. c., 2 Am. Dec. 381.

An indictment for stopping "the King's highway in Kensington" is good without setting forth any boundaries or abutments in the way leading from or to specified towns; "for a highway shall be intended to go throughout the kingdom." Anonymous, 6 Salk. 183.

An indictment for not repairing a highway must set forth with certainty how the defendant became charged with the duty of repairing it. State v. King, 3 Ired. (N. Car.) 411; Simpson v. State, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 525.

An indictment for suffering a highway to be muddy, and so narrow that the public could not pass, etc., was held bad for want of saying specifically that the way was out of repair. Reg. v. Inhabitants of Stratford, 2 Ld. Raym. 1169.

To charge that the defendant has a toll gate on a public road adjoining a bridge, and receives tolls from passengers crossing the said bridge, and that "he is bound, and of right ought, to keep said bridge in good repair," but omitting to allege the fact of ownership, from which the duty to repair would arise, is defective. State v. King, 3 Ired. (N. Car.) 411.

In Com. v. Hall, 15 Mass. 240, judgment was arrested because the indictment for obstructing the highway averred that the obstruction consisted of "a number of wooden sheds and buildings, 100 feet in length and 16 feet in breadth," but omitted to state what the number was.

The manner of obstructing a highway is sufficiently charged by an averment that it was by "erecting and maintaining a fence and stable thereon." Boyer v. State, 16 Ind. 451.

Merely charging the obstruction "of a certain road in the unincorporated town of Glen Rose," charges no offence under a statute against wilfully obstructing any public road or highway. McClanahan v. State, 21 Tex. App. 429.

Under the Florida statute, an indictment must charge not merely that the obstruction of a highway was "unnecessary and unreasonable," but that it was wilful. Savannah etc. R. Co. v. State, 23 Fla. 579.

A charge that the road was and is "a common highway in Putnam county, made and laid out for the people of this State to go, return and pass at their free pleasure and will on foot, on horseback and in vehicles," is equivalent to a charge that it was and is an "established highway" under a statute making it an offence to obstruct any public road or established highway. Palatka etc. R. Co. v. State, 23 Fla. 546.

An indictment for obstructing a highway which gave no more particular description of its location than the name of the township, county and State, was held fatally defective. State v. Stewart, 66 Ind. 555.

So of an indictment for obstructing "a certain common road and public highway," without specifying its particular location or terminal points. State v. Crumpler, 88 N. Car. 647.

It is not sufficient to charge the obstruction of a navigable river to be a wharf owned by the defendant "known as the Week's wharf," and that the nuisance consists of "a certain part" of such wharf, without specifying what part. Such a description is too vague, uncertain and indeterminate. State v.

Sturdivant, 21 Me. 9. See also State v. Phipps, 4 Ind. 515.

While a public nuisance is well charged by alleging that defendant, a turnpike company, has failed to construct its road as required by its charter, and has kept and maintained the same in a soft, miry and rough condition, to the great damage and common nuisance of all the citizens of the State, yet the omission of any allegation of a duty on the part of the company to keep its road in a certain state of repair, and that in consequence of a neglect to perform that duty it had fallen out of repair, renders the indictment demurrable. State v. Godwinsville etc. Road Co., 49 N. J. L. 266; s. c., 60 Am. Rep. 611.

To charge merely as a legal conclusion that a railroad track in a street is an obstruction, is defective; the facts which render it an obstruction should be averred. Wabash etc. R. Co. v. People, 12 Ill. App. 448.

In an indictment for obstructing a highway, it may be laid as a common highway for carts carriages, etc., although it has always been arched over; provided that it is capable of being used by all ordinary carriages, and notwithstanding the archway is not high enough to allow road wagons and other vehicles of unusual dimensions to pass under it. Rex v. Lynn, 1 C. & P. 527; R. & M. 150.

In an information against a common carrier for going upon a highway with an unreasonable weight, which is a nuisance at common law, a charge that the defendant went thereon with a load of four thousand pounds, and "with an unusual number of horses," without setting forth the number, was held good, because it was not the horses, but the excessive weight he carried that made the nuisance. Rex v. Egerly, 3 Salk. 183. It was also held in that case that an averment that the defendant spoiled the highway "leading from Oxford to London, viz: at Lobb Lane," was good, though there was no statement of how much of the way was spoiled; that it would be intended that all Lobb Lane was spoiled.

Offensive Trade.—An indictment alleged that a certain shop was erected and maintained for the purposes of a certain trade; that defendants did therein carry on said trade; and, in so doing, collected and kept certain offensive substances; that, "in manner aforesaid," they collected and kept certain other offensive substances; and that "by reason of the premises," the nuisance resulted. Held, that the expressions quoted sufficiently charged that the offensive substances last named were collected in the exercise of the trade, and that the results followed from both that exercise and such collections. State v. Hart, 34 Me. 36.

To charge merely that defendant "kept a large quantity of hides, tallow and other substances, which emitted a disagreeable odor," is not sufficient. Lippman v. South Bend, 84 Ind. 276.

To charge merely that the defendant "suffered offal to be collected and remain" on a specified street, "causing a common nuisance," etc., is fatally uncertain. Cornell v. State, 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 520.

The words "roads" and "streets," in an indictment charging the carrying on of an offensive trade "near unto divers roads and streets," etc., are equivalent to public roads and streets. Horner v. State, 49 Md. 277. See Archbold, Cr. Pl. & Ev. 633; Com. v. Rumford Chemical Works, 16 Gray (Mass.) 231; State v. Wilson, 43 N. H. 415; s. c., 82 Am. Dec. 163; Rex v. Mutters, 10 Cox (C. C.) 6; Com. v. Brown, 13 Met. (Mass.) 365; Taylor v. State, 35 Wis. 298.

Contagious Disease.—An indictment for bringing a horse infected with the glanders into a public place, to the danger of infecting the queen's subjects, is good after verdict without an averment that defendant knew that the disease was communicable to human beings. Reg. v. Henson, Dears. C. C. 24.

Copulation of Horses.—It is sufficient to charge that defendant let his stallion to mares upon the public street of a town and in view of its inhabitants without charging that he had failed to provide a proper enclosure. Crane v. State, 3 Ind. 193.

Bawdy and Disorderly Houses.—Where a statute declares to be a nuisance places where certain classes of persons "are in the habit of resorting," it is sufficient to charge the keeping of a place "used" for the habitual resort of such persons. State v. Brady (R. I. 1888), 12 Atl. Rep. 238.

An indictment need not set forth the names of the "intemperate, idle, dissolute, noisy," etc., persons alleged to frequent the place. State v. Doyle, 15 R. I. 527.

The nuisance of keeping a disorderly house is well charged by alleging substantially that defendants, at a time stated, within the county, kept a disorderly house, where they unlawfully kept and maintained for money, men and women of evil name and disposition, and unlawfully permitted such persons, at unlawful times in the day and night, to be and remain in the said house, drinking, swearing, quarreling, gambling and whoring, and otherwise misbehaving themselves. Thatcher v. State, 48 Ark. 60. See also Loraine v. State, 22 Tex. App. 640, where it was held sufficient to charge that defendant, on a day named, within the county, "did keep a disorderly house, said house being then and there kept for the purpose of public prostitution."

An averment that the defendant kept a "common, ill-governed and disorderly tenement," charges no offence known to the common law. The word tenement cannot be construed as equivalent to house. It has a much broader signification. Com. v. Wise, 110 Mass. 181.

A charge that defendant kept a disorderly house "by allowing and permitting great numbers of drunken negroes to congregate and use indecent language, and entertaining them, to the great annoyance," etc., is insufficient in not stating that he permitted such persons to congregate at his house, and that he entertained them there. Stephanes v. State, 21 Tex. 206.

The offence of keeping a house of ill-fame must be described as committed in a particular town, and the prosecutor is confined in his proof to that town; he cannot, as in other cases, prove an offence anywhere within the county; but a more particular description of the house is not necessary. State v. Nixon, 18 Vt. 70; s. c., 46 Am. Dec. 135.

To charge the defendant with keeping in a public place "a certain common, ill-governed and disorderly room, in which, for lucre, the defendant procured and suffered disorderly persons to meet by night and day, and remain there, "drinking, tippling, cursing, swearing, quarrelling, making great noises, rolling bowls in and at a game commonly called tenpins," is good. Bloomhuff v. State, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 205.

An indictment for keeping a disorderly house need not allege the manner of keeping it, nor the character of the persons frequenting it. State v. Dame, 60 N. H. 479; s. c., 49 Am. Rep. 331.

For additional instances of indictments for keeping disorderly houses, that have been held good, see Rex v. Higginson, 2 Burr. 1233; Com. v. Stewart, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 342; Com. v. Pray, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 359; State v. Patterson, 7 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 70; s. c., 45 Am. Dec. 506; State v. Bailey, 21 N. H. 343.

An information for indecent and offensive conversation should state the substance of the conversation. State v. Bach, 25 Mo. App. 554.

A charge that the defendant "swore several oaths in the courtyard, to the great disturbance and common nuisance of the citizens necessarily attending said court," was held good. State v. Kirby, 1 Murph. (N. Car.) 254.

So of a charge that the defendant, being an evil disposed person, "did, in the public street of Jefferson, profanely curse and swear, and take the name of God in vain, to the evil example, etc., and to the common nuisance of the good citizens of this State," etc. State v. Ellar, 1 Dev. (N. Car.) 267.

So of a charge that the defendant, in a public place and in the presence and hearing of divers good citizens of this State, then and there being, unlawfully did utter, publish, speak and say the following gross, scandalous, profane and blasphemous language [setting it out], to the great scandal and common nuisance of all good citizens so then and there being as aforesaid, to the manifest corruption of public morals, to the evil example of all like offenders, and against the peace and dignity of the State." State v. Graham, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 134.

Where it was charged that the defendants assembled at a public place, and profanely and with a loud voice cursed, swore and quarrelled in the hearing of divers persons then and there assembled, whereby a certain singing school was broken up and disturbed, to the common nuisance, etc., the indictment was held bad, because it did not show that the "singing school" alleged to have been broken up was composed of members of the community other than the defendants themselves; and the averment ad commune, etc., did not aid it in this respect. State v. Baldwin, 1 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 195.

It has been held that an indictment cannot be maintained against a person for being a common bawd, and procuring men and women to meet together to commit fornication; the indictment should charge her with keeping a bawdy house. Such bare solicitation is not indictable, but cognizable only in the ecclesiastical courts. 1 Hawk. P. C. C. 74; Jones Just., tit. Lewdness.

Common Scold.—An indictment for the nuisance of being a common scold must charge the offence in those words; it is not sufficient to charge that the defendant is a "common slanderer," or a "common brawler," or "a source of discord among her quiet and honest neighbors." Margaret Cooper's Case, 2 Strange 1246; United States v. Royall, 3 Cranch (C. C.) 620.

In Reg. v. Foxby, 6 Mod. 11, judgment was arrested because it was charged that the defendant was "communis calumniatrix, which is not the Latin word for scold, but rixatrix."

Indecent Exposure.—Charging an indecent and scandalous exposure of the defendant's private parts to public view on a public highway, is sufficient without charging the act to have been committed in the presence of citizens. State v. Roper, 1 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 208. See to nearly the same effect Rex v. Crunden, 2 Camp. 89.

An averment in an indictment for committing a nuisance "in the sight and view of B," does not mean that B actually saw it, but simply that he might have seen it if he had happened to look. Reg. v. Webb, 1 Den. C. C. 338; 18 L. J., N. C. 39; S. P., Reg. v. Watson, 2 Cox C. C. 376.

To charge the defendant with "making an indecent exposure of his person, by making an uncovered exhibition of his privates," is a sufficient allegation of the commission of a public indecency. Ardery v. State, 56 Ind. 328.

Dangerous Buildings.—Under a statute relating to buildings that are unsafe, "so as to endanger life," and under another relating to such as are "specially dangerous in case of fire," it is insufficient to charge merely that a building was "dangerous, having been heretofore damaged by fire." State v. Municipal Court (Minn. 1887), 35 N. W. Rep. 576.

Dangerous Substances.—An indictment charging that defendant "unlawfully, knowingly and wilfully did deposit in a warehouse belonging to him, near to divers streets and highways, and to divers dwelling houses of her majesty's subjects, divers large and excessive quantities of a dangerous ignitable and explosive fluid, called wood naphtha, and did keep in the warehouse and near to the streets the fluid in such large, excessive and dangerous

(b) Duplicity.—While duplicity is to be avoided, an indictment is not open to the charge of duplicity for alleging in one count the various acts constituting one nuisance.

(c) Time.—It is not necessary that the exact date of committing the offence should be given; it is sufficient if it is alleged as of "about" a certain date, before the finding and within the statutory period of limitation.¹

(d) Location.—The venue of the nuisance must of course be laid in the county where the indictment is found; but whether further particularity of location is necessary depends on whether an abatement of the nuisance is sought,² unless in cases where quantities, whereby the queen's subjects passing along were in great danger of their lives and property, and were kept in great alarm and terror, ad commune nocumentum," sufficiently charges a public nuisance. Reg. v. Lister, Dears. & B. C. C. 209; 3 Jur., N. S. 570; 26 L. J., M. C. 196.

A count charging that defendant kept swine in a pen near the highway, and that he fed them with offal does not allege two separate offences. State v. Payson, 37 Me. 361.

The offence of creating a nuisance is distinct from the offence of continuing it. The two cannot be joined in the same count. Burke v. People, 23 Ill. App. 36; Hoadley v. People, 23 Ill. App. 39.

An indictment charging the defendant, first, with maintaining on certain lots a stone building overhanging a public street and liable and threatening to fall into it, etc., and second, with permitting to remain on said lots large quantities of filth, emitting offensive stenches dangerous to public health, is demurrable as charging two separate offences. Chute v. State, 19 Minn. 271.

An indictment under the Massachusetts statute for maintaining a building as a common nuisance is not rendered bad for duplicity by the words, "used as a house of ill-fame." Com. v. Bal-lou, 124 Mass. 26.

It is not duplicity to charge defendant in the same count with being engaged in the "business and employment of both registering bets and selling pools;" those acts being but different parts of the same transaction. Com. v. Ferny, 146 Mass. 203. And see also State v. Matthews, 42 Vt. 542; Com. v. Twitchell, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 74; State v. Hanley, 47 Vt. 290; Com. v. Mills, 6 Bush (Ky.) 296; Rex v. Pap-pineau, 1 Stra. 686.

1. State v. Schilling, 14 Iowa 455.

Allegations that defendant on a day named, "and on divers other days and times between that day and the day of making this complaint, at said Boston, and within the judicial district of said court, did keep a certain house of ill-fame there situate," sufficiently allege the time and place of committing the offence. Com. v. Shea, 150 Mass. 314.

2. The particular location within the county need not be alleged, unless there is a request for its abatement, nor need the names be given of the persons near whose dwellings the nuisance is maintained. Droneberger v. State, 112 Ind. 105.

An allegation of the particular tract of land upon which the nuisance is located is probably unnecessary unless abatement is sought; but if made, it must be proved as made. Wertz v. State, 42 Ind. 161; Dennis v. State, 91 Ind. 291.

Where the nuisance charged constitutes an offence wherever committed, it is sufficiently located by stating the city in which it is maintained. Jenks v. State, 17 Wis. 665.

The locality is sufficiently designated by laying it in a certain county in the near neighborhood of certain streets. State v. Sneed, 16 Lea (Tenn.) 450.

Indictment for damming up and stagnating the waters of a creek must charge that the obstruction produced the nuisance "in or near a public highway," or some other place in which the public have a special interest. Com. v. Webb, 6 Rand. (Va.) 726.

A charge that defendant did maintain "a certain mill-dam in, about and across a certain stream of water in said county, called Elkhart river," does not sufficiently locate the dam. Wood v. State, 5 Ind. 433.

An indictment charged that defend-the offence is local to some particular town or neighborhood.¹

(e) Continuando.—If an abatement is sought, and not punishment only, an averment of the continuance of the nuisance is indispensable.²

ant, on a day named and on divers other days between that day and the finding, "did erect, continue and use a certain building and place; that the said building and place is commonly known as a brewery, and is situated in Franklin county, Iowa." Held, a sufficient allegation that the building was situated in that county at the time of the offence. State v. Jacobs, 75 Iowa 247.

It is sufficient to describe the highway obstructed as the "Fayetteville and War Eagle Road," that being the usual designation of the public road running from Fayetteville to the War Eagle Creek, and the one for whose obstruction the indictment is brought. Patton v. State, 50 Ark. 53.

It is not necessary to describe the termini and width of a highway in indictments for erecting nuisances thereon; nor otherwise to describe its location than by alleging it to be in some known place within the county, so that if it should be necessary for the sheriff to abate the nuisance he may have no difficulty in finding it. Rex v. Hammond, 1 Strange 44; Rex v. Hammer-smith, 1 Strange 357; Rex v. Pappineau, 2 Strange 686; Rex v. White, 1 Burr. 333; State v. Sturdivant, 21 Me. 9; Com. v. Hall, 15 Mass. 240; Com. v. Newbury, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 51.

An indictment for obstructing a highway need not allege from or to what town in the county the highway leads. It is sufficient to allege that the nuisance was erected at S. in the county where the highway is alleged to be. Com. v. Hall, 15 Mass. 240.

An indictment for keeping a bawdy house within the county is not bad for omitting to charge more specifically where it was kept. Handy v. State, 63 Miss. 207; s. c., 56 Am. Rep. 803.

A charge that defendant "did cause and suffer the carcasses of divers dead animals and large quantities of offal, filth and noisome substances, to be collected, deposited and remain near the dwelling houses of A, B, C, D and others," "to the prejudice of said A, B, C, D, and others," sufficiently describes both the locality and the offence under a statute against "causing or suffering the carcass of any animal, etc., to be collected, deposited or remain" in any place to the prejudice of others." Seacord v. People, 121 Ill. 623. See also Chute v. State, 19 Minn. 271; Rex v. Record, 2 Show. 216; State v. Schilling, 14 Iowa 455; Wood v. State, 5 Ind. 433; State v. Stewart, 66 Ind. 555; Stephen's Case, 2 Leigh (Va.) 759; Cornell v. State, 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 520; People v. Townsend, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 479; State v. Freeport, 43 Me. 198; State v. Dibble, 4 Jones L. (N. Car.) 107; State v. Baber, 74 Mo. 292; Jenks v. State, 17 Wis. 665; Com. v. Shea, 150 Mass. 314; Com. v. Donovan, 16 Gray (Mass.) 18; Com. v. Rumford Chemical Works, 16 Gray (Mass.) 231.

1. See, on this head, Com. v. Logan, 12 Gray (Mass.) 136, 138; Com. v. Heffron, 102 Mass. 148, 150; Com. v. Bacon, 108 Mass. 26, reviewed in 2 Bishop Cr. Proc. (3rd ed.), § 867, note. Mr. Bishop, however, deems that the rule requiring further particularity of description where an abatement is not sought is not founded on principle, but that it arose from the requirement of such proof to avoid a variance.

2. Munson v. People, 5 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 16; Taylor v. People, 6 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 347.

A continuous nuisance is well charged by averring that defendant on a day named erected, and from thence hitherto continually maintained, etc. Baugh v. State, 14 Ind. 29.

Abatement is warranted under a charge that defendant on a day named erected gates on a highway, "and did, on divers other days between that day and the time of taking this inquisition, continue and allow to remain the said gates, by reason whereof the citizens of this State, during the time aforesaid," were prevented, etc. Wroe v. State, 8 Md. 416.

An indictment for allowing defendant's plank road to get out of repair must allege that it is continued down to the date of the finding. People v. Branchport etc. Road Co., 5 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 604. And see also Munson v. People, 5 Park. Cr. ((N. Y.) 16; Taylor v. People, 6 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 347;

(f) Conclusion.—In the case of a common-law nuisance, in addition to the conclusion “against the peace, etc.,” it is usual to conclude with the words, “to the great damage and common nuisance of all the people there lawfully being and abiding,” or with similar words.¹ Under the ancient precedents, doubtless this was necessary.² At present the authorities are divided as to its necessity.³ Elsewhere than in a State, where this conclusion has been adjudged to be unnecessary, it is perhaps safer to adhere to the ancient form. If the nuisance is a statutory nuisance the conclusion “against the form of the statute” is essential.⁴

In State v. Baldwin, 1 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 195, GASTON, J., said: “If the facts charged must, from their very nature, have created a nuisance to the citizens in general, the words ad commune nocumentum, though always proper and safest to be inserted, may be omitted, for they neither describe the crime nor the facts which constitute it. Such facts necessarily show the crime. If the facts charged show an offence inconvenient and troublesome, that may have extended its annoyance to the community, or may have reached only certain individuals of that community, the averment of ad commune nocumentum becomes indispensable. It then involves an actual enquiry as a matter of fact for the jury, into the extent of the annoyance. But an allegation in an indictment that certain facts charged were to the common nuisance of all the good citizens of the State, “will not make it a good indictment for a common nuisance unless these facts be of such a nature as may justify that conclusion as one of law as well as of fact.”

A nuisance is sufficiently averred to be public by charging that defendant collected together certain filth and allowed it to remain near certain dwelling-houses and a highway “to the great damage and common nuisance of the inhabitants of said houses and of all persons then and there passing upon and along the said” highway. Com. v. Sweeney, 131 Mass. 579.

An indictment for the common-law nuisance of keeping a house of ill fame must conclude “to the common nuisance,” etc. State v. Stevens, 40 Me. 559.

An indictment for indecent exposure, which does not conclude, “to the common nuisance,” etc., is aided by statute 14 and 15 Vict., ch. 100; Reg. v. Holmes, Dears. C. C. 207; 3 C. & K. 360; 22 L. J., N. C. 122.

It has been held that such a conclusion is not required in an indictment for a nuisance in or near a river which plainly appears to be a public navigable river, or to a way plainly appearing to be a highway. 7 Hawk. P. C., ch. 75, § 5; Rex v. Pappineau, 1 Strange 686.

In an indictment for damming up and stagnating the waters of a creek, whereby the air is corrupted and infected, and sends forth noisome and unwholesome smells, it is not sufficient to lay it “to the common nuisance of all the good citizens of this commonwealth, not only there residing and inhabiting, but also going, returning, passing and repassing by the neighborhood of the said pond;” nor “to the common nuisance of all the citizens of the commonwealth.” Neither of these will supply the place of an averment that the obstruction caused a stagnation of the water in or near a public highway or some other place in which the public have a special interest. Com. v. Webb, 6 Rand. (Va.) 726.

4. Where a statute declares an act

3. Evidence.—Generally proof of the existence of the nuisance for a single day or even part of a day will be sufficient where an abatement is not sought.¹

The rules of evidence common to trials of indictments generally are applicable.²

4. Punishment.—As, at common law and under the State statutes, the offence of maintaining an indictable nuisance is a misdemeanor only and not a felony, a conviction may be followed by fine and imprisonment.³ If before the conviction the defendant has himself abated the nuisance, this may tend to reduce the punishment.⁴

5. Abatement.⁵—An abatement may be required as part of the sentence, where the necessary continuance has been alleged and proved.⁶

an offence if done "to the injury of the health or to the annoyance of the citizens," etc., a failure to charge such injury or annoyance is fatal. State v. Wahl, 35 Kan. 608.

Where the indictment charges that the acts complained of "became, were, and still are," a public nuisance, evidence of the existence of the nuisance at any time within two years prior to the date laid in the indictment is admissible. State v. Holman, 104 N. Car. 861.

Upon a conviction on an indictment at common law, for allowing a highway to become a nuisance, the defendant is liable only to the common law punishment, no other punishment for not repairing highways being provided by statute. Syracuse etc. Plank Road Co. v. People, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 25.

V. PRIVATE ACTION—1. Right of Action.—A private action for a public nuisance is maintainable by one who suffers therefrom some particular loss or damage beyond that suffered by him in common with all others affected by the nuisance. Interference with a common right does not of itself afford a cause of action by an individual. Special or particular damage consequent on the interference does. An illustration in an ancient case is as follows: Where one makes a ditch across a highway and I am travelling in the night and with my horse fall into the ditch and so have great damage and inconvenience, I may have an action against him who made the ditch; though for the mere obstruction caused by the ditch there is no right of action, this being an inconvenience common to all.¹ There is no difficulty in this general statement of the rule and the exception. It is supported by all the cases. The difficulty is in the application to the facts of the cases wherein the rule has been invoked.²

v. Com., 25 Pa. St. 503; s. c., 64 Am. Dec. 715; Campbell v. State, 16 Ala. 144.

"It seems to be the better opinion that the court of king's bench may, by a mandatory writ, prohibit a nuisance, and order that the same shall be abated; and that if the party disobeys the writ, he subjects himself to an attachment. But upon such attachment for proceeding after the writ of prohibition, there ought to be a declaration setting forth the nature of the offence, and that the same is a nuisance, and that, notwithstanding the writ of prohibition, the defendant proceeded in or continued it; to which if the defendant can in pleading set forth a sufficient justification his proceeding post prohibitionem regiam will be good in law, and himself discharged of all contempt." 7 Bacon Abr. 234.

Although an order for the abatement of a nuisance does not necessarily follow a conviction in a criminal case, or a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff in an action for damages, yet it is not a matter entirely within the discretion of the court. It is the court's duty to make such an order whenever the interests and comfort of the community or of individuals require the nuisance to be abated in whole or in part. Maxwell v. Boyne, 36 Ind. 120.

The defendant may be ordered to abate the nuisance at his own cost, and to stand committed until the sentence be complied with. Taggart v. Com., 21 Pa. St. 527; State v. Haines, 30 Me. 65.

But it is error to command the sheriff to see that the order of abatement is executed, as this is in effect commanding him personally to make the abatement. Campbell v. State, 16 Ala. 144.

Neither the common law nor statute authorizes the courts, on conviction for maintaining a nuisance by the unlawful use of a building, to order the building destroyed. It is only the unlawful use that can be abated. Earp v. Lee, 71 Ill. 193. See also Brightman v. Bristol, 65 Me. 426; s. c., 20 Am. Rep. 711; Shepard v. People, 40 Mich. 487; Czarniecki's Appeal (Pa. 1887), 11 Atl. Rep. 660.

The fact that the nuisance is situated on the land of a stranger is no reason for not abating it. Delaware etc. Canal Co. v. Com., 60 Pa. St. 367.

1. Fitzherbert, J. Year Book, 27 Hen. VIII, 27, pl. 10.

2. In Co. Lit. 56a it is said that to maintain the action the plaintiff must prove that the damage he has sustained is not "common to others." Again in Williams' Case, 5 Coke 73, it is said: "But if any particular person afterwards by the nuisance done has more particular damage than any other, there, for that particular injury, he shall have a particular action on the case." In Paine v. Patrick, 3 Mod. 289, HOLT, C. J., said: "If a highway be so stopped that a man is delayed a little while on his journey, by reason whereof is damnified, or some important affair neglected, that is not such a special action for which an action on the case will lie; but that the damage ought to be direct and not consequential, as the loss of his horse or some corporal hurt in falling into a trench on the highway."

In Hart v. Bassett, T. Jones 156, a private action for obstructing a highway was allowed, because the plaintiff was compelled to employ servants and cattle to carry his goods by another and more difficult way on account of the obstruction.

In Iveson v. Moore, 1 Ld. Raym. 486; Salk. 15; 12 Mod. 262, the plaintiff declared that he had a colliery near a highway by which he used to carry his coals, and that the defendants stopped the way, and so the plaintiff lost the opportunity of selling his coals, which were greatly deteriorated. It was held that the declaration disclosed special damage, and that the action lay.

In Hubert v. Groves, 1 Esp. 148 (1794), the plaintiff declared that the defendant's obstruction of the highway prevented plaintiff from carrying on his business as a coal merchant in so advantageous a manner as he had a right to do, but that he was obliged to carry the coals by a circuitous route, and it was held that this was not such a special damage as to enable the plaintiff to maintain the action. This case cannot be reconciled with the two preceding cases; but its authority has since been greatly shaken, as in Rose v. Miles, 4 M. & S. 101, a case arising a few years afterwards, where it was held that an action lay where the defendant obstructed a public navigable creek by mooring his barge across the same and prevented the plaintiff from navigating his loaded barges, per quod he was obliged to carry his goods overland at great expense; and in Greasly v. Codling, 2 Bing. 263, where the plaintiff was in the habit of passing up and down a highway with coals and was detained four hours and could not carry as many loads in a day by the circuitous route which he was obliged to go in consequence of the defendant's obstruction of the highway, the action was maintained.

In Maynell v. Saltmarsh, 1 Keb. 847, the plaintiff brought his action against the defendant for erecting posts in a highway through which the plaintiff passed to and from his close, and alleged that his corn was corrupted and spoiled in consequence of the obstruction; and it was held that that was a sufficient special damage to support the plaintiff's action.

In Chichester v. Lethbridge, Willes 71, the plaintiff's action for the obstruction of a highway was allowed because he had on several occasions attempted to remove the obstruction to enable him to pass, but had been prevented by the defendant, and this was deemed to distinguish his case from that of the public in general.

In Wilkes v. Hungerford Market Co. (1835), 2 Bing. N. C. 281, the plaintiff, a bookseller, having a shop by the side of a public thoroughfare, suffered in his business in consequence of passengers having been diverted from the thoroughfare by an unauthorized obstruction across it for an unreasonable time. The allegation of the plaintiff was, that by means of the obstruction he was prevented from carrying on his trade and business in so large, ample, and beneficial a manner as he otherwise might and would have done, and that he had lost and been deprived during the time that the obstruction existed of divers great gains and profits which might and otherwise would have arisen and accrued to him from carrying on the trade and business of a bookseller in his messuage and premises. The plaintiff proved the allegations in his writ and obtained a verdict. On the hearing of a motion for a nonsuit it was contended that the act of the defendants constituted a public nuisance, for which an indictment but not a civil action might lie. The whole court decided otherwise. The cases from the Year Books down were examined, and the case of Hubert v. Groves disapproved. In Stetson v. Faxon, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 147; s. c., 31 Am. Dec. 123. Wilkes v. Hungerford Market Co., was adopted in a full, careful judgment; but in Beckett v. Midland R. Co., L. R., 3 C. P. 100, that case is treated as overruled by the remarks of Lord Chelmsford and Lord Cranworth in Ricket v. Metropolitan R. Co. (1867), L. R., 2 H. L. 188, 199.

In Stetson v. Faxon, the plaintiff averred his title to warehouses and real estate, and that by means of the obstructions made by the defendant upon the highway, his warehouses had been greatly obscured and injured, and access thereto prevented from and along the part of the highway so obstructed; that thereby the free communication which the plaintiff and other persons frequently resorting to his warehouses formerly enjoyed, had been greatly diminished and hindered; that he had suffered great damage from the nuisance, by reason of his warehouses and lands having been deserted by his tens, and left vacant and unoccupied the frequent changes and removals his tenants and occupiers, and that had been obliged to reduce his rents,

The court said: "Now upon the authority of the adjudged cases before referred to, we are all of opinion that these are sufficient special injuries, peculiar to the plaintiff, and not common to all the citizens, for which the plaintiff may maintain his action, notwithstanding the defendant may be liable to answer upon an indictment for the public nuisance."

In Hughes v. Heiser, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 3; s. c., 2 Am. Dec. 459; and Powers v. H., 23 Mich. 429, it was held that there was a cause of action where the plaintiff in passing over a navigable stream with rafts of lumber was delayed by the defendant's dam, and so the sale of the lumber at such prices as but for the detention he would have obtained.

In Rose v. Groves, 5 M. & G. 613, it was held that an obstruction of trade by reason of an obstruction in a river was held to give a right of action.

In Frink v. Lawrence, 20 Conn. 117; 50 Am. Dec. 274, the owner of a wharf on a navigable river was held to have a right of action, where his approach was cut off. In Lansing v. Smith, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 151, it was held otherwise in the first instance, but the court of errors 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 10 modified the doctrine announced by the supreme court. In Cook v. Bath, 6 R. 6 Eq. Cas. 177, an injunction was granted against the placing of buildings on a highway in such a manner as to cut off the access to the plaintiff's premises.

In Blanc v. Klumpke, 29 Cal. 156, it was held that deprivation of access to plaintiff's premises by reason of an obstruction in a highway was sufficient to sustain his action. And so in Brakley v. Minneapolis etc. R. Co., 29 Minn. 41; Ofstie v. Kelly, 33 Minn. 10; Schulte v. North Pac. Transp. Co., 50 Cal. 592; Jaques v. National Habit Co., 15 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 10.

But simply cutting off one's facilities by making a new entrance to his lot from a public street was held not sufficient in McLachlin v. Charlotte etc. Co., 5 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 583; Shaubert v. St. Paul etc. R. Co., 21 Minn. 2.

In Walker v. Shepardson, 2 Wis. 4; s. c., 60 Am. Dec. 423, the actionable nuisance greatly impaired the value and lawful use by the complainant of his wharf. In Barnes v. Racine, 4 Wis. 454, it interfered with the convenient use of the plaintiff's lots, wharves, ship yards and mills, and impaired their value. In Williams v. Smith, 22 Wis. 594, it cut off (or would have done so) the only way of access to the premises of the plaintiffs. In Enos v. Hamilton, 27 Wis. 256, it shut off access to plaintiff's mill, and deprived him of the use thereof, and prevented him from seasonably stocking it for future work. In Wisconsin River Imp. Co. v. Lyons, 30 Wis. 61, it caused a loss to the plaintiff of $600 in tolls. In Greene v. Nunne-macher, 36 Wis. 50, it drove customers from the plaintiff's saloon and tavern, diminished his profits, and injured the health of himself and family. And in Gates v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 64 Wis. 64, it stopped or delayed the boats and rafts of the plaintiff in their actual passage down a navigable river, to his great damage.

Being prevented from fulfilling a transportation contract, because of an obstruction of a navigable river by a boom, was deemed sufficient special damage in Dudley v. Kennedy, 63 Me. 465.

So the stopping of plaintiff's boat by a bridge wrongfully built in the river. Little Rock etc. R. Co. v. Brooks, 39 Ark. 403.

Where an owner of a lot erected a stoop and fence in front of it, so as materially to encroach upon the public sidewalk, it was held that the owner of a lot on the same street, 100 feet distant from the encroachment, could maintain an action to have it abated as a nuisance. Crooke v. Anderson, 23 Hun (N. Y.) 266.

But in Shaubert v. St. Paul etc. R. Co., 21 Minn. 502, it was held that the owner and occupant of property abutting on a street could not maintain an action on account of an obstruction by a railroad company of a portion of the street upon which his property did not abut; that the plaintiff's injury differed from that of the public in degree only, and not in kind. This case was followed in Barnum v. Minnesota Transfer R. Co., 33 Minn. 365.

In South Carolina the leading case is Carey v. Brooks, 1 Hill L. (S. Car.) 365, where it was held that an allegation that the plaintiff had incurred expense in clearing out the channel of a navigable stream and had suffered loss

In transporting his lumber to market under a contract to deliver it within a specified time did not present a case of special damage. This case was approved in South Carolina Steamboat Co. v. South Carolina R. Co., 30 S. Car. 539, where it was held that a complaint alleging that plaintiff was a carrier of passengers on a navigable river; that defendant, a railway company, had erected a bridge, obstructing navigation; that by reason of said obstruction plaintiff had been prevented from freely navigating said stream in the ordinary course of business; that it had been compelled to remove a portion of one of its boats in order to pass such bridge, and rebuild it above, and had sustained loss in its business, did not allege such special injury to plaintiff as to constitute a cause of action.

The foregoing cases relate to obstructions in highways and navigable waters, but the principle on which their decisions rest is applicable to public nuisances generally; as, for example, in Wesson v. Washburn Iron Co., 13 Allen (Mass.) 95; s. c., 90 Am. Dec. 181, it was held that an action may be maintained to recover damages for a nuisance to a dwelling-house, caused by carrying on works and operating machinery in the vicinity, which fill the air with smoke and cinders, and render it offensive or injurious to health, and shake the building so as to injure it and render its occupation uncomfortable, although all persons owning estates in the vicinity have sustained similar injuries from the same cause. Again the principle was applied in support of the right of action to the case of negligently keeping gunpowder on a public street to the especial danger of the individual complaining. People v. Sands, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 78; s. c., 3 Am. Dec. 296. Carrying on a noxious trade. Story v. Hammond, 4 Ohio 376; Peck v. Elder, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 126; Catlin v. Valentine, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 575; s. c., 38 Am. Dec. 567; Brady v. Weeks, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 157; Rex v. Neil, 2 C. & P. 485; Mills v. Hall, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 315; s. c., 24 Am. Dec. 160; Ottawa Gas Light Co. v. Thompson, 39 Ill. 598; Grabill v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 50 Ill. 241; Rex v. Dewsnap, 16 East 194. Dec. 744; Crowder v. Tinkler, 19 Ves. 623; Hepburn v. Lordan, 13 L. T., N. S. 59. To a ditch creating a stench and sickness. To showcases on a sidewalk to the obstruction of the windows of a neighboring shopkeeper. People v. New York, 18 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 123 to an advertising attraction in a shop window drawing such crowds as to obstruct access to the complainant's premises. Elias v. Sutherland, 18 Abb.

Though the consequence is of a sort likely to ensue in many individual cases, it must be a distinct and specific one in the particular case. Where this test fails there can be no particular damage in a legal sense.¹

If horses and wagons are kept standing for an unreasonable time in the highway opposite a man's house, so that the access of customers is obstructed, the house is darkened, and the people in it are annoyed by bad smells, this damage is sufficiently "particular, direct, and substantial" to entitle the occupier to maintain an action.²

The plaintiff must show actual damage sustained and not damage resting in contemplation merely. It is not enough, for example, that the obstruction to a highway or river would have resulted in damage to him had he attempted to use it so long as he did not make the attempt, or that, could he have used it, he would have saved money; though, in one sense, here is damage, it is not such damage as gives a right of action.³

For mere delay in a journey, or from being compelled to take a circuitous route, by reason of an obstruction in a river or a

N. Cas. (N. Y.) 126. To a frame building erected in violation of a city ordinance, and subjecting the complainant's premises to risk from fire. Horstman v. Young, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 19; Blane v. Murray, 36 La. An. 162; s. c., 51 Am. Rep. 7. To horses kept standing in a street so as to make a dwelling-house opposite uncomfortable from the smells. Lippincott v. Lasher, 44 N. J. Eq. 120. To an injury to the plaintiff's house from jar and vibration caused by the running of trains unlawfully in a public street. Wilcken v. West Brooklyn R. Co., 1 N. Y. Supp. 791.

1. In Stetson v. Faxon, supra, the court said: "We know that extreme cases may be put, which makes it difficult to draw the line between substantial and imaginary damages," and supposed the case of a ditch across a street, and the absurdity of the proposition that every shopholder in the street could maintain an action for special damages to his estate, and added, "but it would not follow that because some owners of shops who lived a mile from the obstruction might not have special damages, those who lived near it might not . . . But suppose that twenty men in the course of one night should fall into that ditch and receive injury, could it be maintained that each of them might not severally recover special damages according to the extent of the actual injury received by each?"

2. Benjamin v. Storr (1874), L. R., 9 C. P. 400.

3. In Rose v. Miles, cited in previous note, LORD ELLENBOROUGH said: "The plaintiff had actually commenced his course down the river, and was actually using it when he was obstructed, and his damages did not rest in contemplation." This also was the case in Hart v. Bassett, where the plaintiff was obstructed while actually travelling over the road, and in Hughes v. Heiser, where he met the obstruction while going down the river with his raft. See also Baxter v. Winooski Turnpike Co., 22 Vt. 114; s. c., 52 Am. Dec. 84; Hatch v. Vermont etc. R. Co., 28 Vt. 142.

In Pierce v. Dart, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 609, the plaintiff had removed several times, while passing with his team, the fence which constituted the obstruction complained of, and it was held that the expense of such removal, though trifling in amount, and the delay and labor incident thereto, supported the action.

But in Winterbottom v. Lord Derby (1867), L. R., 2 Ex. 316, 322, it was said that, if the same man is at divers times delayed by the same obstruction, and incurs expense in removing it, this is not of itself sufficient particular damage; the damage, though real, is "common to all who might wish, by removing the obstruction, to raise the question of the right of the public to use the way."

road, it would seem from the weight of authority that a cause of action does not arise.¹

To support an action the damage must differ in kind as well as in degree from that suffered in common. That the plaintiff suffers more inconvenience than others from his proximity to the nuisance is not enough.²

1. Wood on Nuisances (2nd ed.), § 653.

In Clark v. Chicago etc. R. Co., 70 Wis. 593, it was held that where by reason of a bridge obstructing a navigable stream the plaintiff, engaged in carrying passengers and freight by steamboat, was compelled to take a more circuitous route, increasing the distance about four miles, and making the carriage of freight more expensive, the plaintiff had failed to show any damage special to himself, and not suffered by all persons navigating the river.

In Houch v. Wachter, 34 Md. 265; s. c., 6 Am. Rep. 332, it was held that the fact that the obstruction complained of in the highway compelled the plaintiff to return to his home by a very circuitous route, was not enough to support his action. In Brown v. Watson, 47 Me. 161; s. c., 74 Am. Dec. 482, it was held otherwise; and so in Pittsburgh v. Scott, 1 Pa. St. 309. See Farrelly v. Cincinnati, 2 Disney (Ohio) 516, where the subject is discussed.

2. Simpson v. Savage, 8 Sim. 272; Howard v. Lee, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 281; Demarest v. Hardham, 34 N. J. Eq. 469; Grigsby v. Clear Lake Water Co., 40 Cal. 396; Whitsett v. Union Depot etc. Co., 10 Colo. 243; Gold v. Philadelphia, 115 Pa. St. 184; Mechling v. Kittanning Bridge Co., 1 Grant's Cas. (Pa.) 416; Quincy Canal v. Newcomb, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 283; *Grant v. In Blood v. Nashua etc. R. Co., 2 Gray (Mass.) 137; s. c., 61 Am. Dec. 444, an obstruction in a navigable stream which caused the water to flow back upon the plaintiff's mills was held to give him a cause of action. In Brightman v. Fairhaven, 7 Gray (Mass.) 271, it was held that the depreciation in value of plaintiff's land because of such obstruction was not such damage as gave a private right of action. So in Willard v. Cambridge, 3 Allen (Mass.) 574; Fall River Iron Co. v. Old Colony etc. R. Co., 5 Allen (Mass.) 221; and again in Harvard College v. Stearns, 15 Gray (Mass.) 1.

In Brayton v. Fall River, 113 Mass. 218, the Massachusetts authorities were reviewed, and the court said that the tendency in that State was to restrict the right to bring a private suit within narrower limits than in some of the English cases, and held that an action lay in favor of a wharf owner who was prevented by the obstruction from having vessels lie at the wharf as formerly.

The following cases are referred to as illustrating and supporting the doctrines enunciated in the text and elucidated by the cases cited in the foregoing notes. To review them in detail would require more space than it would be justifiable to consume. It is believed that the cases reviewed sufficiently show the growth and the present condition of the law of the subject:

2. Form of Action.—The civil remedy at law is found in the action on the case when not modified by statute.¹

This remedy has succeeded the ancient remedies of quod permittat and assize of nuisance. The former of these was a writ in the nature of a writ of right, commanding the defendant to permit the plaintiff to abate the nuisance complained of, or to show cause why he will not. Before the statute of Westminster, this was the only remedy where the originator of the nuisance had aliened the land on which it was situated; and the writ lay on behalf of an alienee of the property injured as well as against the alienee of the original wrongdoer.² This writ was abolished in England by statute,³ and is entirely obsolete in the United States.

An assize of nuisance was a common-law writ, issued at the instance of the tenant of the freehold, complaining of some act done ad nocumentum liberi tenementi sui, and commanding the sheriff to summon a jury to view the premises; and if they found for the plaintiff, he was entitled to a judgment abating the nuisance and for damages.⁴

This writ has long been obsolete in England, and was finally abolished by statute.⁵ It has been recognized in the United States, but hardly ever employed, and is now either abolished or obsolete.¹

The court, after verdict in an action of the case at common law, is without power to order an abatement. For this reason and because of the superior utility and flexibility of the procedure in equity, the aid of a court of equity is generally invoked. Statutory modifications of the legal action have in some States supplied the omission of the right of abatement by order of the court. Mr. Wood, however, says that his researches lead him to the conclusion that it is only in extreme cases that a court of law will order the prostration or removal of a nuisance, even after conviction on an indictment.²

3. Parties—(See also PARTIES TO ACTIONS)—(a) Parties Plaintiff.—If the action is at law, those having distinct interests affected by the same nuisance must bring separate actions.³

If the suit is in equity, it would seem from the weight of authority that several whose injuries from the same nuisance vary only in degree may join.⁴

(b) Parties Defendant.—The person primarily liable for a nuisance is he who actually creates it, whether on his own land or not. The owner or occupier of land on which a nuisance is created, though not by himself or by his servants, may also be liable in certain conditions. If a man lets a house or land with a nuisance on it, he as well as the lessee is answerable for the continuance thereof, if it is caused by the omission of repairs which,

Phillips*, 110 Ind. 320. In Snyder v. Cabell, the authorities were reviewed, and it was conceded that the English rule was the other way. In New Jersey it was held that separate suits were necessary. Henchman v. Patterson etc. R. Co., 17 N. J. Eq. 75;

as between himself and the tenant, he is bound to make,¹ but not otherwise.² If the landlord has not agreed to repair, he is not liable for defects of repair happening during the tenancy, even if he habitually looks to the repairs in fact.³ It seems the better opinion that where the tenant is bound to repair, the lessor's knowledge, at the time of letting, of the state of the property demised makes no difference, and that only something amounting to an authority to continue the nuisance will make him liable.⁴

Again, an occupier who by licence (not parting with the possession) authorizes the doing on his land of something whereby a nuisance is created is liable.⁵ But a lessor is not liable merely because he has demised to a tenant something capable of being so used as to create a nuisance, and the tenant has so used it.⁶ Nor is an owner not in possession bound to take any active steps to remove a nuisance which has been created on his land without his authority and against his will.⁷

If one who has erected a nuisance on his land conveys the land to a purchaser who continues the nuisance, the vendor remains liable, and the purchaser is also liable if on request he does not remove it.⁸

So, too, any person who contributes to the production of a nuisance may be made chargeable therewith, although many others contributed thereto, and his act alone would not constitute a nuisance; but the combined effect of which is to create an actionable injury; as, if several persons drain their premises into the same ditch, the waters from which are discharged near the premises of another, and produce an injury, either to his estate or to its comfortable enjoyment, each of the persons so using the drain is liable, in separate actions, for the damages occasioned by him, or to indictment therefor.⁹ Or if several persons use a private way in a manner different from what they have lawful right to use it, although there is no concert between them in its use, and each uses it on his own account and at different times, although the unlawful use by either one of the parties would not constitute an actionable obstruction, yet if the use, by all of them combined, creates a nuisance to others, an action may be

Where several have contributed to the creation or maintenance of the same nuisance, they may be sued jointly, under the rule applicable to joint tort feasons,² or any one of them may be sued without joining the others.³

4. Venue—(See also VENUE).—If an abatement is sought, the action is local and must be brought in the county where the nuisance exists; and a variance between allegation and proof is fatal.⁴ If, however, damages only are sought, it has been held in some jurisdictions that though the erection or thing from which the injury proceeds is in one county, an action may lie in another county wherein injury is inflicted.⁵

5. Pleading.—The declaration or complaint must specifically describe the nuisance complained of, and one of a materially different character cannot be shown.⁶

But it is not necessary that the word "nuisance" be used in describing the thing complained of; it is sufficient if the facts which render it a nuisance are alleged.⁷

Green*, 9 Hun (N. Y.) 225. And in Thompson v. Crocker, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 59, it was held that an action to recover damages for an injury to a mill privilege might be brought in the county where the mill was located, though the dam from which the injury proceeded was in another county. And so in Barden v. Crocker, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 383. In Deacon v. Shreve, 22 N. J. L. 176, the court held likewise; but in Jacks v. Moore, 23 Ark. 31; Olliphant v. Smith, 3 P. & W. In case for obstructing a navigable river, to the plaintiff's injury, etc., where the declaration averred that on, etc., at the county of M (in which the suit was brought), the defendant built a dam across the east fork of White River, in said county, the said river

The particular use of the property complained of should be stated, but the particular mode of the creation of the nuisance need not be.¹

While the defendant's title to the property need not be set forth, enough must be stated to show his liability for the existence of the nuisance.²

If the defendant's negligence is of the gist of the action, this also must be alleged, as, for example, where the cause of action arises from an explosion³ or the undermining of a building by excavating,⁴ or from the negligent acts of those charged with the extension of a public duty.⁵ As a general rule, however, negligence is not an element in an action for a nuisance.

In certain cases, also, notice on the defendant's part must be set forth, as, for example, where the nuisance from which the injury resulted was a dangerous domestic animal.⁶

The declaration must also allege the special injury suffered by the plaintiff, if the nuisance is a public one; and this must be proved substantially as alleged.⁷ But in actions for private nuisances all the damages which naturally and probably result may be recovered, whether specially alleged or not.⁸

The omission of an averment of special damage in a private action for a public nuisance is not cured by verdict.⁹ Where the being then and there a navigable stream, it was held that, after verdict, the declaration could not be objected to for not stating more explicitly that the river was a public highway. Tyrrell v. Lockhart, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 136.

In an action for a private nuisance from a steam cotton press, allegations of increased danger from fire and liability to explode, thereby rendering the plaintiff's dwelling unfit for residence, and impairing the value of his property, are sufficient. Ryan v. Copes, 11 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 217; s. c., 73 Am. Dec. 106.

erection is not such as necessarily to imply an injury, and the nuisance complained of is not in the original erection, but in the defendant's wrongful use or maintenance of it, it is not necessary to allege who erected it, or that notice has been given to remove it.¹ The declaration must state the proximate cause of the injury; it is not competent to state the remote cause, and give all the intermediate matters in evidence, under the allegation that by means of the premises the injury was occasioned.²

Plea.—The plea, in the absence of a statute, is, as in actions on the case generally, the plea of not guilty. Special matter may be pleaded, and in the case of the statute of limitations must be, though generally this is not necessary, the plea of not guilty being broad enough to put in issue whatever should preclude the plaintiff's recovery.³

6. Evidence.—There are no rules of evidence peculiar to this class of actions.⁴

Where, in a second action founded on a nuisance, the narr. failed to set forth the previous verdict and judgment, and to charge a continuance of the nuisance, it was held that this was an irregularity which worked no injury to the defendant. Ellis v. Academy of Music, 120 Pa. St. 608.

2. Fitzimons v. Inglis, 5 Taunt. 534.

Where the nuisance was a hole into which the plaintiff fell, it was held that the declaration need not allege that the nuisance was unknown to plaintiff at the time the injury was sustained. Morford v. Woodworth, 7 Ind. 83.

3. 1 Chitty on Pleading 432.

4. It was held in Smith v. McConathy, 11 Mo. 517, that other injuries than those set forth in the declaration could not be shown. In Loughran v. Des Moines, 72 Iowa 382, it was held that the defendant might show that the damage was contributed to by other causes than those for which he was in fault. In Baker v. Bohannon, 69 Iowa 60, it was held that evidence that the plaintiff's husband kept his premises in a worse condition than those of the defendant was immaterial, it not appearing that the premises of the plaintiff's husband were so located as to be offensive to the plaintiff. In Fay v. Whitman, 100 Mass. 76, it was held that evidence that occupants of premises farther away from the location of the alleged nuisance than plaintiff's premises were also disturbed, was competent on the issue of the existence of the nuisance (stenches from a slaughterhouse).

In Watson v. Van Meter, 43 Iowa 76, it was adjudged that the comparative healthfulness of the neighborhood before and after the creation of the alleged nuisance was material.

In Hudson v. Densmore, 68 Ind. 391, it was held that the testimony of a third person, that he had lived within a short distance of a similar nuisance for some time without injury, was inadmissible. In Robinson v. Smith, 7 N. Y. Supp. 38, in an action for a nuisance consisting of offensive smells, evidence of the condition of the atmosphere and of plaintiff's house down to the time of the trial was held admissible, as was evidence that, after the erection of the stable alleged to constitute the nuisance, there were innumerable flies about the plaintiff's premises. See, on questions of evidence depending upon the circumstances of the cases wherein it was offered, House v. Metcalf, 27 Conn. 631; Harrison v. Sterrett, 4 Har. & M. (Md.) 540.

In Shepard v. Hill (Mass. 1890), 24 N.E. Rep. 1025, where the nuisance charged was the noise made by a paper mill, it was held that evidence that the machinery used by the defendant was of the usual kind, and that it was customary to run paper mills night and day, was competent on the question whether the defendant was conducting his business in a reasonable manner; so it was held that the defendant was properly allowed to show the kind and amount of noise produced by his mill at various times

7. Damages—(See also DAMAGES)—(a) Measure of Damages.—The recovery of damages, in the first instance, is limited to the actual damages sustained.¹

For injuries permanently affecting realty, the measure of damages is the difference between what the property would have sold for before and after the injury.²

after the bringing of the action, the power used being the same and the effect uniform; and that the defendant was properly allowed to describe the noise by testimony, that it was not greater than that of other paper mills of a similar character and capacity.

In an action against the owner of adjoining premises for knowingly permitting them to be used as a brothel, in consequence of which the plaintiff lost his tenants, the measure of damages is the depreciation in value of the property and the loss of rents resulting from the nuisance; and in determining such depreciation it may be shown that the maintenance of the brothel in question led to the establishment of other brothels in the immediate neighborhood. Givens v. Van Studdiford, 4 Mo. App. 498.

In an action to recover for the caving in of land, caused by removing its lateral support, the measure of damages is the amount of its diminution in value, and not what it would cost to restore the land to its former condition, or to build a retaining wall. McGuire v. Grant, 25 N. J. L. 356; s. c., 67 Am. Dec. 49.

Injury to the plaintiff's feelings, by being deprived of the lateral support of land intended for a burial place, cannot be considered where the defendant intended no injury thereto, though he was grossly careless. White v. Dresser, 135 Mass. 150; s. c., 46 Am. Rep. 454.

The measure of damages for removal of lateral support is the loss of and injury to the soil, without regard to the cost of restoring the land to its former condition as to fences, shrubbery, etc. Gilmore v. Driscoll, 122 Mass. 199; s. c., 23 Am. Rep. 312. Nor to the cost of refilling. Karst v. St. Paul etc. R. Co., 22 Minn. 118.

The measure of damages for diverting a stream, to the injury of a farm with an ore-bank thereon, is the difference in its market value immediately before and after the diversion, without regard to the fact that the stream had been used, or might subsequently be required, for washing the ore taken from the bank. Hanover Water Co. v. Ashland Iron Co., 84 Pa. St. 279.

In an action for damages to real estate by blasting, plaintiff's mental anxiety concerning the personal safety of himself and family is not, no personal injury having resulted, a proper element of damage. Wyman v. Leavitt, 71 Me. 227; s. c., 36 Am. Rep. 303.

The damages for flooding land may be estimated by comparing the productiveness of the land when flooded with its productiveness when not so flooded.

For nuisances affecting the enjoyment and occupancy of realty, the measure of damages is generally the loss of rents or the depreciation in rental value.¹ Loss of profits resulting from an interference with a lawful business, or loss of crops may be an element of damage.²

Spilman v. Roanoke Navigation Co., 74 N. Car. 675.

In an action for flooding the plaintiff's cellar, it is proper to consider both the damages to the house as a structure and as to its rental value. Willey v. Hunter, 57 Vt. 479.

The rule that in actions for nuisances to realty, the measure of damages is the difference between the market value of the land immediately before and immediately after the injury, has no application to such nuisances as may be removed directly after verdict, or for the continuance of which successive actions may be brought, or which may be abated by order of the court. In such cases the proper criterion is the loss in rental value. Pinney v. Berry, 61 Mo. 359.

Where land has been wrongfully overflowed, so as to deprive the owner of its use, the measure of damages is the fair rental value; the probable value of what might have been raised on the land, less cost of cultivation, etc., is too remote and speculative. Chicago v. Huenerbein, 85 Ill. 594; s. c., 28 Am. Rep. 626.

The diminished rental value of the property during the period of diversion is the measure of damages in an action for diverting or detaining the water of a stream from the plaintiff's tannery or mill. Colrick v. Swinburne, 105 N. Y. 503; Woodin v. Wentworth, 57 Mich. 278; Crawford v. Parsons, 63 N. H. 438.

In an action by a boarding-house keeper for damages caused by a nuisance consisting of offensive odors, the measure of damages was held to be the difference in rental value of the premises free from the stench and subject to it, and not to be affected by the circumstance of the loss or departure of boarders. Wiel v. Stewart, 19 Hun (N. Y.) 272.

Where premises are injured by defendant's pollution of a stream, the fact that the owner himself occupies the premises does not alter the application of the rule that the depreciation in rental value is the proper measure of damages. Michel v. Monroe Co., 39 Hun (N. Y.) 47.

Where the premises affected by a nuisance are occupied by the plaintiff as a homestead, his damages are not limited to the depreciation in rental value; he may also recover for the interference with the comfortable enjoyment of the homestead. Randolf v. Town of Bloomfield, 77 Iowa 50.

The measure of damages for injuries to growing crops by flooding is the value of the crops in the condition they are in at the time of the injury; and to ascertain this the average yield of like crops, under similar conditions, and the average market value of such grain during a reasonable period, less the expense of harvesting and marketing, may be shown. *Lommeland v. Where the crops are not yet up, the damage should be estimated upon the basis of rental value and the cost of seed, and of preparing the ground and planting. Kankakee etc. R. Co. v. Horan, 17 Ill. App. 650.

Damages for loss of grass crops for two succeeding seasons, in addition to the damages already sustained on account of injury to land by flooding, are too conjectural. Clark v. Nevada etc. Min. Co., 6 Nev. 203.

In an action for damages caused by overflowing plaintiff's land and a highway adjoining, it was held that he was

For nuisances affecting health and personal comfort, injury sustained not only by the plaintiff but also by members of his family, whom he is bound to support, is a proper element of damage.¹

The trouble and expense of prosecuting the action have been held proper elements of damage in actions for injuries by the obstruction of a highway,² but not proper in an action for flooding land.³

Under a general allegation of damage, the necessary and natural consequences of the nuisance may be proved. To warrant the recovery of damages, not a necessary though perhaps a natural consequence, there must be a special allegation.⁴

Unless the nuisance is permanent in character, and necessarily injurious, damages cannot be recovered for injuries resulting from it subsequent to the commencement of the action.⁵ Where, how-mill was thrown on plaintiff's building after the commencement of the action is not admissible as a means of measuring the damages resulting from the same nuisance before that time. Cooper v. Randall, 59 Ill. 317.

But in Commings v. Stevenson, 76 Tex. 652; 13 S. W. Rep. 556, which was an action for damages to the value of property on account of the proximity of a powder magazine, the court said on the question of assessment of damages: "It is contended that the court erred in directing the jury to assess damages up to the time of the trial, if they should find in favor of plaintiff, because the recovery could be had for such damages only as had been sustained prior to the institution of the suit. The authorities sustain the proposition that in actions to recover damages resulting from a permanent or continuing nuisance, and where the damages are necessarily continuous, the recovery can be had for such damages only as had been sustained prior to bringing the suit. Wood on Nuis., §§ 869, 870, 873; Field on Dam., §§ 748, 749; Pinney v. Berry, 61 Mo. 359. But when the action is brought not only to recover damages, but to abate the nuisance, as in this case, we think it more in accord with the long established policy of our laws to prevent, as far as possible, a multiplicity of suits—to hold that the recovery may be had for all damages sustained down to the trial, rather than put the plaintiff to another action, after the nuisance has been abated, and to recover for damages sustained between the institution of the suit and the time of trial.

In Barrick v. Schifferdicker, 1 N. Y.

ever, the nuisance is permanent in its character, all damages, both past and prospective, are recoverable in the same action.¹

Of nuisances that have been held not to be so permanent that all damages could be ascertained in one action the following are instances: Flooding land with surface water;² with water of stream;³ obstructing a right of way;⁴ obstructing street with trains of cars.⁵

(b) Nominal Damages.—Nominal damages, at the least, are recoverable where the plaintiff can show that a legal right of his has been infringed by the nuisance, even though he fails to prove actual damage;⁶ or even though the property has actually been benefited by the nuisance.⁷ Nor does the abatement of a nuisance by the plaintiff preclude him from recovering damages sustained before the time of the abatement.⁸

(c) Exemplary Damages.—Vindictive or exemplary damages are not recoverable in the absence of malice or wanton recklessness;⁹

Supp. 21, which was an action to restrain the continuance of a nuisance and also for damages, the court refused the injunction, but held that the plaintiffs would not be limited to a recovery of damages sustained up to the commencement of the action, but could recover all they had sustained up to the time of trial on the principle that a court of equity will award all the relief that the nature of the case demands. It will be noticed, however, that here the action was equitable rather than legal.

Where under legislative authority a shallow stream is dammed up, so as to make it navigable, and the land of an adjacent owner is thereby overflowed, he cannot recover punitive damages. Silver Creek Navigation Co. v. Mangum, 64 Miss. 682.

In Pickett v. Crook, 20 Wis. 358, which was an action for injuries inflicted by a ram permitted to run at large, and alleged to have been known by the defendant to be vicious and disposed to injure people, the court recognized the right to recover exemplary damages, if the defendant's conduct amounted to a reckless and wanton disregard of the safety of the public.

It is held in South Carolina that in but malice may be inferred from the continuance of the nuisance after a verdict or judgment against it.¹

(d) Mitigation of Damages.—It is no ground for mitigation of damages that the plaintiff might have abated or removed the nuisance, but did not.²

The voluntary abatement of a nuisance by the defendant after action commenced does not prejudice the rights of a diligent plaintiff.³

8. Continuing Nuisances.—Where the injury inflicted by a nuisance is not of such a character that it can be ascertained, both as to the past and future by a single action, successive actions lie for new damages so long as the nuisance is continued.⁴

A new action may be brought for the continuance of a nuisance while the first is pending, and judgment for the defendant in the second action will not conclude the plaintiff in the first.⁵

9. Limitation—(See also LIMITATION OF ACTION, 13 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law 667).—If the nuisance is of a character so permanent that it may fairly be said that the entire damage accrues in the first instance, the statute of limitations begins to run from this time. If, on the other hand, the nuisance may be said to continue from day to day, and to create a fresh injury from an action for obstructing a public way, the jury may award punitive damages. Windham v. Rhame, 11 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 283; s. c., 73 Am. Dec. 116; Jefcoat v. Knotts, 11 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 649.

Rep. 398, it was held that where a railroad company wrongfully allows its cars to stand on the track in a public street and thereby obstruct travel, each day's obstruction gives a new cause of action in favor of an abutting lot owner. So of each day's injury by discharging sewage on the plaintiff's land. Reid v. Atlanta, 73 Ga. 523.

In Slight v. Gutzlaff, 35 Wis. 675; s. c., 17 Am. Rep. 476, it was held that each successive burning of lime in a limekiln could not be regarded as a new and original nuisance, so as to hold a grantee of the premises liable for continuing the nuisance, without notice or demand to abate.

day to day, there may be a right of action, although the original right of action has been lost by lapse of time. There is no question as to this rule of law, though there is sometimes difficulty in applying it to the facts of particular cases.¹

VI. ABATEMENT—1. Definition.—To abate a nuisance is to take away, remove, or destroy the structure, object, or condition of things constituting the nuisance.²

2. Private Nuisances.—A private nuisance may be abated by one injured thereby to such an extent as to give him a right of action.³ He acts, however, at his peril; that is, to justify his act the thing must be a nuisance and not an apprehended nuisance merely.⁴ He must be guilty of no excess of abatement beyond that necessary to protect his right.⁵

In abating a nuisance, no more injury must be done to the property than is absolutely necessary to effect the object. State v. Moffett, 1 Greene (Iowa) 247.

An owner of land, in abating a private nuisance, as shocks of corn left encumbering the ground by a tenant, is bound to use reasonable care to avoid unnecessary injury; he has no right to destroy the corn, unless there is no other reasonable way of enjoying the land. Calef v. Thomas, 81 Ill. 478.

3. Public Nuisances.—A public nuisance is abatable in criminal proceedings after a verdict upon an indictment,¹ or under a decree of a court of equity,² or in civil proceedings, as the statute may provide.³ One who sustains a special injury from a public nuisance may abate it, for as to him it is a private nuisance.⁴

But he must so exercise his right as not to disturb the public peace.⁵

4. Notice.—And he must give a reasonable notice unless in the case of an emergency requiring immediate action or, perhaps, in

In the removal of a nuisance, the party abating it is only liable to the owner for a wanton or unnecessary injury. the case of positive wrong or gross negligence on the part of the person maintaining the nuisance.¹

5. Who May Abate Public Nuisance.—The question of the right of an individual to abate a public nuisance from which he sustains no special injury beyond that common to the public at large has given rise to considerable discussion, and to a supposed conflict of authority. There is a diversity of opinion among text-writers; Mr. Hilliard and Mr. Bishop believing that he may, Mr. Wood and Judge Cooley that he may not.² There are ancient authorities which, in the broad and general language used, appear to support the affirmative view; as, for example, Blackstone, who says that "If a bar or gate be wrongfully erected across the public highway, which is a common nuisance, any of the Queen's subjects passing that way may cut it down and destroy it."³

The cases bearing upon this question are cited below, those purporting or tending to afford support for the doctrine being somewhat carefully collated.⁴ Mr. Wood thinks the seeming

Where notice of the nuisance to be abated is necessary, a fence cannot be removed under a notice when it is the use of a lot sheltered by the fence that constitutes the nuisance. Verder v. Ellsworth, 59 Vt. 354.

In Earl of Lonsdale v. Nelson, 2 B. & C. 302, BEST, J., said: "Nuisances by act of commission are committed in defiance of those whom such nuisances injure, and the injured party may abate them without notice to the party who committed them; but there is no decided case which sanctions the abatement by an individual of nuisance from omission, except that of cutting the branches of trees which overhang a public road, or the private property of the person who cuts them. The permitting of these branches to extend so far beyond the soil of the owners of the trees is a most unequivocal act of negligence, which distinguishes this case from most of the other cases which have occurred. The security of lives and property may sometimes require so speedy a remedy as not to allow time to call on the person on whose property the mischief has arisen to remedy it. In such cases an individual would be justified in abating a nuisance from omission without notice. In all other cases of such nuisances persons should not take the law in their own hands, but follow the advice of Lord Hale and appeal to a court of justice."

4. The leading American case on this side of the question is Meeker v. Van Rensselaer, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 397, where, during the cholera epidemic of 1832, an Albany tenement house, containing fifty or more persons, and a public nuisance was torn down. In an action of trespass it appeared that the defendant was a citizen of the ward and an alderman. He had a verdict and a new trial was refused. Mr. Wood, in commenting upon this case (Wood on Nuisance, 2nd ed., §§ 735, et seq.), lays stress upon what he deems to have been the defendant's personal interest in the abatement of the nuisance, and upon the extraordinary exigency of the situation. We incline to believe, however, that the defendant's personal interest cut but a small figure in the case, and that the exigency of the situation afforded the ground of the decision. Renwick v. Morris, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 575, was an action of trespass for cutting away a part of a dam. Here the defendant justified on the ground that the dam was a public nuisance. It appeared that he was interested in the navigation of the river. Whether his action would have been justified had he been a stranger cannot be said.

In Wetmore v. Tracy, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 250; s. c., 28 Am. Dec. 525, the court said: "Any person may abate a public nuisance," and cited 2 Burn's Justice 563. and Hawkins 408; but neither of these authorities support the statement of the learned judge, nor does the case of Hart v. Mayor etc. of Albany, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 589; s. c., 24 Am. Dec. 165, also cited, the decision there having been put upon the ground that the defendant was an aggrieved party.

In Arundel v. McCulloch, 10 Mass. 70, the court said: "It is clear that, when any public way is unlawfully obstructed, any individual who wants to use it in a lawful way may remove the obstruction." The case goes no farther than this. In Burnham v. Hotchkiss, 14 Conn. 310, the court said: "We consider it to be well settled that a common nuisance may be abated by any person." But the authorities here cited hardly support so broad a statement, the authorities being LORD HALE, who said: "Any man may justify the removal of a common nuisance either by land or water, because every man is concerned in it." James v. Haywood, Cro. Car. 184, a case of a gate across a highway; Lodie v. Arnold, 2 Salk. 458, a case of a house across a highway; and 1 Hawk. P. C., § 61, where an obstruction to a highway was spoken of. In Low v. Knowlton, 26 Me. 128; s. c., 45 Am. Dec. 100, the court say, in passing, that a public nuisance is abatable by anyone, but this is clearly a dictum. Adams v. Beach, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 271, at most only assumes the truth of the doctrine.

In Jones v. Williams, 11 M. & W. 176, PARKER, B., after reviewing the authorities, says: "But it may be necessary in some cases where there is such immediate danger to life or health as to render it unsafe to wait, and make it lawful to remove without notice."

In Perry v. Fitzhowe, 8 Q. B. 757, where a building was a nuisance, the court said: "While the plaintiff might have pulled down the house, yet he could not do it while anyone was in it, for it is well settled that no one may abate a nuisance in such a way as to disturb the peace." And see Burling v. Read, 11 Q. B. 904; Davies v. Williams, 16 Q. B. 546.

In Harvey v. Dewoody, 18 Ark. 252, the court said: "It seems that any person may abate a common nuisance." Here this language was not essential to the decision of the case, nor does Dewey v. White, Moody & M. 56, which was an action of trespass against fireman for pulling down a stack of chimneys in the vicinity of a fire, go further than to hold that the defendants were justified because the condition of the chimneys was such as to endanger the safety of those who pulled them down as well as of those at work.

In Manhattan etc. Mfg. Co. v. Van-Keuren, 23 N. J. Eq. 251, an injunction was refused by the vice-chancellor, and what was said in relation to the right of a citizen to abate a common law nuisance was not essential to the decision. In Stiles v. Laird, 5 Cal. 120; s. c., 63 Am. Dec. 110, there was an invasion of a private as well as of a public right.

In Maxwell v. Palmerton, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 407, the court said: "If the dog be in fact ferocious, at large, and a terror to the neighborhood, the public should be justified in dispatching him at once."

In King v. Kline, 6 Barr (Pa.) 318, there is a dictum to the effect that a dog may be so ferocious as to become a public nuisance; and in such case if his owner permits him to run at large, any person may kill him.

In Bowers v. Fitzrandolph, Addison 215, it is said that a dog having bitten defendant was a nuisance, and that anybody might abate the nuisance, and in Dunlap v. Snyder, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 561: "If a dog is so ferocious that of his own disposition he will bite men in the street, and is at large, he is a nuisance and may be killed by anyone." To the same effect is Brown v. Carpenter, 26 Vt. 638; and in Gateswood v. Blincoe, 2 Dana (Ky.). See also Day v. Day, 4 Md. 262; King v. Sanders 2 Brev. 111; State v. Dibble, 4 Jones (N. Car.) 107; Oliver v. Loftin, 4 Ala 240; Stump v. McNairy, 5 Humph. (Tenn.) 363; Gunter v. Geary, 1 Cal

2; Lancaster Turnpike Co. v. Rogers, 2 Barr (Pa.) 114; State v. Atkinson, 24 Vt. 448.

On the other hand are the cases of Smith v. McCullum, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 561, where the court (MARVIN, J.) was, on the proposition that any one might abate a public nuisance: "I so concurred in Peckham v. Henderson, 37 Barb. (N. Y.) 207, without examining the question. Indeed, in the view taken in that case the question was of importance," and then concurs with Arrowood v. Ritson, 37 Barb. (N. Y.) 1, and concludes that "that which is exclusively a common or public nuisance cannot lawfully be abated by the private acts of individuals," cited the language quoted above from Blackstone, and deeming it not to afford authority for the contrary doctrine.

SHAW, C. J., in Brown v. Perkins, 12 May (Mass.) 89, said: "The true theory of abatement of nuisance is that an individual citizen may abate a private nuisance injurious to him, when he could also bring an action; and also, when a common nuisance obstructs his individual right, he may remove it to enable him to enjoy that right, and he cannot be called in question for so doing. In the case of the obstruction across a highway and an unauthorized bridge over a navigable watercourse, if he has occasion to use it, he may remove it by way of abatement. But this would not justify strangers being inhabitants of other parts of the commonwealth, having no such occasion to use it, to do the same. Some of the earlier cases, perhaps, in laying down the general proposition that private subjects may abate a common nuisance, did not expressly mark this distinction; but we think, on the authority of modern cases, where the distinctions are more accurately made, and upon principle, this is the true rule of law." This was an action of tort against persons taking part in the abatement of a liquor nuisance and the destruction of the store.

In Mayor of Colchester v. Brooke, 1 B. 339, the defendant negligently ran a vessel into and destroyed an oyster bed unlawfully planted by the plaintiff, in the channel of a navigable river. Being sued for the damage, he claimed that as the oyster bed was a public nuisance, no action would lie for an injury to it; but the court held otherwise, MANLY, C. J., saying: "However wrongful the act of the plaintiff may have been, yet, as the defendant sustained no special inconvenience therefrom, he certainly could not be justified in wilfully infringing upon the beds and destroying the oysters even for the purpose of abating a public nuisance.

. . . It is very important for the sake of the public peace and to prevent oppression, even on wrongdoers, not to confound common with private nuisances in this respect. In the case of private nuisances, the individual aggrieved may abate it, and a public nuisance becomes a private one to him who is specially and in some particular way inconvenienced thereby, as in the case of a gate across a highway which prevents a traveller from passing, and which he may therefore throw down; but the ordinary remedy for a purely public nuisance is by indictment, and each individual who is only injured as one of the public, can no more proceed to abate than he can bring an action."

In Dimes v. Petley, 15 Q. B. 276, CAMPBELL, C. J., says: "It is fully settled by the recent cases, that if there be a nuisance in a public highway, a private individual cannot, of his own authority, abate it, unless it does him a special injury, and then only to the extent necessary to enable him to exercise his right of passing over the highway. And we clearly think he cannot justify doing any damage to the property of individuals who have improperly placed the nuisance there, if avoiding it he could have passed on with reasonable convenience."

In Bowden v. Lewis, 13 R. I. 189; 8 C., 43 Am. Rep. 21, the plaintiff had erected an oyster house in a tidal river, opposite the defendant's villa lots. It did not appear that the waters way to the lots had ever been used. The defendant demolished the oyster house, claiming that it obscured the view, obstructed the access to and injured the value of his lots. It was held, that as he did not show any special injury, he was not warranted in destroying the building.

In Brown v. De Groff, 50 N. J. L. 409, the defendant, in fishing for clams, injured the plaintiff's oysters, and when sued, sought to justify on the ground that plaintiff's maintenance of the oyster bed was a public nuisance; but the court held that, conceding this to be so, it was no defence.

In Tissot v. Great Southern Tel. etc. Co., 39 La. An. 996, a telegraph com-conflict of authority can be reconciled by keeping in view his definition of a mixed nuisance, viz, one which, though public, is private as well as to certain individuals. We incline to believe that a rule of law may be formulated without resorting to this theory. The true rule we believe to be this, that, speaking generally, an individual has not the right to abate a public nuisance from which he sustains no special injury, but that circumstances may arise to secure the judicial recognition of such right, limited by the rule that his act must not be such as to create a breach of the peace, and by the further rule that nothing must be done in excess of that demanded by the exigency of the special case. We believe that something of this kind has been in the minds of the learned judges and text-writers who have adverted to this question, and that the existence of a rule thus limited with reference to special circumstances may account for the numerous dicta. The case of Meeker v. Van Rensselaer clearly was one of a special and peculiar emergency, and while so peculiar in its facts as to stand alone, may not, as we believe, be disregarded as a precedent in such other peculiar and especial cases as may arise in the future.

pany sought to justify the cutting of branches of trees overhanging the highway on the ground that such branches constituted a nuisance, but the defence was held untenable.

Gray v. Ayres, 7 Dana (Ky.) 375; s. c., 32 Am. Dec. 107, was a case where the defendants sought to justify on the ground that the house thrown down by them was a place of resort for felons; and here also it was held that the conduct of the defendants was unlawful. VII. PRESCRIPTION—1. As to Public Nuisances.—The right to maintain a public nuisance cannot be acquired by prescription.¹ Nor, where the public nuisance works private injury, can a prescriptive right be urged against a private action for such injury.²

Dec. 631; Veazie v. Dwinel, 50 Me 479; Wood's Law of Nuisances (2nd ed.) 727, et seq.

In Mills v. Hall, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 315; s. c., 24 Am. Dec. 160, which was an action for a nuisance created by the erection and maintenance of a dam across the outlet of Lake Paradox, corrupting the atmosphere and affecting the health of the plaintiff and his family, the defendants relied on the fact that the dam in its present condition had been maintained for more than twenty years, but the court (SUTHERLAND, J.), said on this point: "There is no such thing as a prescriptive right or any other right to maintain a public nuisance. Admitting that the defendant's dam has been erected and maintained more than twenty years, and that during the whole of that period it has rendered the adjacent country unhealthy, such length of time can be no defence to a proceeding on the part of the public to abate it, or to an action by any individual for the special and peculiar injury which he may have suffered from it. If the defendants have for twenty years been permitted to overflow the plaintiff's land with their mill pond, so far as the injury to the land is concerned they have by that length of possession acquired a right to use it in that manner, and are not responsible in damages to the plaintiff. So a man may overflow his own land; but if such overflow spread disease and death through the neighborhood, it may be abated, and he must respond in damages for the special injury which any individual may have sustained from it; and it would seem very absurd to contend that the defendants in a case like this would have greater rights or immunities."

JUDGE COOLEY in his work on Torts, p. 614, observes that "in any case of a public nuisance from which individual injury was received, it would seem anomalous, to say the least, that a portion of the sufferers should be at liberty to bring private suits and another portion not, or that a land owner who had lived near it should be precluded, but might sell to another who should come

But the fact that for a great many years the public, or the defendant, has been doing the act or maintaining the state of things complained of, sometimes influences the courts in determining whether such act or state of things amounts to a public nuisance.¹

2. As to Private Nuisances.—With regard to private nuisances, it may be stated generally that when the defendant in an action for damages caused thereby, can show clearly that he has openly done the thing complained of for more than twenty years, or for the corresponding statutory period of limitation, that he has always done it in the same manner, without interruption, and that the evil effects have always been the same, he will be held to have established a prescriptive immunity from liability for the nuisance, and a right to maintain it.²

in with ample right. On the whole the better doctrine would seem to be that the acquisition of rights by prescription can have nothing to do with the case of public nuisances, either when the State or when individuals complain of them."

1. In Rex v. Smith, 4 Esp. 111, the defendant was indicted for obstructing a highway by depositing bags of clothes in it. It appeared that the place had been used as a market for the sale of clothes for over twenty years, and that the defendant put the bags of clothes there for the purpose of sale. LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C. J., said that, after an acquiescence of twenty years, it appearing to all the world that there was a fair or market kept at the place, he could not hold a man to be a criminal who came there under the honest belief that it was such fair or market, legally established.

An acquiescence for fifty years by the neighborhood will prevent an indictment for continuing a noxious trade. Rex v. Neville, Peake 93.

So for setting up a noxious manufactory in a neighborhood in which other offensive trades have long been endured, unless the public inconvenience is greatly increased. Rex v. Neville, Peake 93.

In Peckham v. Henderson, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 207, it is said that the rule nullum tempus occurrit regi does not apply to the case of a simple encroachment upon a highway, which does not amount to an actual obstruction or substantial annoyance to the public.

3. Continuous Injury.—In order to create a prescription the defendant's act or business must have been actionable from the commencement of the period relied on; he must show not only that he committed the act or carried on the offensive trade with-

In Campbell v. Searman, 2 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 231; s. c., 20 Am. Rep. 581, the court (POTTER, J.) said: "It is also urged that the doctrine of pre-scription applies to the defendant's right to use his premises as a brick yard. There are some dicta in the re-ported cases in England as well as in the elementary books suggesting that an individual may acquire a right to maintain an offensive trade by prescrip-tion, by an undisturbed use of such a business for over twenty years . . . The English cases with their conflicts have been ably reviewed in our own courts. Whatever may be the rule in England or Pennsylvania on the sub-ject of gaining a right to continue nui-sances by prescription, and of the con-sideration of pecuniary profit to him who continues it, or benefit to trade and commerce, no such rule prevails in this State. 'Such a doctrine,' says DANIELS, J., in Taylor v. People, 6 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 347, 'would render the property of others subordinate to the purposes of him who might, before they had erected their dwellings, have devoted his own to an offensive and un-wholesome business. There is no sound principle of law that will protect any man in thus depriving others of the substantial use and enjoyment of their property.' . . . So it was said by JEWETT, J., in People v. Cunningham, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 536; s. c., 43 Am. Dec. 709: 'No lapse of time will enable a party to prescribe for a nuisance.' " An examination of the cases referred to by the learned judge, however, will show that in both instances the court had in mind public nuisances only. When the case of Campbell v. Sea-man reached the court of appeals (63 N. Y. 568; s. c., 20 Am. Rep. 567), that court, while not expressly asserting the doctrine of prescription, yet declared that delay on the part of the complain-ant might deprive him of equitable re-lief. EARL, J., on this point said: "It is true that if a party sleeps on his rights and allows a nuisance to go on without remonstrance or without taking measures either by suit at law or in equity to protect his rights, and allows one to go on making large expenditures about the business which constitutes the nuisance, he will sometimes be re-garded as guilty of such laches as to deprive him of equitable relief."

In an action for a nuisance consisting of a brick kiln, the defendant's pre-scriptive right to maintain another kiln, nearer to the plaintiff's house and almost in line with the kiln complained of, cannot be urged as a reason for not granting an injunction. Bareham v. Hall, 22 L. T., N. S. 116.

In Sturges v. Bridgman, 11 L. R., Ch. 852, the defendant, a confectioner, had for more than 20 years used a mortar and pestle in his back yard, adjoining the residence of the plaintiff, a physician. A short time previous to the commencement of the action the plaintiff built an addition to his house, and used it as a consultation room. His patients being much annoyed by the noise produced by the operation of the defendant's mortar and pestle, he brought this action to enjoin the further continuance of the nuisance. The defendant set up a prescriptive right by virtue of the 20 years' use; but the court held that, inasmuch as the noise produced no annoyance, and consequently created no cause of action until the erection of the consultation room, the prescriptive period did not begin until that time.

In Flight v. Thomas, 10 Ad. & El. 590, an action for creating offensive smells which passed over the plaintiff's premises, the defendant alleged that for more than 20 years prior to the action he and his predecessors had, without molestation, used a certain mixen upon his premises, and that said mixen caused the smells complained of, but he did not allege that the smells had gone over the plaintiff's land during the whole time. There was a verdict for the plaintiff, and on a motion for judgment non obstante LORD DENMAN, C. J., said: "There is no claim of an easement, unless you make it appear that the offensive smell has been used for 20 years to go over the plaintiff's land. The plea may be completely proved without proving that the nuisance has ever passed beyond the limits of the defendant's own land." LITTLEDALE, J., in the same connection, observed that "the plea only shows that the defendant has enjoyed, as of right and without interruption for twenty years, the benefit of something that occasioned a smell on his own land."

In Polly v. McCall, 37 Ala. 30, the defendant dug a ditch and diverted into it the water of a stream which flowed through the plaintiff's land. For several years the ditch as thus maintained did no harm to the plaintiff, but it finally became clogged and overflowed the plaintiff's premises. In an action for the damages, the defendant asserted a right by prescription to maintain the ditch and divert the water, but the court held that the prescriptive period did not begin until the time when the plaintiff was first injured.

In Smith v. Russ, 17 Wis. 227; s. c., 84 Am. Dec. 739, it was held that the fact that defendant's dam had been maintained at a certain height for 20 years did not create a prescriptive right to maintain it at that height and thereby overflow land which had not been overflowed during the whole 20 years, but only since a more recent time.

It is not the extent of the claim of the right, but the extent of its actual exercise, which controls. A claim of right to do more than that which has been done effects nothing on the question of prescription.¹

This principle lies at the foundation of the question of the right to invoke the doctrine of prescription in support of a nuisance consisting of noxious smells, gases, or vapors, the difficulty being not in maintaining theoretically that the law gives the right, but in furnishing the necessary proof that the right has been exercised to the same extent as at the time when the nuisance is complained of,² the burden of proving a prescriptive right being on him who asserts it.³

In Crosby v. Bessey, 49 Me. 539; s. c., 77 Am. Dec. 271, it was held that the proprietor of a tannery who had thrown refuse bark into a stream for more than 20 years acquired no prescriptive right as against lower riparian owners, unless he could show that the deposit of bark on their land by the action of the waters had taken place each year during the whole period, to their actual damage.

Somewhat opposed to this view is the case of Dana v. Valentine, 5 Met. (Mass.) 8, in which the plaintiffs, owners of dwelling-houses in the vicinity of the defendant's slaughterhouse, which he used also for the purpose of boiling soap and manufacturing candles, brought a bill to enjoin him from carrying on the business there, on the ground that the stenches created were offensive and unhealthful. The defendant relied on the fact that he had carried on the business in that place in the same manner for more than 20 years. The injunction was denied, the court saying: "Another objection to the defendant's title by prescription is that until lately the plaintiffs suffered no damage from the alleged nuisance, and therefore could not interfere to prevent its continuance. But it is very clear that when a party's right of property is invaded, he may maintain an action for an invasion of his right without proof of actual damages."

This case, when compared with the authorities cited for the doctrine announced in it and with the other cases, can hardly be deemed authority, if, indeed, it may not be so construed and explained as to bring it into line with the cases generally.

4. Alteration of Nuisance.—Where a prescriptive right has been acquired to carry on an offensive business, a change in the manner of conducting it, as by the use of new materials, does not destroy the right, provided that the injurious effects are not thereby materially changed or increased.¹

5. As Against Grantee.—If one who has acquired a prescriptive right to pollute air or water conveys land within the range of the nuisance without reserving the right to continue the offensive business, he cannot, as against his grantee, set up the prescriptive right when sued on account of the nuisance.²

6. How Right May be Lost.—A prescriptive right cannot be lost after having been acquired, except by a nonuser for twenty years.³

VIII. LEGISLATIVE CONTROL.—Where persons or corporations are authorized by the legislature to do a particular thing, or to engage in a particular business, they are not liable to indictment or other proceedings on behalf of the public for any consequences of their exercise of such authority if they have kept strictly within its terms, and done only the very thing contemplated by the legislature, in a reasonably careful and proper manner.⁴

In other words, the legislature may, if it sees fit, give express sanction to an act or state of affairs which otherwise would constitute a public nuisance. But the courts look with jealousy upon such legislative indulgence, and hold the parties so favored to a strict observance of the limitations of their authority; and if their acts create what ordinarily would be a nuisance, and what cannot be clearly shown to be the natural and probable result of the privilege, or if by another method of proceeding the authorized object could have been accomplished without creating the nuisance, they cannot rely for protection upon the statutory authority. It is considered that such consequences were not contemplated by the legislature.¹

A case well illustrating the general doctrine is Reg. v. Bradford Navigation Co., 6 B. & S. 631. There the defendants had been authorized by statute to construct and maintain a canal, using therefor the water of a certain stream. At the time of the grant the water of this stream was reasonably pure, but after the construction of the canal a town on the bank of the stream increased largely in population, and its sewerage was discharged into the stream, thus polluting it with offensive substances. The defendants, however, continued to draw the water of the stream into their canal, where it became stagnant and emitted very offensive and sickening odors from the sewerage contained in it. On proceedings to restrain them from further turning into the canal such sewerage or other matter calculated to create a nuisance, the defendants insisted that, as they had been granted the right to use the water of that stream for their canal, and as the pollution thereof was not due to any act of theirs, they could not be held responsible for any consequences resulting from its use for the authorized purpose. But the court held that as at the time of the grant the water of the stream was pure, and while in that condition no harm would have resulted from its remaining stagnant, it could not be held as having been contemplated by parliament that the water would afterwards become impure and render its use in the canal a nuisance to the public; and the use of the water was enjoined, as was also such use of the canal as to in any way create a nuisance from noxious smells emitted from the water therein. CROMPTON, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The only way in which such a nuisance as this can be legitimated is by showing that the legislature intended to legitimate it. Here, power was given to the company to take the water of certain becks; but not to take the water at all times so as to cause pollution of the atmosphere and cause disease."

Plaintiff, whose mansion house and grounds adjoined a railway and sidings on which was a shed used for cleaning the engines, complained of smoke and noxious vapors from a large number of engines stabled at the sidings and sheds, created during the process of lighting the engine fires. The company, in an action to enjoin them from permitting the issue of such smoke and vapor, contended that the statute authorized them to commit even a nuisance, provided they worked their line properly and used due precautions, and that the use of the sheds and sidings for cleaning the engines and relighting the fires was a necessary and legitimate one, and incidental to a reasonable enjoyment of their statutory powers, and gave the plaintiff no ground of action. But the court held that the statute had not deprived him of his ordinary rights, and did not authorize the nuisance complained of; that the emission of smoke and noxious vapor during the operations of cleaning the engines and lighting the fires was not a necessary evil incident to the proper working of the line, or a reasonable user of the land for the company's purposes within the meaning of the statute. Smith v.

Midland R. Co., 37 L. T., N. S. 224; 25 W. R. 861.

Power was given to a company to build a railway between certain points according to a plan deposited with a clerk of the peace, from which plan the company was not to deviate more than one hundred yards. The act recited that a railway between those points would be of great public utility, and would materially assist agricultural interests and the general traffic of the country. By a subsequent act the company was authorized to use locomotive engines upon the railway, which, when constructed, ran parallel and adjacent to an ancient highway, and in some places came within five yards of it. The company's engines frightened horses being driven in carriages along the highway. On indictment for nuisance, it was held that this interference with the rights of the public must be regarded as having been contemplated and sanctioned by the legislature, and that the company was not liable. Rex v. Pease, 4 B. & Ad. 30.

Where a railroad which is authorized to be constructed over a particular route is made over a different route, in whole or in part, it is a mere nuisance on every highway it touches in its illegal course. Com. v. Erie etc. R. Co., 27 Pa. St. 339; s. c., 67 Am. Dec. 471; s. c., Denver etc. R. Co. v. Denver City R. Co., 2 Colo. 673.

A statute prescribing the thickness of walls used for manufacturing or storing petroleum does not authorize the refining of petroleum in any locality where a necessary consequence is the emission of such offensive vapors as constitute a common-law nuisance. Com. v. Kidder, 107 Mass. 188.

In Delaware etc. Canal Co. v. Com., 60 Pa. St. 367, it was held that where a canal company purchased a canal in the condition in which it had been constructed by the commonwealth, and thereafter water was allowed to escape through the bank of the towpath and form stagnant and offensive pools on adjacent land belonging to third persons, that the canal company was indictable for maintaining a public nuisance.

A statute authorized the commissioners of emigration, with the consent of the common council of New York city, to lease or purchase docks, etc., for the landing of emigrants. The council leased to the commissioners for a term of years a portion of the North Bat-

It is sometimes said that that which is authorized by the legislature cannot be a nuisance.¹ By this, however, a public nuisance is meant, and there may be, notwithstanding the legislative authority, a private right of action for damages. To hold otherwise would be to hold, in effect, that one's property may be taken without compensation. Unless, however, such damage is inflicted as may be deemed equivalent to an actual taking, there is not a right of action, if that authorized has been done in a lawful way and within the scope of the authority, even though inconvenience and annoyance may arise, for within certain limits such annoyance and inconvenience must be submitted to.²

In Delaware etc. Canal Co. v. Lee, 22 N. J. L. 243, an action was held to lie against a canal company which, under the authority of its charter, constructed its canal on the land of a third person in such manner as to throw back the water of a natural water-course upon the plaintiff's land.

It is no defence to an action to abate a nuisance caused by maintaining a dam that it was erected by legislative authority, where the erection itself does not necessarily create the nuisance, but it arises from the manner of its construction. *Village of Pine City v. In Tinsman v. Belvidere Delaware R. Co., 26 N. J. L. 148, the liability of companies acting under statutory authority is placed upon the same footing with that of private individuals who should use their property for similar purposes. The court say: "The grantee of a franchise for private emolument, as a railroad company, may be vested with the sovereign power to take private property for public use on making compensation, but is not clothed with the sovereign's immunity from resulting damages. This power leaves their common-law liability for injuries done in the exercise of their authority precisely where it would have stood if the land had never been acquired in the ordinary way." The court held in this case that the plaintiff could recover for damages sustained by being deprived of free access to the mouth of a creek, in which he had lumber privileges before the defendant company interfered with him, and that the fact that the creek was navigable and under the control of the legislature was no objection to his recovering.

One who buys land near which is an authorized ditch cannot recover damages from those maintaining the ditch if it is as carefully operated as is possible under the circumstances. Platte & Denver Ditch Co. v. Anderson, 8 Colo. 131.

A Nullity Distinguished from an Irregularity.—"It is difficult sometimes to distinguish between an irregularity and a nullity; but I think the safest rule to determine what is an irregularity and what is a nullity is to see whether a party can waive the objection. If he can waive it, it amounts to an irregularity; if he cannot, it is a nullity." COLERIDGE, J. Holmes v. Russell, 9 Dowl. 487; Jenness v. Lapeer Circuit Judge, 42 Mich. 471.

"Number of Days."—The term, "a number of days" and "some days," may mean two days or more; neither necessarily indicates a greater number than two. Chase v. Cleveland, 44 Ohio St. 513.

Number and Denomination.—Where an indictment charged that the defendants feloniously took and carried away sundry bank notes, the number and denomination of which are unknown, the court uses the following language: "What is the meaning, the proper interpretation of the words 'number' and 'denomination'? If the word had been numbers in the plural, we would be inclined to hold it referred to the serial numbers on the bills. Being in the singular number, it must be construed as expressing or relating to the number of bills alleged to have been stolen, not the numbers on the bills. The word 'denomination' explains itself. It refers to the value or number of dollars the several bills represented." Duvall v. State, 63 Ala. 17.

I. AT COMMON LAW—1. Definition.¹—A nuncupative² will is an oral will declared by the testator before a sufficient number of witnesses³ and afterwards reduced to writing.⁴

2. Origin.—The practice of making such wills was derived from the Romans.⁵

3. When Made; in Extremis.—Before the reign of Henry VIII such wills were not necessarily made in the time of the last sick-by the court, a finding of facts might, by order of the court, be filed at a subsequent term. In Benedict v. State, 44 Ohio St. 679, an omission from the docket of a recital of the reason of the discharge of the jury in a criminal case was supplied by an order nunc pro tunc. Ex parte Beard, 41 Tex. 234; Smith v. State, 1 Tex. App. 408, and Ex parte Jones, 61 Ala. 399, were criminal cases wherein the practice was similar. In Rugg v. Parker, 7 Gray (Mass.) 172, the record of a judgment was completed by a nunc pro tunc order, after the lapse of twenty years.

1. Definition.—Swinburne, § 12, p. 1; Perkins, § 476. To this definition the words "in extremis" must be added to define such wills in the sense now used. See Bouv. L. Dict., Kent, vol. 4, *517; Jarman on Wills, vol. 1, 238; Schouler on Wills, § 360.

2. Nuncupative.—The word "nuncupative" comes from the Latin nuncupatio, for among the Romans the naming of the executor was of the essence of the will. Godolphin's Orphans Legacy, p. 13, holds that "Testaments are called nuncupative, when the testator without any writing doth declare his will before a sufficient number of witnesses; and such nuncupative will is of as great force and efficacy (except for lands, tenements and hereditaments) as any written testament . . . Such testaments are supposed to be of the greatest antiquity and far more ancient than written wills, as being in use and practice before letters were known." Swinburne, § 12, pt. 1.

3. Number of Witnesses, see infra this title (e) NUMBER OF WITNESSES, COMPETENCY.

4. In Writing, see infra this title, (f) REDUCTION TO WRITING.

5. Origin.—LORD MANSFIELD says: (Cowp. 90), "As to personal estate, the law of England has adopted the rule of the Roman testament, yet a devise of lands in England is considered in a different light from a Roman will." The Institutes of Justinian declared that if any one wished to make a testament valid by the civil law, without writing, he might do so, if, in the presence of seven witnesses, he verbally declared his wishes; and that such a will would be perfectly valid according to the civil law. Justinian, lib. 2, tit. 10, § 14; s. c., Sandar's Justinian 243.

ness, but from that time the law seems to be well established in England, that, to be available, oral wills must be made in extremis.¹

4. Scope.—At common law only personal property, and not real, could pass by nuncupative will;² to pass the former it was of as great force and effect as the written will.³

5. Rules of Construction.—In the earlier period of the common law when, through the illiteracy of the times, such testaments were in common use, they were favorably expounded;⁴ but when reading and writing became more common, and the oral will became the vehicle for perpetrating the grossest frauds,⁵ they

1. Made In Extremis.—Prince v. Hazleton, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 502; s. c., 11 Am. Dec. 307, the leading American case on nuncupative wills. Redfield on Wills, vol. 1, *186; Ellington v. Dillard, 42 Ga. 361. In a comparatively illiterate age, the art of writing was acquired by but few, and wills were made by words and signs. But "in the ages of Henry VIII and Elizabeth, letters had become so generally cultivated, and reading and writing so widely diffused, that nuncupative wills were limited to extreme cases and justified only on the plea of necessity." Prince v. Hazleton, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 502; s. c., 11 Am. Dec. 307.

So that Perkins, who wrote during the reign of Henry VIII, defines such a will as one made when the testator "lieth languishing for fear of sudden death, dareth not to stay the writing of his testament, and, therefore, he prayeth his curate and others, his neighbors, to bear witness of his last will, and declareth by word what his last will is." Perkins, § 476.

And Swinburne, who wrote during the reign of James I, defines such a testament as made "when the testator, without any writing, doth declare his will before a sufficient number of witnesses;" thus making no mention of last sickness, he further declares, "this kind of testament is commonly made, when the testator is now very sick, weak and past all recovery." Swinburne, pt. 1, § 12, par. 1.

Bacon's Abridgment, published in 1736, ii. defining such wills, holds, "When a man is sick, and for fear that death or want of memory should surprise him, that he should be prevented if he stayed the writing of his testimony, desires his neighbors and friends to bear witness of his last will and then declares the same presently by word."

7 Bac. Abr. Wills 305; Wood on Conv., vol. 6, 574.

Blackstone says "That a nuncupative will depends merely upon oral evidence being declared by the testator in extremis before a sufficient number of witnesses and afterwards reduced to writing." 2 Black. Com. 500; Swift's System 420.

2. Scope.—"By the common law, no lands or tenements (except by particular custom) were devisable by any last will or testament; neither could they be transferred from one to another but by solemn livery of seisin, matter of record, or sufficient writing." Coke on Lit. 3, Comp. 90.

"At common law a will of chattels was good without writing." Kent Com., vol. 4, *516; Swinburne on Wills, 6. The statutes of 32, 34 and 35, Henry VIII, by which devises of land were allowed and required to be in writing, left wills of personal property the same as before the statutes were passed. Note to Jarman on Wills by Randolph and Talcot 755.

3. Swinb., pt. 1, § 12, par. 3.

4. Rules of Construction.—Swinb. on Wills, pt. 1, § 12, par. 6. So where a daughter deposited £180 with her mother and afterwards made a will, and gave several legacies, but took no notice of the £180, but afterwards desired her mother if she thought fit to give the £180 to her niece, and, under the statute of frauds it was declared not good as a nuncupative will, yet the will was given effect by decreeing that the mother held the sum as trustee for the niece. Nab v. Nab, 10 Mod. 403; s. c., 1 Eq. Cases Abr. 404.

5. The words of the statute of 29 Car. II, ch. 3, § 19 (referring to nuncupative wills), have always been strictly construed . . . It was held, in the case of Bennett v. Jackson, 2 Phill.

were strictly construed¹ and probated by even more stringent proof than were written wills.²

6. How Made; Formalities.—Originally there was no particular way of making a nuncupative will, nor were there any formalities prescribed for their execution,³ but this has been changed in part by the various statutes.⁴

7. Abuse of, at Common Law.—Such grave frauds came to be perpetrated in the probate of such wills that the statute of frauds was passed largely to remedy the same.⁵

II. UNDER STATUTE—1. Now Regulated by—(a) STATUTE OF FRAUDS.—The statute of frauds, passed 1676–1677,⁶ marks an era in the history of nuncupative jurisprudence, all such testaments being placed under strong restrictions.⁷ An exception

190; that the words were not spoken animo testandi, and that there was no rogatio testium when, after summoning several of the children of testatrix to her bedside, she used the following words: "Joseph Henry Bennett, your brother, is my heir, and all that I have is his. Tell him to pay all my debts; give my love to him and tell him to take me home and by no means to leave me here; tell him to be a father to you children." Prince v. Hazleton, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 502; s. c., 11 Am. Dec. 307.

1. Parsons v. Miller, 2 Phil. 194. Such is the rule now under statute. See FORMALITIES OF NUNCUPATIVE WILLS UNDER STATUTE, infra this title, Pierce v. Pierce, 46 Ind. 86.

2. "The factum of a nuncupative will requires to be proved by evidence more strict and stringent than that of a written one, in addition to all the several requisites to its validity, under the statute of frauds, being duly proved, to entitle it to probate." Leman v. Bonsall, 1 Addams 389; s. c., 2 Eng. Ec. Rep. 147.

3. Formalities.—"As for any precise form of words, none is required; neither is it material whether the testator do speak properly or improperly, so that his meaning do appear, as hath been heretofore confirmed by divers examples; but it is not sufficient for the testator to leave a sound in the ears of the witnesses, unless he do leave some understanding also of his will and meaning." Swinb., pt. 1, § 12, par. 7, § 26.

4. See II. UNDER STATUTE, (a) Statute of Frauds; (b) Statute of Wills; (c) Code or Statute Provisions in the Several States, infra this title.

5. Abuse of.—The question as to the expediency of allowing such wills was strongly emphasized in the case of Cole v. Mordaunt, 4 Vesey 196. In this case the testator, Cole, when advanced in years, married a young woman and shortly afterward died. At his death, his wife, who had behaved with questionable propriety during her married life with Cole, set up a nuncupative will, alleged to have been made in extremis before nine witnesses, in opposition to a written will made three years before, leaving £3,000 to charitable purposes. The probate of the will coming before the king's bench, conspiracy and such gross frauds were made apparent that the oral will was set aside; and the LORD CHANCELLOR was led to declare in the case that "He hoped to see one day a law, that no written will should ever be revoked but by writing;" and it was largely through the influence of this case that the section of the statute of frauds relating to wills was passed. Prince v. Hazleton, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 502; s. c., 11 Am. Dec. 307.

Since the statute of frauds, all nuncupative wills, except those made by soldiers in actual service and mariners at sea, are void. Ex parte Thompson, 4 Bradf. (N. Y.) 154.

6. Statute of Frauds.—See note to Cole v. Mordaunt, 4 Vesey 196.

7. This statute, 29 Car. II, ch. 3, pp. 19–23, provided, that, except in case of soldiers in actual service, or mariners at sea, no nuncupative will should be good where the estate bequeathed exceeded the value of £30; unless—

1. It be proved by the oath of three witnesses at the making thereof.

2. Unless the testator at the time of was made in the case of those of less than £30, and those of sailors and soldiers, which remained as before the statute. The result of this statute was that such wills came rapidly into disuse.¹

(b) STATUTE OF WILLS.—Still further restrictions were thrown about such oral wills by the statute of wills,¹ which marks the second era in the legislative control of them. With the exception of soldiers and sailors, the new statute made nuncupative wills and testaments of all kinds informally executed, invalid. It declared that no will should be valid unless it were executed in writing.

(c) CODE OR STATUTE PROVISIONS IN SEVERAL STATES.—The American law² is almost wholly based upon either the statute of frauds or the statute of wills.

2. Privileged Testators—(a) THOSE LEAVING PETTY ESTATES.—The tendency of recent State laws is to follow the statute of wills, doing away with oral wills, except in the case of soldiers making the will bade the persons present, or some of them, bear witness that such was his will, or words to that effect.

3. Unless such will was made in the time of the testator's last sickness, in his dwelling house, or where he had resided ten days previous to making the will, except when he was surprised or taken sick while away from his own home and died before he returned.

4. Unless the substance of the testimony to prove such will were committed to writing within six days after the will were made.

5. In addition the statute required safeguards against hasty probate of such wills.

6. And provided that no written will should be altered or repealed by oral words not reduced to writing during the testator's life and acknowledged by him before at least three witnesses.

1. Tendency of State Laws and Statute Provisions.—(1) The statute of wills has been almost exactly followed in California, Kentucky, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, New York, Oregon, Rhode Island, Virginia and West Virginia, although the old law in these States followed the statute of frauds. See Digest of several State laws in note to vol. 3, Jarman on Wills 755; also CODE OR STATUTE PROVISIONS IN SEVERAL STATES, infra this title, also FORMALITIES, infra this title.

2. It is so in Alabama, Maine, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Wisconsin. See CODE OR STATUTE PROVISIONS IN SEVERAL STATES, infra this title.

3. Such wills not good if exceeding $500 in Alabama and Arkansas, $200 in Delaware and Missouri, $300 in Iowa and Michigan, $100 in Indiana and Vermont. In States where amount that can be disposed of by nuncupative will is limited, attempts to dispose of a greater amount or of real property will be carried out as far as such disposition would be valid. So in Iowa it has been held that an oral will is invalid for the excess. Mulligan v. Leonard, 46 Iowa 692.

In Alabama, a nuncupative will bequeathing personal property of more than $500 in value, which is void under the Alabama Code, cannot be established in equity on the ground of the decedent's ignorance or mistake as to the change in the law made by the code. Erwin v. Hammer, 27 Ala. 296.

It has been held that a promissory note cannot be disposed of by such will, and in same case that, in the absence of affirmative proof that the actual value of property left by an oral will was less than $300, such a will bequeathing such a note of the value of $400 should not be admitted to probate.

4. In South Carolina, Rev. Stat. (1873), §§ 24-27.

5. In California, Deering's Annot. Code and Stat., vol. 2 (Civil Code), §§ 1276, 1288-1291. The provisions of the law of California even add to those of the statute of wills by declaring that decedent must have been at the time of making the will in expectation of immediate death from an injury received the same day.

6. $250 in Tennessee, $150 in Nebraska and Wisconsin, $100 in Maine, Mississippi, New Hampshire and Pennsylvania, and $80 in New Jersey. See CODE AND STATUTE PROVISIONS IN THE SEVERAL STATES, infra this title.

7. Personal property only, bequeathed by soldiers and sailors, in Alabama, Arkansas, Indiana, Iowa, Maine, Mississippi, Missouri, Michigan, New Jersey, Nebraska, Pennsylvania and Vermont. CODE AND STATUTE PROVISIONS IN SEVERAL STATES, infra this title.

property of which such a will can be made;¹ and some make no mention of soldiers and sailors, or if they do, make no provision as to the kind of property that may be bequeathed by such will by other persons;² in the latter case it is usual that personal property only, passes,³ though it was otherwise decided in Ohio.⁴ In Georgia both real and personal property may be left by such will.⁵

(b) SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.—Soldiers in actual military service and mariners at sea were specially excepted from the provisions of the statute of frauds, and have, both in England and in this country always been permitted to dispose of personal property by nuncupative will, retaining in this respect the rights which they possessed at common law. It is not requisite that such wills made by these classes should be made during the last sickness;⁶ no particular mode has been prescribed in respect to the manner of making the testament,⁷ and no particular number of witnesses is required.⁸

(1) Who Included as Such.—The term “soldier” embraces every military grade from private to commander-in-chief;⁹ it includes regulars and volunteers serving the government,¹⁰ but does

1. So in Delaware, South Carolina, Ohio, Illinois, Kansas and Colorado. CODE AND STATUTE PROVISIONS IN SEVERAL STATES, infra this title.

2. So in Arkansas, Florida, Indiana, Mississippi, Missouri, Wisconsin, North Carolina, New Hampshire, Michigan, New Jersey, Nevada, Tennessee, Nebraska. CODE AND STATUTE PROVISIONS OF SEVERAL STATES, infra this title.

3. What Property Passes by Oral Will.—Under the Revised Statutes of Texas, in force in September, 1885, a nuncupative will, made at that date, is incompetent to pass real estate. Moffett v. Moffett, 67 Tex. 642; to same effect Lewis v. Aylott, 45 Tex. 190; Smithdeal v. Smith, 64 N. Car. 52; Palmer v. Palmer, 2 Dana (Ky.) 390. In Indiana, real property does not pass by an oral will, even if made by a soldier. Pierce v. Pierce, 46 Ind. 86. Real property cannot pass by oral will. McLeod v. Dell, 9 Fla. 451; Campbell v. Campbell, 21 Mich. 438; Sadler v. Sadler, 60 Miss. 251; Miles' Will, 4 Dana (Ky.) 1; Cooke v. Cooke, 3 Litt. (Ky.) 238. To the contrary, Gills v. Weller, 10 Ohio 463. Ashworth v. Carleton, 12 Ohio St. 381. In Virginia, it has been held that the profits of realty could not pass by oral will. Page v. Page, 2 Rob. (Va.) 424.

4. Ashworth v. Carleton, 12 Ohio St. 381.

5. Code of Georgia (1883), § 2482.

6. Oral will by soldiers and sailors need not be made in extremis to be valid. Ex parte Thompson, 4 Bradf. (N. Y.) 154; Van Deuzer v. Gordon, 39 Vt. 111; Leathers v. Greenacre, 53 Me. 561.

7. See above cases last cited under note 6.

8. A soldier's will may be established by the testimony of one witness. Gould v. Safford, 39 Vt. 498.

9. Who Included.—Schouler on Wills, § 366. A surgeon in the East India Company's service held to be within the exception. 2 Curt. (Eng.) 386.

10. Soldier in Camp.—An instrument signed by a soldier while in camp in Massachusetts was held invalid as a nuncupative will, he not being in “actual military service.” Later, while in the enemy's country, he wrote to a friend referring to the former paper as his will. It was held that as the letter was written while the testator was in actual military service, within the meaning of the statute, it gave testamentary operation to said instrument. Van Deuzer v. Gordon, 39 Vt. 111. So a similar case in Leathers v. Greenacre, 53 Me. 561. A person who had enrolled himself in a volunteer company raised under a call by the government for troops in 1862, but had not been accepted and mustered into service, could not make a nuncupa-not include militia and home reserves not in service.¹ The term "mariners" includes all in marine service either in the navy² or in the merchant service;³ but does not embrace passengers.⁴

(2) Character of Service Conferring Privilege.—To come within the exception, soldiers must be in actual service.⁵ If in barracks either at home⁶ or in the colonies,⁷ or at home on a furlough,⁸ they are not privileged. Only seamen at sea are given this privilege.⁹ The exception is held not to include a sailor en route to his ship,¹⁰ or a mariner on a river.¹¹ The privilege continues though the ship be in harbor,¹² or the seamen temporarily on shore.¹³

3. Generally as to Nuncupative Wills—(a) FORMALITIES.—When tive will as a soldier. Pierce v. Pierce, 46 Ind. 86.

1. See cases cited under WHO INCLUDED, infra this title.

2. Includes purser of a man of war. Goods of Hayes, 2 Curt. (Eng.) 338.

3. Who in the Marine Service.—A nuncupative will may be made by the captain of a coaster, while on a voyage and at anchor in the mouth of a bay, and where the tide ebbs and flows. Hubbard v. Hubbard, 8 N. Y. 196.

If a mariner at sea, in prospect of death, on being asked as to the disposition of his property, states his wishes, it is sufficient to constitute a nuncupative will. It is not necessary that he should name an executor. Hubbard v. Hubbard, 8 N. Y. 166.

The decedent, a cook on board a steamboat, while his vessel was lying at the wharf at Bremen, desired that his deposit in the New York Seamen's Savings Bank should be sent to his mother in Scotland. Held a good nuncupative will. Ex parte Thompson, 4 Bradf. (N. Y.) 154. The same case declares that the term "mariner" applies to every person in the naval or mercantile service, to the cook or purser as well as to the sailor. Morrill v. Morrill, 1 Hag. (Eng.) 51.

4. A man, a mariner by profession, made his will in the river Delaware, on board a steamer which was towing a vessel in which he was to sail as a passenger to Chagres, there to take command of a lighter to lighten vessels arriving in the river. Held, that the will was not within the statutory exception in favor of mariners at sea—the testator, at the time of its execution, not being a mariner in service, and being on his way to engage in business not that of a mariner at sea. Warren v. Harding, 2 R. I. 133.

5. Must be in Actual Service.—"A soldier who falls sick upon the march, and is of necessity allowed to fall out and wait for returning strength, but who dies soon after he is carried into hospital, may properly be regarded as in actual military service." Gould v. Safford, 39 Vt. 498.

An officer in the army of the United States, in May, 1864, after it had commenced to move to Richmond, wrote and sent a letter to his sister, saying if he was killed or did not return he wanted her to have his property. He was killed in August, 1864. Held, that this portion of the letter was a valid will by a soldier, and should be admitted to probate as such. Botsford v. Krake, 1 Abb. Pr., N. S. (N. Y.) 112.

A volunteer, enrolled but not accepted and mustered into the service, could not make a nuncupative will. Pierce v. Pierce, 46 Ind. 86; Goods of Johnson, 2 Curt. (Eng.) 341; In re Churchill, 4 Not. Cas. 47; Leathers v. Greenacre, 53 Me. 561.

7. White v. Repton, 3 Curt. 818; Phipps, In re, 2 Curt. 368; Johnson, In re, 2 Curt. 341.

8. A soldier at home on furlough cannot make a valid nuncupative will within the provisions usually made by statutes in favor of soldiers in actual military service. Will of Smith, 6 Phila. (Pa.) 104.

nuncupative wills are made by unprivileged testators, the formalities prescribed by statute must be strictly observed.¹ No particular form is requisite,² but the intent to make a will must be plain.³ A substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute is sufficient.⁴ In some States it is held necessary to the validity of such will that the testator bid the witnesses notice that such is his will or words to that effect;⁵ in others it is held unnecessary to request any person to be witnesses.⁶

(b) MADE WHEN IN EXTREMIS.—A nuncupative will must be made when in extremis, or when overtaken by sudden and violent illness, not affording an opportunity of making a written will. Declarations made in good health are not sufficient to establish a nuncupative will though death should occur soon

1. Formalities of Statute Closely Followed.—Succession of Dorriess, 37 La. Ann. 833; Parsons v. Miller, 2 Phill. (Eng.) 194; Leman v. Bonsall, 1 Ad-dams 389; Bennett v. Jackson, 2 Phill. (Eng.) 190; Morgan v. Stevens, 78 Ill. 287; Taylor's Appeal, 47 Pa. St. 31; Biddle v. Biddle, 36 Md. 630; Mitchell v. Vickers, 20 Tex. 377; Lucas v. Goff, 33 Miss. 629.

2. No Particular Form Necessary.—A mariner at sea, in his last sickness and within an hour of his death, being enquired of as to what disposition he wished to make of his property replied: "I want my wife to have all my personal property." This declaration was made in the presence of four witnesses. The testator was of sound mind and memory at the time, and under no restraint. Held, that this was a good nuncupative will. Hubbard v. Hubbard, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 148; Yarnall's Will, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 46; s. c., 26 Am. Dec. 115; Portwood v. Hunter, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 538; Weir v. Chidester, 63 Ill. 453; Parkison v. Parkison, 12 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 678; Harrington v. Stees, 82 Ill. 50; s. c., 25 Am. Rep. 290. The language of the statute need not be used. Baker v. Dodson, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 342; s. c., 40 Am. Dec. 650.

3. Intent Must be Plain.—Kelly v. Kelly, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 555; Ridley v. Coleman, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 616; Morgan v. Stevens, 78 Ill. 287; Gibson v. Gibson, Walk. (Miss.) 364; Lucas v. Goff, 33 Miss. 629; Smith v. Smith, 63 N. Car. 637; Campbell v. Campbell, 21 Mich. 443. Where a nuncupative will is drawn from the decedent by interrogatories, full and clear proof of spontaneity of the animus testandi is indispensable. Dorsey v. Sheppard, 12 G. & J. (Eng.) 192.

4. Substantial Compliance Sufficient.—Ridley v. Coleman, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 616; Gwin v. Wright, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 639; Arnett v. Arnett, 27 Ill. 247; s. c., 81 Am. Dec. 227; Weir v. Chidester, 63 Ill. 453; Hatcher v. Millard, 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 30.

5. Testator Must Bid Witnesses Notice Such Is Last Will.—Biddle v. Biddle, 36 Md. 630; Winn v. Bob, 3 Leigh (Va.) 140; s. c., 23 Am. Dec. 258; Yarnell's Will, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 146; s. c., 26 Am. Dec. 115; Dawson's Appeal, 23 Wis. 69; Arnett v. Arnett, 27 Ill. 247; s. c., 81 Am. Dec. 227; Garner v. Lansford, 12 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 558; Dockum v. Robinson, 26 N. H. 372; Babineau v. Le Blanc, 14 La. Ann. 739; Sampson v. Browning, 22 Ga. 293; Brown v. Brown, 2 Murph. (N. Car.) 350; Parsons v. Miller, 2 Phill. (Eng.) 194; Bennett v. Jackson, 2 Phill. (Eng.) 190; Broach v. Sing, 57 Miss. 115; Parsons v. Parsons, 2 Me. 298; Morgan v. Stevens, 78 Ill. 287; Andrews v. Andrews, 48 Miss. 220; Hatcher v. Millard, 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 30; Burch v. Stovall, 27 Miss. 725.

It is not sufficient that the testator declare his will to the witnesses separately and apart from one another. Prince v. Hazleton, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 505; s. c., 11 Am. Dec. 307; Weeden v. Bartlett, 6 Munf. (Va.) 123; Tally v. Butterworth, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 501; Offutt v. Offutt, 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 162; s. c., 38 Am. Dec. 183; Yarnell's Will, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 46; s. c., 26 Am. Dec. 115; Wester v. Wester, 5 Jones (N. Car.) 95.

afterward.¹ If the party recover, the nuncupative will falls to the ground.²

(c) WHERE MADE.—The common law imposed no restrictions as to the place where nuncupative wills were to be made. Under the statute of frauds such wills can be made only in one's dwelling, unless the testator is surprised or taken sick while absent from home and dies before his return.³ The wills of soldiers and sailors and wills of petty amounts were not made subject to this rule. The State codes or statutes must now determine whether any such restraints still operate.⁴

(d) HOW MADE.—A nuncupative will must be made by spoken words or signs. It may be made in reply to interrogatories.⁵

1. Made in Extremis.—Where a decedent was able to come down stairs to receive and converse with visitors, and to walk in the street, and died the next day from a rupture of the lungs—held that this was not such an extremity of last sickness as authorized a nuncupative will under the statute of 1833 of Pennsylvania. Werkheiser v. Werkheiser, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 184.

An alleged nuncupative will made by testatrix nine days before her death, in her last illness, cannot be admitted to probate where proof is clear that she had time and capacity subsequently to make a written will. Carroll v. Bonham, 42 N. J. Eq. 625.

So where six days intervened before death. Morgan v. Stevens, 78 Ill. 287. To same effect, Yarnell's Will, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 46; s. c., 26 Am. Dec. 115; Prince v. Hazleton, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 502; s. c., 11 Am. Dec. 307; Hubbard v. Hubbard, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 148; Seese v. Hawthorne, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 548; O'Neil v. Smith, 33 Md. 569; Morgan v. Stevens, 78 Ill. 287; Haus v. Palmer, 21 Pa. St. 296; Sadler v. Sadler, 60 Miss. 251; Gwin v. Wright, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 639; Jones v. Norton, 10 Tex. 120. It is further held that the statute is a limitation of the common-law right which did not require such wills to be made in extremis; and therefore if a person, in a sickness from which he afterwards dies, being impressed with the probability of approaching death, deliberately makes his will in conformity to the statute, it will not be rejected because he may, in fact, have had time to reduce it to writing. It is not necessary that he have no hope of recovery. Harrington v. Stees, 82 Ill. 50; s. c., 25 Am. Rep. 290. So also Johnson v. Glasscock, 2 Ala. 242;

Nolan v. Gardner, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 215.

2. Recovery Defeats Oral Will.—Carroll v. Bonham, 42 N. J. Eq. 625; Morgan v. Stevens, 78 Ill. 287; Werkheiser v. Werkheiser, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 184; Sadler v. Sadler, 60 Miss. 251.

3. Statute of Frauds.—Act 29 Car. II, § 19.

4. Where Made.—When a nuncupative will was not made at the habitation of the deceased, nor where he had resided for next ten days preceding, but was authenticated as the law required, it was held that the will ought to be established, notwithstanding his having been very unwell when he left home, if afterwards, he was taken more dangerously ill, and died at the place where the will was made. Marks v. Bryant, 4 Hen. & M. (Va.) 91; Nowlin v. Scott, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 64; Gwin v. Wright, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 639.

5. Made by Words or Signs.—Hubbard v. Hubbard, 8 N. Y. 196; Mulligan v. Leonard, 46 Iowa 692; Dorsey v. Sheppard, 12 G. & J. (Eng.) 198; Biddle v. Biddle, 36 Md. 630. Pauses made in dictating do not invalidate. Starrs v. Mason, 32 La. Ann. 8. A nuncupative will cannot be established where neither the words nor their substance, as used by the alleged testator, were committed to writing by anyone as proof of a bequest or to be preserved as such, and no proof was made of a request by testator to bystanders to bear witness that the words used were his will. Taylor's Appeal, 47 Pa. St. 31.

A paper writing, declared and signed as his will by a person who was sick, but was not in extremis at the time, and attested and witnessed, cannot, in any sense, be regarded as a nuncupative will. Ellington v. Dillard, 42 Ga. 361.

A will reduced to writing and signed by the testator,¹ or memorandum for instructions for making a will,² cannot be treated as a nuncupative will;³ nor is a written will, drawn up by an attorney, but not signed, owing to the sickness of the testator, to be treated as a nuncupative will;⁴ but, upon requisite proof, a paper, not perfected as a written will, may be established as a nuncupative will when its completion is prevented by act of God, or any other cause than an intention to abandon or postpone its consummation.⁵ The presumption of the law is against the validity of a testamentary paper not completed.⁶ An account in an account book is held not to be a nuncupative will.⁷ There must be in the testator the animus testandi,⁸ which is sometimes presumed from circumstances.⁹

(e) NUMBER OF WITNESSES AND COMPETENCY.—The number of witnesses requisite to prove an oral will, is generally regulated by statute in the different States.¹⁰ The testimony of the wit-

2. Instructions for making a will have sometimes been admitted to probate; as where the instructions were in conformity with testator's intentions, and death prevented a more formal execution. Castle v. Torre, 2 Moo. P. C. (Eng.) 133; Goodman v. Goodman, 2 Lee's Ec. (Eng.) 109; In Re Bathgate, 1 Hag. Ecc. (Eng.) 67.

Cases 1; Sikes v. Snaith, 2 Phill. (Eng. Ecc.) 351; Lewis v. Lewis, 3 Phill. (Eng. Ecc.) 109.

A letter written by one person announcing to another the death of the testator, and, in a general way, his disposition of his estate, is not a nuncupative will. Taylor's Appeal, 47 Pa. St. 31.

6. Presumption of Law Against In- complete Testamentary Papers.—Wood v. Medley, 1 Hag. Ecc. (Eng.) 645; Reay v. Cowcher, 2 Hag. Ecc. (Eng.) 249.

7. Williams v. Pope, Wright (Ohio) 406.

8. There Must be in Testator Animus Testandi.—No words can be sustained as a nuncupative will, unless the person using them has the animus testandi, and believes himself that he is making a will. Gibson v. Gibson, 1 Walk. (Mich.) 364.

Verbal directions and instructions for drawing up a written will, although spoken in the presence of the proper number of witnesses required to bear witness thereto, and reduced to writing, do not constitute a nuncupative will. To have such testamentary effect, the words must be spoken by the testator, with the intention thereby to make a final disposition of his property. Dockum v. Robinson, 26 N. H. 372; Lucas v. Goff, 33 Miss. 629.

9. Animus Testandi Presumed.—Where a decedent, upon his deathbed, several times expressed a desire that certain persons should have his property, it was held that the animus testandi would be presumed, and his property disposed of in accordance with such desire to the extent to which a nuncupative will would be valid. Mulligan v. Leonard, 46 Iowa 692; Hubbard v. Hubbard, 8 N. Y. 196.

10. Number of Witnesses.—By statute, two witnesses are necessary in the following States: Arkansas, California, Colorado, Delaware, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Mississippi, Missouri, Michi- nesses must substantially agree.¹ The testator must request the witnesses to bear witness that such is his last will.²

(f) REDUCTION TO WRITING.—The time within which a nuncupative will must be reduced to writing, is generally regulated by statute in the various States.³ The exact words of the verbal

Three witnesses are necessary in Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Maine, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Nebraska, Texas and Wisconsin. See also Mitchell v. Vickers, 20 Tex. 377; Dorsey v. Shepherd, 12 G. & J. (Eng.) 201; Biddle v. Biddle, 36 Md. 630; Panaud v. Jones, 1 Cal. 488; Castro v. Castro, 6 Cal. 160; Tebis v. Pitcher, 10 Cal. 465; Eimerick v. Alvarado, 64 Cal. 565.

1. Testimony of Witnesses Must Agree Substantially.—Mitchell v. Vickers, 20 Tex. 377. Under the Illinois statute at least two witnesses must agree that they were present and hear the testator pronounce the words of the will; that they believe him to have been of sound mind and memory; that he did at the time desire the persons present, or some of them, bear witness that such was his will. Morgan v. Stevens, 78 Ill. 287.

2. Witnesses to Nuncupative Will.—It is indispensable to the validity of a nuncupative will that the testator should request those present to bear witness that such was his last will; or that he should say or do something equivalent to such an expression. Arnett v. Arnett, 27 Ill. 247; s. c., 81 Am. Dec. 227; Sampson v. Browning, 22 Ga. 293; Babineau v. LeBlanc, 14 La. Ann. 739; Garner v. Lansford, 12 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 558; Parkison v. Parkison, 12 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 672; Brown v. Brown, 2 Murph. (N. Car.) 350; Gwin v. Wright, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 639; Winn v. Bob, 3 Leigh (Va.) 140; s. c., 23 Am. Dec. 258; Biddle v. Biddle, 36 Md. 630; Dawson's Appeal, 23 Wis. 69.

Under the Pennsylvania statute requiring the testator to bid some persons present bear witness to the will, "or to that effect," it has been held that it was not a sufficient compliance with the statute for the testatrix to state what was her will, looking at the witnesses, but not by word asking them to bear witness. Meisenhelter's Will, 15 Phila. (Pa.) 561.

A nuncupative will under private signature need not be shown to have been dictated by the testator when written out of the presence of the witnesses. Pfarr v. Belmont, 39 La. Ann. 294.

The statements of a sick woman, as to the disposal of her property, although made in the presence of two witnesses, cannot be probated as her nuncupative will, if she neither mentions a will nor calls any one to note her language. Broach v. Sing, 57 Miss. 115.

After an oral will is reduced to writing within the statutory period, it must be shown to, and approved by each of the attesting witnesses as correct. Wellington v. Owings, 9 Gill (Md.) 467.

Witnesses must be disinterested. They must be able to testify as to substance of will, intent to make will, the call upon them to bear witness to it as a will, and the necessity for making such will verbally. Haus v. Palmer, 21 Pa. St. 296; Tally v. Butterworth, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 501; Baker v. Dodson, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 342; s. c., 40 Am. Dec. 650.

The oral will of a soldier in actual military service, made in extremis may be established in a court controlled by the common law, upon the testimony of one witness only. Gould v. Safford, 39 Vt. 498.

In Iowa, it has been held that it is not essential that the witnesses by whom a nuncupative will is established should have been called upon to witness such will by the testator. Mulligan v. Leonard, 46 Iowa 692.

A nuncupative will cannot be translated to a foreigner, not understanding the language of testator and make the foreigner a competent witness. Succession of D'Auterive, 39 La. Ann. 1092.

A statute requiring two witnesses is not satisfied by making the same oral declaration to one witness at one time and to another witness at another time. Wester v. Wester, 5 Jones (N. Car.) 95.

3. Time Within Which Reduced to Writing.—Within three days in Dela- declaration need not be used if the substance be preserved.¹ If, in reducing the words to writing, a part of them be left out, the omission of that part will not vitiate the rest.²

(g) STRICTNESS OF PROOF OF.—Nuncupative wills are not favorites of the law, and cannot be established except upon strict proof and compliance with all the requisites of the law.³ They must be proved within the time allowed by law.⁴ If made by interrogatories, stricter proof is required than in other cases.⁵

(h) REPEAL OF WRITTEN WILL BY.—A nuncupative will cannot revoke a written will.⁶

2. Omission of Part of Verbal Declaration Does Not Invalidate.—Marks v. Bryant, 4 Hen. & M. (Va.) 91.

3. Strictly Proved.—On proceedings to establish an alleged nuncupative will, made by deceased three days before his death, whereby he gave nearly all his property to his widow, to the exclusion of his children, it was held proper to charge the jury that such will must be strictly proved in all essential points; that it must have been made as a matter of necessity and not as a matter of choice; that it must appear that the deceased was in extremis when he made the will; and that the jury should find against the nuncupative will if they believed from the evidence that deceased had plenty of time and opportunity to execute a formal written will. Scaife v. Emmons, 84 Ga. 619.

An oral will must substantially conform to the law, and it must clearly appear that a will was then intended. Where A, a few days before her death, stated how she wished her property divided, but did not ask anyone to bear this in mind as her will, and had been heard not long before to say that she wished "to fix up her affairs," but it was too late, as everything had been recorded, it was held insufficient as an oral will. Ridley v. Coleman, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 616.

I. DEFINITION.—An oath is an outward pledge given by the person taking it that his attestation or promise is made under an immediate sense of his responsibility to God.¹ It is a solemn affirmation, strengthened by the party's invoking the divine vengeance in case he speaks falsely.²

II. HISTORY AND GENERAL NATURE.—Oaths are not peculiar to the courts of justice, nor are they the creations of municipal law, having been in use from the earliest ages; and no matter how abused, an oath has in every age been considered to supply the strongest hold on the consciences of men, either as a pledge of future conduct or as a guarantee for the veracity of narration.³ The substance of an oath has nothing to do with Christianity; the forms have always been different in different countries, but still the substance is the same, which is, that God in all of them is called upon to witness to the truth of what is said.⁴ The oath

1. Tyler on Oaths 15; 2 Bouv. L. Dict., art., Oath; PERJURY, Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law.

"An affirmation, negation or promise, corroborated by the attestation of the Divine Being, an appeal to God." Wharton. See also Jacobs's L. Dict., art. Oath.

In its broadest sense the term includes all forms of attestation by which a party signifies that he is bound in conscience to perform the act faithfully and truly. In a more restricted sense it excludes all those forms of attestation or promise which are not accompanied with an imprecation. 2 Bouv. L. Dict., Oath.

2. 2 Abb. L. Dict., art. Oath; Blocker v. Burrus, 2 Ala. 354.

In Ohio it has been defined as "the calling upon God to witness that what is said by the person sworn is true, and invoking the divine vengeance upon his head if what he says is false." Brock v. Mulligan, 10 Ohio 123.

"A religious asseveration by which a person renounces the mercy and imprecates the vengeance of heaven if he do not speak the truth." King v. White, 1 Leach Cr. Cas. (Eng.) 430.

In Best's Principles of Evidence (p. 43) it is maintained that the "imprecation is no part of the essence of an oath, but is a mere adjunct of questionable propriety, as calculated to divert attention from the true meaning of the ceremony and fix it on some external observance."

Where a taxpayer was asked by an assessor, "You take your oath that this is all, do you?" and answered, "Certainly I do," this was held not to be a lawful oath. Arnold v. Middletown, 41 Conn. 206.

3. Best's Prin. of Evid., p. 42; there a full history and description of the character of the oath is given.

4. Such infidels who believe a God that he will punish them if they swear falsely, may be admitted as witnesses. And such infidels (if any such there be) who either do not believe a God, or if they do, do not think he will either reward or punish them in this world or in the next, cannot be witnesses in any case nor under any circumstances . . . because an oath cannot possibly be any tie or obligation upon them. 2 Bouv. Insts., § 3184; Ormichund v. Barker, 1 Willes (Eng.) 545; s. c., 1 Smith's L. C. 194; And. L. Dict., Oath. See also Wakefield v. Ross, 5 Mason (U. S.) L. 9; United States v. Kennedy, 3 McLean (U. S.) 175; Bush v. Com., 80 Ky. 248.

The oath is the means adopted by most civilized nations to ensure the engagement of the witness that he will tell the truth and confirm his testimony; it is an institution established as a precaution against inconstancy or unfaithfulness of man, and to add by the fear of divine punishment to the other assurances which he from whom it is required cannot give or which it would be unjust to ask him. Ormichund v. Barker, 1 Willes (Eng.) 545.

In an oath two things may be observed, viz, an invocation by which we take as witness the God of truth who knows all things; and the imprecation by which we ask Him as just and Almighty to avenge our perjury. This imprecation is either express or implied, used in profane swearing is of the same character as the judicial oath, save that it is unnecessary and irreverent.¹

III. FORM.—The form of the oath varies greatly, according to where and for what purpose it is used; the form is regulated principally by usage, and a slight variance, even where the form is prescribed by law, is not fatal.²

IV. SEVERAL KINDS—1. Judicial.—Oaths which are used in court generally and in judicial proceedings are known as judicial oaths; they embrace principally oaths administered to witnesses. Extrajudicial oaths are those taken without authority of law; and, although binding in foro conscientiae, they do not render a party liable for perjury if violated.³

2. Promissory.—The most prominent example of this character of an oath is the oath of public officers, by which they strengthen their promise faithfully to perform their duties;⁴ under this head

“as you shall answer to God at the great day,” is in the express form, while it is implied in the usual formula, “so help me God.” Bouv. Inst., § 3184.

Bentham, in very forcible language, combats the propriety of this latter part of an oath, saying: “The supposition of its efficacy is absurd in principle. It ascribes to man a power over his Maker; it places the Almighty in the station of a sheriff’s officer; it places Him under the command of every justice of the peace. It supposes Him to stand engaged, no matter how, but absolutely engaged, to inflict on every individual by whom the ceremony, after having been performed, has been profaned, a punishment, no matter what, which, but for the ceremony and the profanation, He would not have inflicted.” He condemns it as impious, and further says: “The power which leaves Omnipotence no alternative is the power which any and every individual in the State, who is rash enough and foolish enough, may exercise at any time and any number of times at pleasure, on so simple a condition as that of getting a justice of the peace to join in the performance of the instantaneous ceremony.” Bentham, 1 Rat. of Jud. Evid., 366–371, note. See also Bouv. Inst., § 3184; Ormichund v. Barker, 1 Atk. (Eng.) 48.

See, for a strong argument in favor of the abandonment of the use of the oath, 29 Alb. L. J. 344; Best’s Prin. of Evid. 43.

Missouri Rev. St., § 1421, making it a misdemeanor to make, under oath, “any false certificate, affidavit or statement of any nature, for any purpose,” provides for an offence distinct from perjury. State v. Boland, 12 Mo. App. 74.

A notary public is an “officer authorized to administer oaths” within the purview of said statute. State v. Boland, 12 Mo. App. 74.

1. For this subject see BLASPHEMY, 2 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law 423–4. See also PROFANITY.

2. Thus where a statute required the official oath to be in the words, “I promise and affirm,” one in the words, “I declare and affirm,” was held sufficient. Bassett v. Den, 17 N. J. L. 432.

Where the oath administered to a surveyor was, “I, J B, do solemnly and sincerely promise and swear (or affirm) that I will, etc.,” and at the bottom “affirmed before me, one of the justices of the county, Samuel Clarke,” it was held that though the oath was exceedingly irregular, yet the superfluous parts might be rejected as surplusage, the remaining part being correct. State v. Shreve, 4 N. J. L. 297. See also Farrar v. Parker, 7 Met. (Mass.) 43.

As to the forms of oath generally, see Best’s Prin. of Ev. 161–5–6; Bouv. Inst., § 3199; 1 Archbold’s Crim. Prac. and Plead. 461–2.

3. 2 Bouv. L. Dict., art. Oath.

Since perjury consists in taking a false judicial oath (Anderson’s L. Dict., Oath) it follows that it is only under this class of oaths that will support the offence of perjury . . . But this idea is not fully entertained. 2 Abb. L. Dict., Perjury. See also PERJURY.

4. 2 Bouv. L. Dict., art. Oath. These are frequently known as official oaths, might be classed the oath of a juror, since he is a quasi public officer. The offence of perjury cannot be founded upon such an oath as is embraced within this class.¹

3. Other Kinds.—There are also other oaths used in particular cases.²

or oaths of office. 2 Abb. L. Dict., art. Oath.

1. 2 Bishop's Crim. Law, § 1026; State v. Dayton, 23 N. J. L. 49; s. c., 53 Am. Dec. 278.

2. Assertory oaths are those required by law other than in judicial proceedings and upon induction to office, e. g., custom-house oaths. 2 Bouv. L. Dict., Oaths. See also 2 Bishop's Crim. Law, § 1023. Such an oath will support perjury.

Corporal Oath.—A corporal oath is one taken by the form of laying the hands on or kissing a copy of the Gospels. 2 Abb. Law Dict., Oath.

Mr. Bouvier, in his Law Dictionary, gives the following additional oaths (except the last one):

Oath Against Bribery.—One which could have been administered to a voter at an election for members of parliament. Abolished in 1854. Whart. Lex.

Oath of Calumny—In Civil Law.—An oath which a plaintiff was obliged to take that he was not actuated by a spirit of chicanery in commencing his action, but that he had bona fide a good cause of action. Pothier Pand., lib. 5, tit. 16, 17, § 124. This oath is somewhat similar to our affidavit of a cause of action. See Dunl. Adm. Pr. 289, 290.

Oath Decisory—In Civil Law.—An oath which one of the parties defers or refers back to the other for the decision of the cause. The decisory oath has been practically adopted in the district court of the United States for the district of Massachusetts; and admiralty causes have been determined in that court by the oath decisory. But the cases in which this oath has been adopted have been where the tender has been accepted; and no case is known to have occurred there in which the oath has been refused and tendered back to the adversary. Dunl. Adm. Pr. 290, 291.

Oath Ex Officio.—The oath by which a clergyman charged with a criminal offence was formally allowed to swear himself to be innocent; also the oath by which the compurgators swore that they believed in his innocence. 3 Black Com. 101, 447; Moz. & W.

Oath in Litem.—An oath which in the civil law was deferred to the complainant as to the value of the thing in dispute, on failure of other proof, particularly when there was a fraud on the part of the defendant and he suppressed proof in his possession. Greenl. Ev., § 348; Tait Ev. 280; 1 Vern. 207; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 229; 1 Me. 27; 1 Yeates (Pa.) 34; 12 Viner Abr. 24.

In general the oath of the party cannot, by the common law, be received to establish his claim, but is admitted in two classes of cases: first, where it has been already proved that the party against whom it was offered has been guilty of some fraud or other tortious or unwarrantable act of intermeddling with the complainant's goods, and no other evidence can be had of the amount of damages. Tayloe v. Riggs, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 591; Riggs v. Tayloe, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 486; Taunton Bank v. Richardson, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 436; Jackson v. Frier, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 193.

Oath Purgatory.—An oath by which one destroys the presumptions which were against him, for he is then said to purge himself, when he removes the suspicions which were against him; as, when a man is in contempt for not attending court as a witness, he may purge himself of the contempt by swearing to a fact which is an ample excuse. 2 Bouv. L. Dict., art. Oath Purgatory.

Oath Suppletory—In Civil and Ecclesiastical Law.—An oath required by the judge from either party in a cause upon half proof already made, which being joined to half proof supplies the evidence required to enable the judge to pass upon the subject. 3 Black. Com. 270. See also And. L. Dict., Oath; New Haven etc. Co. v. Goodwin, 42 Conn. 230.

Test Oath.—An oath of loyalty toward the existing government. And. L. Dict., Test Oath 1026.

In England and France test oaths have been limited to the affirmation of the person's belief or disinterestedness toward the government with no refer-

V. WHEN USED.—There are several cases in which, owing to the importance and effect of the statement made, it is considered necessary in order to more surely secure the truth, or the performance of a promise, to require an oath. For example, witnesses testifying in a case in court are required first to take oath;¹ likewise jurors about to sit, in any case;² public officers about to commence the duties of their office;³ also quasi public officers, e. g., bailiffs appointed to take charge of the jury during a recess in the proceedings;⁴ a party applying for an extraordinary remedy or process, e. g., attachment,⁵ search-warrant,⁶ warrants to apprehend an offender;⁷ where a party intends taking advantage of bankrupt laws;⁸

ence to past conduct. The clause in the constitution of Missouri which requires clergymen, before they may exercise their profession, to take an oath that they have not committed certain designated acts, some of which at the time were innocent in themselves, constituted a bill of attainder and an ex post facto law, and were therefore in violation of the constitution. Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 318; And. L. Dict., Test.

1. 1 Greenleaf on Evid., § 328. See also WITNESSES.

2. JURY AND JURY TRIAL, vol. 12, p. 362. The same is true of grand jurors. See GRAND JURIES, vol. 9, p. 1.

3. It is required by the United States constitution and by all of the State constitutions that the chief executive officer, and generally that all other officers shall, before entering upon the duties of the office, take an oath that they will support the constitution, etc., and faithfully perform the duties of their office. U. S. Const., art. 2, § 1, par. 8; Id., art. 6, § 3; Va. Const. (1869), art. 3, § 5. See also People v. Perry, 79 Cal. 105; People v. Clinton (Cal.), 21 Pac. Rep. 423-426.

The failure of a duly elected revenue commissioner to take the prescribed anti-duelling oath leaves the office vacant, with the right on the part of his predecessor to hold over until some one is legally elected and qualifies. Branham v. Long, 78 Va. 352.

The legal presumption is that public officers exercising their office have been duly sworn. Nelson v. People, 23 N. Y. 293. So also in case of quasi public officers. Dayton v. Johnson, 69 N. Y. 419.

It is held, however, that a police officer appointed under Mass. Gen. Stat., ch. 18, § 38, need not be sworn. Com. v. Cushing, 99 Mass. 592. See also McAlister v. State, 6 Bush (Ky.) 581; PUBLIC OFFICERS.

Proof of Oath of Office.—If the town records state that the selectmen chosen, "being present, took the oath of office by law prescribed," it is sufficient proof of their qualification as such, without stating before whom the oath was taken. Mason v. Thomas, 36 N. H. 302.

A memorandum on the books of the town clerk, that certain persons were "sworn to office" as assessors, signed by the clerk as a justice of the peace, and not as town clerk, is a sufficient certificate of the official oath, according to the requirements of the statutes. Ware v. Bradbury, 3 Sumn. (U. S.) 186. See also Halbeck v. Mayor etc. of N. Y., 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 439; State v. Green, 15 N. J. L. 88.

4. JURY AND JURY TRIAL, vol. 12, p. 371.

5. ATTACHMENT, vol. 1, p. 901; AFFIDAVIT, vol. 1, p. 314.

6. See also SEARCH WARRANTS; U. S. Const., Amd., art. 4. The United States constitution and those of most of the States require that "no warrants (i. e., to search) shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation." See also State v. Mann, 5 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 45; 1 Archbold's Prac. & Plead. 128; 2 Wils. (Eng.) 283; Sanford v. Nichols, 13 Mass. 286.

7. State v. J. H., 1 Tyler 444; 1 Archbold's Cr. Prac. & Plead. 103, in which last authority the statutes of the various States on the subject are collected.

8. See BANKRUPTCY, vol. 2, p. 75, note. As a clerk of the United States courts, it would seem, has no authority to administer oaths out of court (but and in certain pleadings in chancery.¹ A party who is referee in a case, or parties who are commissioners appointed to make partition or admeasurement are usually required to take oath, before proceeding, that they will faithfully perform what is incumbent upon them in that relation, etc.² The same is true of arbitrators.³ And in some of the States it has been held necessary to the validity of an assignment that it should be sworn to by the assignor.⁴

VI. HOW ADMINISTERED OR TAKEN.—The oath is administered to witnesses and jurors, in the open court, by the clerk;⁵ in case of a party applying for an extraordinary process it is administered by the officer who is to issue such process;⁶ in case of public ample authority coram judice), the jurats attached to a petition and schedules of a bankrupt will be taken to have been verified in court, if not proved to be otherwise. Schermerhorn v. Talman, 14 N. Y. 93.

1. Dan. Ch. Prac. 686-688, 785.

2. Baylie's Trial Prac. 263; 330-336; N. Y. Code Civ. Proc., §§ 1550; Cooper on References and Referees 61.

But it is said that the omission of the referee to take the proper oath before proceeding to take testimony in a case where all the parties are of full age and present, in person or by attorney, is at most a mere irregularity and not a jurisdictional defect. Nason v. Luddington, 56 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 172; McGowan v. Newman, 4 Abb. (N. Y.) N. Cas. 80.

And the omission of a referee to be sworn is not, in any case, a ground for setting aside a judgment upon his report. Katt v. Germania Fire Ins. Co., 26 Hun (N. Y.) 429. See also Whalen v. Albany Co., 6 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 278.

3. Abbott's Trial Evid. 466; Browning v. Wheeler, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 258; s. c., 35 Am. Dec. 617. But if a defendant proceeds without them it is considered as a sufficient evidence of a waiver. Day v. Hammond, 57 N. Y. 479; s. c., 15 Am. Rep. 522. See also ARBITRATION, vol. 1, p. 674.

4. Thus in New Hampshire, the assignor is required to make oath "that he has placed and assigned, etc., in the hands of his assignee all his property of every description except such as is by law exempt from attachment and execution, to be divided among all his creditors in proportion to their respective claims." See Flint v. Clinton Co., 12 N. H. 430.

In Massachusetts, under the statute of 1836, the debtor was required to make oath to similar effect; in New Jersey the debtor is required to verify his inventory by oath or affirmation. In Maine, the assignor is required to make oath to the truth of the assignment, likewise in Indiana. Burrill on Assignments (3rd ed.) 248.

5. Usually by requiring them to hold up their right hands while they look upon the Bible he holds; or by placing their hands upon the book or in some cases kissing it. The manner of administering is governed almost entirely by usage. Regina v. Frost, 9 Carr. & P. (Eng.) 129; Bouv. L. Dict., Oath.

A statute which requires an oath to be administered "by the court or judge," is complied with if the oath is administered by the clerk in open court, under the direction of the court, and tested by the clerk. Oaks v. Rodgers, 48 Cal. 197.

Where an act of congress requires an oath to be administered, such oath under the usage of the proper department of government, may be administered by a State officer having authority to administer oaths. United States v. Winchester, 2 McLean (U. S.) 135; United States v. Bailey, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 238.

See generally as to who may administer oaths: United States v. Barton, 1 Gilp. (U. S.) 439; Herman v. Herman, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 555; Sugar v. Davis, 13 Ga. 462.

Where the oath was administered by a deputy clerk of the circuit court in Indiana it was held to be as obligatory as if it had been administered by one of the judges. Servir v. State, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 35.

6. A statutory provision that certain officers may "administer oaths necessary in the performance of their duties," relates to matters filed with or business officers it is by some one appointed by law for the purpose and in a manner prescribed by law or usage.¹ The administering must be reverent and in the form provided for the particular occasion;² and must also be according to the peculiar ceremonies of the religion to which the person sworn adheres.³ In case a party is prevented by his religious convictions from taking an oath, he is allowed, now, simply to "solemnly affirm," and this affirmation has the same legal effect, for all purposes, as an oath.⁴ In general the manner transacted before the officer in which an oath is required, and in reference to which some duty is enjoined upon him. Wheat v. Ragsdale, 27 Ind. 191.

1. The President of the United States has the oath administered to him by the chief justice of the supreme court; in the several States the chief justice of the State court administers the oath to the chief executive. As to oath of office, see PUBLIC OFFICERS.

Under the California Practice act of 1851, ch. 8, § 442, the mayor of San Francisco has no right to administer oaths of office. Payne v. San Francisco, 3 Cal. 122.

2. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. 746.

An oath, administered substantially according to the prescribed form is valid. That the witness did not repeat the words "So help me God," as required by the statute regulating the form of oaths, is immaterial. State v. Mazon, 90 N. Car. 676.

3. The court may enquire of a witness before he is sworn what form of oath he considers as most binding and cause him to be sworn accordingly. See 1 Greenl. on Ev., § 371, and authorities cited; McKinney v. People, 7 Ill. 541; s. c., 43 Am. Dec. 65; Gill v. Caldwell, 1 Ill. 53.

A Jew is sworn on the Pentateuch or on the Old Testament, with his hat on, closing his oath with "so help me Yehovah," instead of "so help me God." 1 Stra. (Eng.) 821; Newman v. Newman, 7 N. J. Eq. 26. A Mohammedan on the Koran. Rex v. Morgan, 1 Leach (Eng.) 54; C. C. Best's Prin. of Ev. 162. A Gentoo, by touching with his hand the foot of a Brahmin or priest of his religion. A Brahmin by touching the hand of another such priest. 1 Wils. (Eng.) 549; Best's Prin. of Ev. 162; Ormichund v. Barker, 1 Atk. (Eng.) 21. A Chinaman by breaking a china saucer. The swearing of a Chinaman is done thus: "On getting into the witness box he knelt down, and a china saucer having been placed in his hand, he struck it against the brass rail in front of the box and broke it. The officer then administered the oath in these words, which were translated into the Chinese language by the interpreter, 'You shall tell the truth and the whole truth; the saucer is cracked, and if you do not tell the truth your soul will be cracked like the saucer.' Reg. v. Entrehman etc., 1 Carr. & M. 248. In another case the saucer was first filled with salt." Best's Prin. of Ev. 162.

But in the case of State v. Chyo Chiagk, 92 Mo. 395, it was held that where the statute required the witness to be sworn according to the peculiar ceremonies of his own religion, and the interpreter states that "the joss-stick burning" is the true oath among the Chinese it is error to compel him to be sworn in any other manner. See also 4 Minor's Insts. (2nd ed.) 697-8; 2 Bouv. L. Dict., art. Oath; 1 Starke's Ev. 21, 22; Best's Prin. of Ev. 162, 165, 166.

In the case of Com. v. Buzzell, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 153, Roman Catholics were directed by the court to be sworn upon the Holy Evangelists, on the ground that those who profess the Catholic faith generally regard this to be the most solemn form of administering the oath.

In the case of United States v. Bailey, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 238, it was held that, where a State officer authorized to administer oaths in his own State administered the oath to a party making a claim against the United States, although the officer was not authorized by act of congress to administer such oaths, yet since it was in conformity with the usages of the treasury department, he was sufficiently authorized in such cases to constitute a false swearing, under such oath, perjury.

4. This is true of the oath of witnesses, of officers and all others. See U. S. Const., art. 2, § 1, par. 8; 1 Greenl. on Ev. (4th ed.), § 371;

in which an oath or affirmation is administered is presumed to be correct unless it appear otherwise by the record.¹

Ormichund v. Barker, 1 Atk. (Eng.) 21, 46; Best's Prin. of Ev. 165, 166.

"Oath," as used in district court act includes affirmation or declaration. 1 L. 1857, 729, ch. 344, § 80 (N. Y.); N. Y. Code Crim. Proc., § 957.

In England it is said that in acts of parliament passed since the end of 1850, "the words 'oath,' 'swear,' and 'affidavit,' shall include affirmation, declaration, affirming and declaring, in the case of persons by law allowed to declare or affirm instead of swearing." §. 4, 13 & 14 Vict., ch. 21; Vf. § 3 Interpret. act 1889.

"Proof made upon oath" (§ 32, Solicitor's act, 1843, 6 & 7 Vict., ch. 73). "I think that admits proof on affidavit, but is not confined to it." Per ESHER, M. R., Osborne v. Milman, 56 L. J., Q. B. 264.
